J. C. NORBY DEAD.

Prominent Citizen of Norman County Passes Away Monday.

Crookston Times: J. C. Norby, of Ada, died Monday evening as the result of an accident which occurred some two weeks ago. Mr. Norby was assisting in loading hogs at his farm near Ada when a plank struck him in the stomach, injuring him internally. For two weeks all that medical science and surgical skill could do was done in a vain attempt to save the sufferer's life, but he died Monday evening. Mr. Norby was one of the most prominent citizens of Norman county. He leaves a wife, three children and a mother to mourn his loss, besides several brothers and sisters. The funeral will probably occur Wednesday.

The deceased was 46 years of age. He was born in Norway, but came to this country when a mere child of 8 or 10 years of age. His parents settled at Decorah, Iowa, where he attended the public schools and the private institute of Breckenridge. Later his family moved to Fillmore county, this state, where he lived until 1882. At that time he removed to Norman county and took up a homestead near Hendrum. In 1886 he was elected clerk of the district court of Norman county. He resigned in 1888 and went to Norway for his health. He was married in 1889 and in 1892 he was elected county auditor of Norman county and removed to Ada. About this time he acquired the ownership of the Norman County Herald, which he owned until 1900, and which he edited until that time. He was auditor one term only. Since then he has been devoting his time to private business affairs, being interested in a couple of flouring mills, a lumber yard and a large farm. He was at the time of his death a member of the state normal board, having been appointed by John Lind. The family are left in comfortable circumstances.

Smallpox Expenses.

A short time ago the supreme court handed down a decision of some importance to communities that have been visited by smallpox and it will apply to other contagious diseases. The syllabus is given below:

City of Mankato, respondent, vs. County of Blue Earth, appellant—The health officer of a municipality is justified in incurring the expense of furnishing medical treatment for the purpose of controlling a contagious disease, when the county physician, whose duty it is, refused to treat the infected person, and such expense may be recovered against the county. The county is liable under chapter 20, law of 1902, for the necessary additional salary paid the local health inspector for extra service in locating and combatting contagious diseases.

The Secret Of Long Life.

Consists in keeping all the main organs of the body in healthy, regular action, and in quickly destroying deadly disease germs. Electric Bitters regulate stomach, liver and kidneys, purify the blood, and give a splendid appetite. They work wonders in curing kidney troubles, female complaints, nervous diseases, constipation, dyspepsia and malaria. Vigorous health and strength always follow their use. Only 50c, guaranteed by W. A. Schreiber, druggists.

Meats Cured.

Persons wishing hams and bacon cured for summer use, or pork salted should call on the undersigned. I guarantee my work. A. Piche, the butcher, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

It's pretty hard to define real beauty. Rare and beautiful women everywhere owe their loveliness to Rocky Mountain Tea. 35 cents. A. L. Reichert.

TO APPRAISE COURT HOUSE.

Beltrami Fathers May Be Disappointed by Governor's Action.

Gov. Van Sant has appointed a commission, consisting of Dr. Watson, of Red Lake Falls; Mayor Hitchcock, of Crookston, and Senator Grindeland, of Warren, to appraise the buildings owned by Beltrami county.

The governor took this action on the request of the board of of county commissioners of Clearwater county, which was recently created and organized by a proclamation issued by the chief executive of the state.

The communication from the county board of Clearwater stated that immediate action was desired, as the commissioners were reliably informed that the county commissioners of Beltrami county were about to sell the old court house and other buildings belonging to the county with the intention of preventing the local health inspector for extra service in locating and combatting contagious diseases.

Advertised Letters.

The following letters remain unclaimed in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls for the week ending Dec. 28:

Josephine Nilson, E. P. Hall, Charles Cyr, Helmar Hanson, Emil Levy, N. M. de Lagasay (2).

The Result of Good Fellowship.

Senator John A. Johnson, in St. Peter Herald: Fifteen years ago Dr. A. A. Ames came near being elected governor of Minnesota because he was "a good fellow." Four years prior to that he had been elected mayor of Minneapolis because he was "a good fellow." Later he lost his practice, had his home broken up and became a financial wreck because he was "a good fellow." Then he left the Democratic party and was elected mayor of Minneapolis by the Republicans, not because he was the best man for the place, but because he was a member of the party and "a good fellow." The governor of the state made him a general on his staff for "good fellowship." During all these years he was a moral degenerate who had no business in the society of decent people. Everybody knew his failings; they knew of his vices. But they had not been legally exposed. Now a broken-down man, with no visible assets but several crops of wild oats, he is a fugitive from justice. Hounded by detectives and officers of the law, the old wreck is in hiding that he may not be tried for his offenses, and none of his fair-weather friends are breaking their necks to get him out of trouble. The governor who made him a general knew him as well then as now, but the action of the grand jury changed the aspect. The whole situation is a satire on our present political system. It proves, too, that true merit and honest worth do not count for much, and proves, too, that dishonesty in politics and the practice of the worst forms of vice are not bad until you get caught in the drag-net of the grand jury. Justice may not be totally blind, but she winks too much.

SCHOOL CONSOLIDATION.

Superintendent Olsen Says Rural Districts Are Too Many.

J. W. Olsen, state superintendent of public instruction will make two important recommendations for legislation in his biennial report to the governor. It is expected that the changes will facilitate the consolidation of rural schools and result in larger and more efficient schools. Mr. Olsen recommends that the contract law, now in operation in New York, be enacted in Minnesota. This permits a school district to suspend the maintenance of a school and contract with another district for the care of its pupils.

He believes that if a district could suspend school and contract with a neighboring district for the instruction of its pupils and the transportation to and from school the consolidation would result in better rural schools.

He also recommends that the territorial limits of school districts be removed and the district boards be authorized to use their discretion, under the supervision of the county superintendent of schools, in arranging for the transportation of pupils to and from school. He believes that in this way the cause of larger and more efficient rural schools will be promoted.

The report will recommend the establishment of a state board of education of five members, representing the state university, the normal schools, the graded and high schools and the rural schools and the state superintendent of public instruction. He points to the fact that 52,626 of the 172,068 school children of Minnesota failed to attend school the sixty days last year, and says the compulsory education laws are practically a dead letter in the rural district. He advocates the appointment of non-resident truant officers.

He would have the state normal schools receive their share of the state apportionment of school funds, which aggregates about $700,000 per year, the same as do school districts on the ground that they are engaged in the same sort of educational work. He also advocates a six or seven week's summer course at normal schools for the benefit of teachers of rural schools.

He would have the minimum age for teachers increased from seventeen to eighteen years. The importance of the library fund, he says, has been overlooked. He would have the appropriation increased from $12,500 to $20,000 per year, as it is now quickly exhausted.

The law, he says, should give county superintendents the power to condemn school houses that are unsanitary or illy ventilated and lighted. County superintendents should receive better salaries and their term of office should be made longer.

Most of them, he says, are conscientious, hard-working men, whose work is not appreciated.

He would have teachers and school officers get better acquainted with school work and the needs of each school. Teachers, he finds avail themselves of the meetings and conventions held to impart this knowledge. He would have school officers paid a reasonable sum for attending a convention of one or two days to discuss the best way of working for the improvement of the schools.

A state inspector should be appointed for rural schools seeking state aid. They would not conflict with the work of the county superintendent, he believes.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

New York Press: The man who wants but little here below suffers no shock of disappointment.

The more a woman suffers for a man the more sacred to her it makes her love for him.

The rankest coward would fight a burglar if he tried to steal the bed clothes on a cold night.

There is something mighty wrong with a 6-foot man whoean't be twisted around a mile in a woman's little finger.

The man who talks about the position he has "accepted" is the one who sat on the front doorstep for six months begging for it.

Calling cards at THE COURIER office.

ON A COMMON BASIS.

County Auditors and Attorneys Meet With the Public Examiner.

County auditors and county attorneys of Minnesota gathered in considerable numbers at St. Paul Tuesday at the request of Public Examiner S. T. Johnson and spent the afternoon discussing methods of county administration. Sessions were held separately.

Public Examiner Johnson addressed both gatherings. He recommended that the fee system be entirely removed from the county offices, and that to county commissioners be paid salaries of not less than $300 yearly. He advised that the commissioners be charged with the first responsibility for all their acts, and for all matters passing through their hands.

Mr. Johnson declared for the four year term for county officers, with the terms overlapping. He would have the treasurer and attorney chosen at one election, and the auditor and sheriff at the alternate one. The register of deeds and the clerk of courts should also alternate. The county attorney should have a contingent fund for investigation and prosecution of cases, and should have the right to hire and pay for additional help in times of emergency. He spoke against the practice of having collections made by various officers, and would have all moneys paid to the county treasury.

The county attorneys have never had an organization, but this morning organized on a permanent basis. A nominating committee of which Judge Nethaway of Stillwater was chairman, submitted the following list of officers, which was adopted: President, George T. Simpson, Wright county; vice presidents, C. S. Murdon, D. A. Stewart, C. L. Hilton, C. E. Elmquist and Albert Pratt; secretary, J. H. McCoy, of Dodge; treasurer, Lyndon A. Smith of Chippewa. President Simpson was authorized to appoint an executive committee of five. Thirty-six county attorneys attended the meeting.

Agriculture in New Places.

The success of the modern farmer in difficult places is one of the wonders of our age. Alaska, for instance, commonly considered a land good for only mining and fishing, is now yielding fairly good returns from cultivation along special lines. Western Montana, formerly a desert land, will produce more bushels of wheat to the acre, when undo irrigation, than Minnesota or Iowa ever thought of yielding. For the same money, a good grain belt beer will do more to make the average man strong and healthy than bread and meat, and the man or woman with weak digestion finds it a tonic of the greatest value. Order of your nearest dealer, or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

New Century Comfort.

Millions are daily finding a world of comfort in Bucklen's Arnica Salve. It kills pain from burns, scalds, cuts bruises conquers ulcers, and fever sores; cures eruptions, salt rheum, boils and felons; removes corns and warts. Best pile cure on earth. Only 25c at W. A. Schreiber's drug store.

Report That Venezuelan Blockade Is to Be Maintained.

ALLIES SAID TO BE AGREED ON THIS.

United States Government, However, Is Likely to Offer Strong Objection to Such a Course—President's Note to Italy.

London, Dec. 29.—A dispatch to the Central News from Rome says it has been semi-officially announced that under special agreements the blockade of the Venezuelan coast by the allies will continue during the arbitration of the issues.

Hope for Early Settlement.

Washington, Dec. 29.—There were no new features to the Venezuelan situation here Sunday. Officials are hopeful that the governments interested will work harmoniously and conscientiously to reach an early and final solution of the trouble. The administration is also that there soon may be an amelioration of the blockade. It is certain this government will use every effort to have the blockade called off pending consideration of the questions at issue by The Hague tribunal, for the double reason that its continuance is always a menace to peace and order and because of the harmful effects on American shipping to Venezuelan ports. Just what the allied governments have determined upon in that regard it is difficult to say, as Secretary Hay uniformly has refused to make public their reservations and demands as a preliminary to arbitration, feeling that such information should come from the governments themselves.

President's Note to Italy.

Rome, Dec. 29.—Ambassador Meyer Saturday presented to the foreign office President Roosevelt's note on the subject of Venezuelan arbitration. The president says that although he is very gratified at the confidence the powers have shown in him by choosing him as arbitrator, which position he would have accepted if there were no other means of solving the question, he thinks it better to submit the case to The Hague tribunal, especially as all the powers concerned are willing.

The president adds that as there is no question of national honor or occasion of territory involved, after thorough consideration and in accord with all the powers concerned, who have shown an honorable spirit of mutual consideration and moderation, he is glad to be informed that they all have agreed to submit the question to The Hague tribunal.

Germany Disappointed.

Berlin, Dec. 29.—The German government is disappointed by President Roosevelt's declination to be arbitrator in the Venezuelan dispute, but in pursuance of his decision will correspond at once with Great Britain and Italy on the subsidiary questions that must now be agreed upon, such as waiving the blockade and the definite form of request whereby Venezuela on one side and Germany, Great Britain and Italy on the other will ask The Hague tribunal to adjudge the dispute. The interchange of views on these and other requirements probably will take place at Washington, where the ambassadors can confer freely with Secretary Hay and obtain through him President Castro's assent to the powers' proposals. The German foreign office considers Washington a convenient place for further negotiation. Foreign Secretary von Richthofen regrets the long delay which is likely to ensue before the final adjustment of the controversy.

Aged Couple Burned to Death.

Odin, Minn., Dec. 29.—Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Phelps, an aged couple living alone, were burned to death in the house which destroyed their home, and were too feeble to get out.

MRS. FREMONT DEAD.

Widow of the Famous "Pathfinder" Succumbs to Pneumonia at Her Los Angeles Home.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 29. — Mrs. Jesse Benton Fremont, widow of Gen. John C. Fremont, died Saturday night of pneumonia at her home in this city at the age of 79 years. She had been in very feeble condition for the last three years, her naturally strong constitution having been broken by a severe accident when she slipped and fell, dislocating her hip bone. Since that time she had been unable to walk alone, and two nurses had been employed most of the time to attend her. It was known that she was failing, but her passing away comes as a shock to her many friends.

Mrs. Fremont had known every president of the United States since Jackson, and was connected by birth and marriage with half the early aristocracy of the country. Few women have had a more eventful life. A daughter of the famous Senator Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, she early became an ornament of society at Washington, which was almost as much her home as St. Louis, where she was born. When only 16 years old she made a love match with the then Lieut. John C. Fremont, afterward famous as the "pathfinder." Although she did not leave the paternal home until eight years afterward her life from that time was bound up in the career of the young engineer, hero of the Mexican war, co-liberator of California and the first presidential candidate of the republican party. During his later western journeys she braved the hardships of frontier life to remain by his side. For many years since the general's death she had lived at Los Angeles, her daughter, Miss Fremont, being her constant companion.

Ten years ago she became a straitened circumstances, and a number of California women started a movement which culminated in the purchase for her of a comfortable home in this city and the granting by congress of a pension of $2,000 yearly.

Frost Nips Orange Grove.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 29.—Friday night was the coldest of the season, the thermometer registering 24 here and 20 in Tampa, where there was a killing frost. It is feared orange trees are killed or badly hurt, as the previous warm weather had kept the sap in the upper limbs. There is considerable fruit yet in the groves in some sections, and it may have been harmed.

Largest Man in Ohio Dead.

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 29.—Gerhard C. Krull, the well-known proprietor of the Lick Run Turner hall and hotel, died suddenly. The largest coffin ever made in Cincinnati will be required for him, as he weighed about 560 pounds.

Asphyxiated.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Mrs. John Mahoney, of Grovesville, Ind., and her son John were asphyxiated by gas at No. 2944 Wentworth avenue. Another member of the family was almost killed.

Woodsman Dies in a Fire.

Menominee, Mich., Dec. 29.—A lumber camp three miles west of Koss on the Wisconsin and Michigan road burned, and John Matheson, a woodsman, lost his life.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

TELLING THEIR TROUBLES TO THE OFFICIAL POLICEMAN.

MURDER IS AVENGED.

South Carolina Mob Hangs a Negro and His Wife.

BODIES ARE RIDDLED WITH BULLETS

They Were Charged with the Murder of a Prominent Citizen—Each Accused the Other of the Crime.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 29.—The first woman to be lynched in South Carolina died with her husband, Oliver Wideman, near Troy, Abbeville county, Friday night. A crowd of friends of William R. Jay, a farmer, committed the deed. Jay, a member of the Masonic, Pythian and Woodmen of the World fraternities, was murdered by one of the mob's victims. The couple occupied a house on Jay's plantation. Friday evening he passed the house and heard fighting and loud quarreling. Mrs. Jay heard her husband call to the couple to cease their disturbance or leave his place. A moment later a gun was fired. She ran to the window and saw Wideman and his wife running from their house. She called her husband, and getting no response, ran out to look for him. Jay's body was found in a pool of blood, his head having been nearly shot away.

The Lynching.

The news spread throughout the township in a few minutes and enraged men soon were scouring the country for the murderer. One party met Wideman and his wife driving in a buggy and arrested them. They were taken back to the Jay plantation. Both confessed that Jay had been shot from their house, and each accused the other of doing the shooting. This they maintained to the last. The negroes were turned over to a constable, who late at night started with his prisoners for Abbeville courthouse. About midnight they were intercepted at a bridge by a mob. The buggies were halted and the prisoners dragged out with ropes around their necks. Their frantic appeals for mercy and the woman's screams were soon silenced. The bodies were drawn off the ground and riddled with bullets. Mr. Jay was worthy master of Stonewall lodge, A. F. & A. M., and grand junior warden in the South Carolina grand lodge.

VICTIMS OF SNOWSLIDE.

Avalanche Sweeps Away Miners' Bunkhouse and Sleeping Men —Loss of Life.

Nelson, B. C., Dec. 29.—A snowslide struck the bunkhouse of the Molly Gibson mine, ten miles from Lake Kootenai, Christmas night, razing the building. It is believed to have killed nine men and injured seven others. The men were in the banks, after holding an impromptu Christmas concert when the snowslide came down, crashing in the roof and walls and sweeping the men down the mountain. They were carried from 200 feet to half a mile from the site of the cabin. One man was found in the snow, writhing in agony. He died a few moments later. Eight men, including two Italians whose names are not known, and the Chinese cook, are unaccounted for. Of the men accounted for Frank Campbell and J. M. McLaughlin has his shoulder dislocated and leg broken, one named Sinclair is slightly hurt and John A. Bell has his forearm broken.

Is Working Well.

Glace Bay, N. S., Dec. 29.—The Marconi station at Glace Bay continues to maintain daily communication with Cornwall, with constantly increasing efficiency and facility. Marconi is still here, but will leave shortly for the Cape Cod station. In the meantime he is sending two or three message by wireless to Europe daily. Some of these dispatches are lengthy. One of the dispatches was directed to ex-Empress Eugenie.

Ovation to Dewey.

Ponce, Porto Rico, Dec. 29.—Admiral Dewey arrived here Saturday evening overland from San Juan and received an ovation. He was warmly greeted by a committee of native officials and citizens, and was escorted by them from Juana Diez to Ponce. The city was decorated in honor of the admiral's arrival, which was followed by a procession with bands of music through the streets.

Over 300 Children Killed.

Victoria, B. C., Dec. 29.—Correspondence received from Yokohama by the steamer Tartar includes details of a horrible tidal wave disaster in Osaka. An elderly woman, a lay merried daughter, husband and two other persons have been arrested for infanticide, and it is learned that since they started operations this year 300 children were killed.

Fire Sweeps a Business Block.

San Pedro, Cal., Dec. 29.—Fire in the center of the business district destroyed about $75,000 worth of property. One-half of the most prominent business block in the city was burned out. B. Swift, a laborer, and N. C. Andinson, a retired capitalist, perished.

Gen. Miles Entertained.

Pekin, Dec. 29.—The ladies of the American legation and Lieut. Gen. Miles and his party were entertained at luncheon Sunday by the dowager empress and emperor. United States Minister Conger also gave a diplomatic dinner in honor of the general.

SCENES OF SPLENDOR.

Magnificent Parade of Officials and Chiefs at the Opening of the Durbar in India.

Delhi, India, Dec. 30.—The viceroy, Lord Curzon, of Kedleston, made his state entry Monday into the capital of the Mogul. This constituted the official opening of the durbar held to celebrate the accession of King Edward as emperor of India.

It was a splendid pageant, probably unparalleled in its magnificence. At the head of the elephant procession rode Lord and Lady Curzon on the state "grand tasker," 12 feet high, the largest elephant in India. Their howdah was decked with gold and silver, and the elephant was almost hidden beneath a gold-worked saddle cloth. Surrounding them were footmen in scarlet and gold liveries bearing massive silver staves.

The route was lined with British and native troops, and crowds of onlookers witnessed the spectacle, which, it is asserted, never has been surpassed in magnificence, even in this country of oriental splendor.

TO HONOR HER MEMORY.

Steps Taken to Establish a Memorial to the Intimate Work of the Late Alice Freeman Palmer.

Boston, Dec. 29.—Representative educators in a conference here Monday decided to invite subscriptions to a fund with which to establish a suitable memorial to the life and work of the late Alice Freeman Palmer, formerly president of Wellesley college, long a member of the Massachusetts state board of education, and formerly advisory dean of the woman's department of Chicago university. A committee of five was appointed to choose the memorial, to arrange for committees in various places to receive and collect funds, and to appoint a committee of business men to act as trustees. President Eliot, of Harvard, is chairman, and Gov. Crane, of Massachusetts; President Tucker, of Dartmouth; Richard Watson Gilder, of the Century, and Mrs. Quincy Adams Shaw, of Boston, are members.

Held to the Grand Jury.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 30.—George W. Meredith, a wealthy liquor distiller at East Liverpool, O., has been bound over here to the United States grand jury in the sum of $4,000 by United States Commissioner Simpson on the charge of making false entries and with rectifying spirits without giving notice to the internal revenue authorities. He is also charged with altering inspection marks, selling liquors under fraudulent brands, shipping them under false trade names and failing to destroy the marks and stamps on empty spirit packages.

Theater Burned.

Athens, Ga., Dec. 30.—The Star theater building, on Decatur street was almost completely destroyed by fire Monday afternoon. A vaudeville company was giving a rehearsal in the theater when started by cries of fire, and the members of the company made a hasty retreat from the burning building in their stage costumes. All of the theatrical company and others who were in the building escaped without injury. The burned building originally cost about $50,000. There was no insurance.

Renunciation Accepted.

Vienna, Dec. 30.—The semi-official Wiener Abend Post says Emperor Francis Joseph has accepted Archduke Leopold Ferdinand's renunciation of his rank, has sanctioned his adoption of a civil name, Woelfling, and has ordered that his name shall be stricken off the lists of the Knights of the Golden Fleece and of the army.

Will Be Cremated.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 30.—In accordance with her wishes, the body of Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont will be cremated. The funeral is to be held to-day from the Episcopal church. Her ashes are to be buried beside the grave of Gen. Fremont, at Piedmont, and thus will be fulfilled one of the chief desires of Mrs. Fremont's last years.

Ice Yacht Regatta.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Dec. 30.—Eastern ice yachts will compete with western boats on a western course for the first time at the International Ice Yachting Regatta, to be held on Gull lake, January 20 to 25, under the auspices of the Kalamazoo Ice Yacht club.

Victim of Heart Failure.

Carlshad, N. M., Dec. 30.—R. W. Tansill, the well-known millionaire cigar manufacturer, died here Monday of heart failure. Mr. Tansill came here for his health several years ago and has been very active in his efforts for the advancement of the territory.

Will Hold No Extra Session.

Havana, Dec. 30.—After a lengthy conference between President Palma, the members of the cabinet and leading men, it has been decided not to call an extra session of the senate to dispose the reciprocity treaty with the United States.

Prince to Come Again.

Berlin, Dec. 30.—The papers here say Prince Henry of Prussia is going to the United States in 1904 to visit the St. Louis exposition and unveil the veterans' monument in Philadelphia.

Will Get More Pay.

Huntington, W. Va., Dec. 30.—The operators of the Flat Top coal field will give their miners an advance of two to 20 per cent, beginning January 1. Twelve thousand men are affected.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured with local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonial free. F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. Sold by all druggists, price 75c. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Diversify Your Farming.

Warren Shaf: What can be done to give the lands in the Red River valley their real value to-day? They are worth from $50 to $60 per acre, basing the value on what they produce. It will not be long before they are selling at these prices. In order to bring this about exclusive wheat raising will have to be abandoned. Live stock will have to be raised. Conditions and soil will have to be studied and experiments made at the state agricultural college taken advantage of, and with such scientific and practical farming results will be attained surprising even those who have the firmest belief in the intrinsic value of these lands.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from strangulation, says A. L. Spafford, postmaster, Chester, Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and relief came. It reduced the swelling and inflammation, cut the mucous and shortly the child was resting easy and speedily recovered. It cures coughs, colds, la grippe, and all throat and lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure lingers in the throat and chest and enables the lungs to breathe pure, health-giving oxygen to the blood. A. L. Reichert.

THE CUBAN TREATY.

Opposition to Ratification Is Being Developed,

FRIENDS OF MEASURE CONCERNED.

Some of the Arguments Advanced by Its Opponents—President Roosevelt Feels Confident That the Treaty Will Be Ratified.

Washington, Dec. 30.—Considerable opposition is developing to the ratification of the Cuban reciprocity treaty now pending in the senate. It is not taking quite the form that the opposition to the Cuban legislation took last spring, but it is sufficient in substance to give concern to the friends of the treaty. From time to time, no opportunity offers, the president is discussing the matter with senators, particularly those who are known to have objected to the enactment of legislation extending tariff concessions to the Cuban republic. Several weeks ago it appeared that the treaty, when presented to the senate, would be ratified without difficulty, but some senators now are taking as strong grounds against the treaty as they took against the legislation proposed at the last session of congress. These senators are of two classes, those who are opposed on principle to any "tariff bargaining" and those who represent states whose products may be affected by the concessions extended to Cuba by the pending treaty.

Senators of the first class might be induced to support the treaty, inasmuch as it does not involve, in their view, an attack on the system of protection, were it not for their apprehension that the ratification of the Cuban treaty may lead to a demand from other countries that they, too, be accorded special tariff concessions by the United States. It has been indicated by the president that in the event of the ratification of the Cuban treaty a demand may be expected from Germany within 30 days for concessions similar to those accorded Cuba.

Germany's Attitude.

The most distinct desire of the German emperor, it is pointed out, is for the extension of the foreign commerce of his empire. He, of course, regards Cuba as a nation foreign to the United States. If tariff concessions are granted to Cuba, Germany, under the most favored nation clause, will request that she be given similar concessions. That request may take the form almost of a demand. If it be not granted, the fear is expressed that Germany may initiate legislation that will be inimical to the industrial development of this country, so far as Germany is concerned, even if it should not curtail American commerce already established in Germany and its possessions. The same argument is applied to other countries. Germany is advanced simply as an example of what may be expected of all of the great foreign nations with which the United States has extensive commercial relations.

Expects Ratification.

The president, it is understood, believes that the pending treaty with Cuba will be ratified. He desires that it should be ratified as promptly as possible, and with as little friction as may be. He sees in the proposed ratification no possible association with the tariff system of this country, and believes that it would be simply the redemption of a promise, direct or implied, made to the Cuban people when they were in the throes of the organization of their government. In this view the president is supported by a large majority of the republican senators. While some trouble is anticipated in effecting the ratification of the treaty, it is believed generally that ratification will not be delayed seriously.

PRESIDENT WOUNDED.

Mr. Roosevelt Receives Cut from a Bogus Boutonniere at Hunting Hunt with Gen. Wood.

Washington, Dec. 30.—A wound received by President Roosevelt in a fencing bout with Major General Wood a day or two ago, though spoken of lightly by the president, turns out to have been a narrow escape from the loss of the left eye. The major of the Wood, who is an expert fencer and who is teaching the president the art, pinstituted the president's mask, inflicting a wound just above the eyebrow. The deviation of an inch would have cost President Roosevelt the sight of that eye.

On a Lecture Tour.

Illinois, N. Y., Dec. 30.—President Jacob Gould Schurman left Tuesday Monday night for an extended western trip. He will visit several of the larger cities and will speak on political and educational topics. The cities where he is already scheduled to speak include Omaha, St. Louis, Chicago and Lincoln, Neb. President Schurman will speak in Lincoln Thursday on "Our Philippine Problem."

Ravages of Cholera.

Manila, Dec. 30.—Morce on the island of Mindanao report that cholera is depopulating the villages on the east side of Lake Lanao. At Madin there is an average of 30 deaths a day. The disease also prevails at Bacolod. It has appeared on all sides of Lake Lanao, but the Visayan natives of the island do not yet seem to have lost confidence.

Summons for Publication.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, COUNTY OF Red Lake, ss.

The State of Minnesota, To Martin Gilbertson, Defendant:

You are hereby summoned to be and appear before the undersigned, Clerk of the District Court of Red Lake county, on the 24th day of January, 1903, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of my office in the village of Red Lake Falls, in said county, to answer to W. F. O'Brien, J. F. O'Brien and J. F. O'Brien, copartners doing business under the firm name of Elwood Land Co., a foreign corporation, in the sum of $250.00 with interest thereon from November 1st, 1902, and the costs and disbursements of this action.

Should you fail to appear at the time and place aforesaid, judgment will be taken against you for the relief demanded in the complaint herein, a copy of which can be duly filed with me.

Given under my hand this 9th day of December, 1902.

A. SWANSON,
Jan 1-15 Justice of the Peace.

Notice of Cancellation of Contract.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT DEFault has occurred, and now exists in the terms and conditions of that certain Contract for Deed hereinafter described, in this, to-wit: A person, executed by Peter Gilbertson, party of the first part, and William Giehler, party of the second part, wherein it is agreed that on the performance of certain conditions and terms therein mentioned, the said party of the first part would convey to said party of the second part real estate situate in Red Lake County, Minnesota, described as follows, to-wit:

Southwest quarter (SW¼) of Section two (2), Township one hundred fifty (150) North, Range forty-two (42), West of the State of Minnesota. Said default consists in this, that said William Giehler has failed and neglected to pay to said Gilbertson the sum of four hundred dollars, which became due and payable on the first day of January, 1902, on the first day of January, 1902.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that because of such default on the part of said William Giehler, the said above described contract will be and is hereby cancelled, and all rights thereunder of said party of the second part, and all persons claiming by, through or under him, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 313 of the General Statutes of Minnesota for 1901.

The Courier.

By JOHN E. HING.

Issued Every Thursday Evening at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

Official Paper of the City and County

$1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

If, as reported, Minnesota is to have 250 new rural routes it is time Red Lake county was put on the postmaster general's map.

THE Albert Lea Standard indulges in this bit of sarcasm: "Anybody would know that Doc Ames is a good Republican candidate. See how he runs."

BEN DUNN denies emphatically that he is a candidate for governor, but his friends keep pushing the boom along and it is likely to gather a lot of strength.

THE Albert Lea Standard wasn't satisfied with one holiday effort. For the past two weeks it has issued a twenty-page edition, with a handsome colored cover.

THE Venezuelean tangle is in a fair way to be unravelled by an international court of arbitration. In an age of civilization it should be preferred rather than war.

CANADA has a billion dollars invested in railroads, and the St. Paul Pioneer Herald boasts that our country has more than that invested in water for our railroad stocks.

THE Kasson Republican remarks that the girl who marries a man to keep some other girl from getting him generally finds that she has done the other girl a favor.

THERE are prospects of senatorial deadlocks in Delaware, Colorado, Kansas, Oregon and Washington. These bi-ennial struggles ought to be an argument for the election of senators by popular vote.

THE Standard Oil company has secured control of the Beaumont fields, and the price of kerosene advanced the same day. The oil trust furnishes abundant excuse for legislation that will prevent monopolization.

THE grand jury of Ramsey county is again after the wine rooms. If this is simply a resurrection of former efforts to suppress the hell holes the grand jury might as well adjourn. Heretofore the indictments have not been followed by vigorous prosecutions.

A WAITER in Harper's Bazar asserts that the "climate of New England is not conducive to matrimony or even love-making." This may be so, but we have observed that a hard-coal fire and a big rocking chair are more essential aids to Don Cupid than all the climate you can pile on a forty-acre lot.

A. N. DARE, of the Elk River Star-News, makes this reflection: "The four per cent gross earnings tax measure was just 8,366 votes shy of a majority of the votes cast. Fifty-four of us couldn't have slashed around getting those votes, instead of trying to elect some ungrateful fellow to a small office."

N. D. BAKER, who for several years has been editor and manager of the Sauk Centre Avalanche, is now connected with the Long Prairie Leader in a similar capacity. Both Baker's are of the most resourceful newspaper men in the state and we shall expect to see the Leader step into first ranks.

COLUMBIA county has been enjoined, and is now obliged to show cause why it should begin business. The supreme court will take up the case without delay, and a decision is expected shortly. As the points at issue are similar to those involved in the Red Lake county case there is every prospect that Columbia will win.

THE young man is again suffering from discrimination in the East. Several street railway companies have issued notices that hereafter no unmarried men will be employed, and that all men seeking employment must be married and at least thirty years of age. Come West, young man, and grow up with the country.

HENRI WATTERSON's researches for a Democratic presidential candidate have not been fruitful of results. He figures Cleveland and Bryan among the impossibles. Dave Hill's aspirations are assumed to be childish, while Johnson and Pattison were left at the quarter-pole by the result of the late election. By the bye, are we to infer that Henri's modesty forbids him naming a distinguished citizen of Louisville?

ACCIDENTS to persons in Minnesota resulting from the movement of trains during the year were: Passengers, 7 killed, 151 injured; trainmen, 34 killed, 316 injured; switchmen and yardmen, 4 killed, 43 injured; trespassers, 71 killed, 93 injured; non-trespassers, 10 killed, 50 injured; total number of people killed by the roads in the state during the year was 139, and 680 injured, as against 120 killed and 846 injured during 1901.

THE lawmakers at Washington are evidently doing their best to prevent the opening of the Red Lake reservation. Of all the freak measures we have ever heard proposed for opening homestead lands, the present bill takes the bakeshop. It is proposed to charge a minimum of $5 per acre, cash in advance, and in addition the purchaser is expected to live on the land five years and surrender his homestead rights.

THE death of Jules C. Norby, of Ada, removes from northwestern Minnesota one of the men who have transformed this country from a wilderness to an agricultural garden. Mr. Norby was a man of sterling worth; his word was as good as his bond; he was industrious and progressive, and Norman county and the Ninth district lose a man whose place will be hard to fill.

WITH the current issue Chas. S. Mitchell announces the sale of the Alexandria Post-News to Ezra E. McCrea of St. Paul. The separation of Mr. Mitchell from the paper he has so long edited, and which he has made one of the foremost in the state, is one of the incidents of country newspaper life that will appeal to every member of the profession. There is a good deal of consolation, however, in Charlie's promise that he will leave neither Minnesota nor country newspaper work.

THE death of Mrs. John C. Fremont a few days ago will recall to the minds of the older people memories of the long ago. In 1856—nearly half a century ago—the distinguished husband of this distinguished woman was the first Republican candidate for the presidency. He was one of the pathfinders of the abolition movement, and a forceful and fearless champion of the black man's cause. Mrs. Fremont was the daughter of Tom Benton, the ambitious and self-willed Missourian who figured conspicuously in the early development of the West.

THE EXAMINER RECOMMENDS.

At the meeting of county auditors held at St. Paul Tuesday Public Examiner Johnson made a number of recommendations that are worthy of consideration by the legislature.

Probably the most important suggestion is the placing of county commissioners on a salary of $300 per annum in lieu of the present per diem and mileage method of compensation. He also proposes that commissioners be required to give bonds, as do the other county officials, and that they be held more strictly responsible for their acts.

The examiner believes all of the county officials should be given four-year terms, and that the terms of the auditor and treasurer should expire in the same year, and that the same rule should be followed with regard to the sheriff and clerk of courts.

The examiner's suggestions in the main are excellent, and might as result in some beneficial legislation looking to the improvement of county government.

A Scientific Discovery

Kodol does for the stomach that which it is unable to do for itself, even when but slightly disordered or over-loaded. Kodol supplies the natural juices of digestion and does the work of the stomach, relaxing the nervous tension, while the inflamed muscles of that organ are allowed to rest and heal. Kodol digests what you eat and enables the stomach and digestive organs to transform all food into rich, red blood. A. L. Reichert.

Consumption

Salt pork is a famous old-fashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs most.

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion that puts new life into the weak parts and has a special action on the diseased lungs.

A sample will be sent free upon request.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

The managers of the Metropolitan have the most reliable information that the Bob and Eva McGinley company is of high merit. Don't miss it, as this is one of the best shows going.

Harry Healy went to Grand Forks Wednesday on a business mission. 'Tis said that he will journey further into the land of the Dakotas than that before he comes back, but the report has not been verified.

Moses Patenaude and Miss Lizzie Supernault were married at the Catholic church in Terrebonne Monday in the presence of a large number of friends. They will live on the groom's farm in Gervais township.

It is rather tough on the young people down in the new county of Columbia county. The clerk of the court isn't ready to issue marriage licenses and the Polk county clerk says he has no right to grant the necessary certificate.

W. T. Mullarky, former auditor of Red Lake county, who is looking after business affairs at Thief River Falls, visited over Christmas with Frank A. Grady and family. Mr. Mullarky expects to return to his home in Arizona next week.

John A. Casey, formerly manager of the Robertson lumber yard, drove over from Crookston Saturday evening to be the guest of Ed Townsend over Sunday. He was accompanied by H. O. Anderson, local agent for the Northwest Lumber company at Crookston.

George Hennings will leave tomorrow for St. Paul, where he will attend the Hess business college during the winter. George is one of Red Lake Falls' best young men, and has hosts of friends who will wish him success in whatever he undertakes.

James E. Ford, Frank A. Grady and James Sutor are at St. Paul this week. Mr. Ford is attending the meeting of county auditors and Mr. Grady the convention of county attorneys. Mr. Sutor is looking after county business in his capacity as chairman of the board of commissioners.

J. L. Johnson, of St. Hilaire, the affable clerk in the store of Rapp & Post, has accepted an offer of the deputy auditorship, and will move his family to Red Lake Falls in the near future. Mr. Johnson is a bright young businessman and will no doubt make a first-class assistant for Auditor Ford.

The annual meeting of the Presbyterian congregation will be held at the home of Frank E. Hunt on Wednesday evening, January 7, at 8 p. m. A movement is on foot to rent the Rea building on Main street in which to hold services, and the proposition will be fully discussed and acted upon at this meeting.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Emardville creamery association will be held January 6. The creamery is represented as being in first-class condition, and a prosperous year is confidently expected. A large number of new patrons will undoubtedly be secured for next season, as the officers have been making a big hustle for business.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan J. Gerlach are called upon to mourn the death of their little son, Raymond, who succumbed to an attack of bronchitis last Saturday evening, after a week's illness. He was a year and ten months of age. The funeral was conducted Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock by Rev. Kern, and interment was made in the Wylie cemetery.

M. O. Sortedahl and wife consider that their Christmas present was one of the finest and most acceptable gifts brought to town. At high noon of Christmas day a son was born to them. THE COURIER congratulates the little fellow, and trusts he will grow to be a good and useful citizen, and a joy and comfort to his parents in the evening of their lives.

Next Tuesday the newly-elected county officials will assume their stations. In Red Lake county there will be but two changes, James E. Ford succeeding Adam Zeh as auditor and N. W. Tarrant displacing J. T. Knight as judge of probate. Red Lake county has an unusually good set of officials, and the addition of Messrs. Ford and Tarrant will by no means bring down the average.

Crookston Times: Hearing was had this morning before Judge Watts in the matter of the judicial ditch between Red Lake and Columbia counties. A new petition will will be drawn up asking for a ditch running through the towns of Johnson and Equality and then turning southwest to Lost river. The ditch as formerly petitioned for ran through these towns and then flowed into the Garnes ditch.

Crookston Times: J. B. LaBree, of Miles City, Mont., is visiting friends and relatives in Crookston and Thief River Falls. Mr. LaBree is in the stock business at Miles City at present and says business is prosperous. Mr. LaBree is Mrs. Nat Campbell's father and will be remembered by the old settlers of this city as the first chief of police of Crookston. He formerly owned the townsite of Thief River Falls.

Harry Healy, P. A. Kaufer, Ed. Garceau, C. A. Kinseth, J. J. Puddon and Geo. McConnell will leave Monday for Rosberg, Oregon, where all of the party but Mr. Garceau will prove up on the stone and timber claims owned by them, which were secured on their former trip. They will be gone about three weeks. Mr. Garceau is merely going on a sight-seeing trip, but it isn't unlikely that he will possess himself of a claim before he returns.

The matrimonial market has been considerably on the move during the joyous Christmas season, and as a result Clerk Pernault has issued the necessary papers to make a quartette of couples happy. The following are the licenses granted: Adelard Hince to Angelina Payment, both of Lambert; Moses Patenaude of Gervais to Lizzie Supernault of Terrebonne; Peter Lefave to Eva Schink, both of Red Lake Falls; Andrew A. Haugen of Goodhue county to Betsy Julia Johnson of Red Lake county.

The farewell dancing party tendered Ed Townsend at the Metropolitan Friday evening by his friends of the sterner sex was a most delightful social event, and fully a hundred of our people were present to enjoy the festivities of the evening. Music was furnished by Prof. Freund's orchestra, one of the best string bands in this part of the state. Luncheon was served at midnight, and the guests returned to their homes with the satisfaction of having been most delightfully entertained.

E. J. LaBree and wife of West Superior, Wis., are visiting relatives in Red Lake Falls. Mr. LaBree is connected with the West Superior Telegram, one of the prominent dailies of northern Wisconsin, and is regarded as a capable newspaper man. Mr. LaBree learned his trade in Red Lake Falls being employed on the Gazette during the Holmes regime, and this is his first visit here since leaving fourteen years ago. Frederick LaBree, also of West Superior, father of E. J., accompanied them.

Life

Renewed. Left Side Badly Affected. Liable to Paralytic Stroke.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Gave Me New Life.

"This is to certify that I have used Dr. Miles' Remedies quite extensively, especially the Restorative Nervine, which has done wonders for me. Six years ago I had nervous prostration and again three years ago, at which time I began taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. I kept taking it for six months and have taken an occasional dose during the last two years. I am practically a well man to-day. My left side was affected to a large degree and I had to have very bad attacks of stomach trouble but since using the Nervine I can eat most anything I want with impunity. I was examined in Omaha by a noted German doctor three years ago. He told me I was liable to a paralytic stroke any moment, that my whole left side was badly affected. That was just before I began taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. To-day I am a well man, attending strictly to my duties as a minister of the Gospel, preaching on an average of five times a week, besides many business meetings, and the multitudinous cares of my work in general. Thanks to Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine I have been gaining in flesh despite the hard work until now I weigh a hundred and ninety-six pounds. I recommend Dr. Miles' Remedies to all the world. Restorative Nervine I consider of those afflicted with nerve, heart or stomach trouble."—Rev. M. D. Myers, Presiding Elder, Free Methodist Church, Correctionville, Ia.

NEW YEAR'S IN THE SOUTH & FIFTY YEARS AGO

By WILLIAM ROSSER COBBS.

THE first day of January at the South 50 years ago presented scenes that would be strange indeed if enacted in this generation.

To the negro slaves as well as to the many white people it was known only as "hiring day."

At every county seat in every slave state it was the yearly custom for people of all degrees to gather, some as spectators, others as actors in the events of the day. By far the greater number collected prompted solely by idle curiosity.

Upon every corner and at every point available in the courthouse square and negro women with great bidlocks of "eggplacks" (a sort of fried apple pie), and cakes, sugarcod and persimmon beer which they offered for sale.

During the day men engaged in tests of agility and strength, which ended not in frequently in a free for all fight in which fists only were used and after which no arrests were made, in those New Year's days the "runaways," as they were called, did a land office business. Whisky was plentiful and cheap, and the prejudice against drunkenness was by no means so general then as now.

The final point of interest, however, was the hiring out of negroes for the ensuing year. Now and then anyone were offered for public sale, but that practice was not so common then as in the earlier part of the century.

Planters neither hired out their slaves, nor did they employ those of other people. But those belonging to minor children and widows, as well as many who were "chattels" of residents of the towns and villages were commonly "hired out," especially if they had been taught trades, or were good cooks or house servants. Many town residents pastured slaves beyond their home needs, and these were "hired out" to others who might require their services.

The contract lasted for the calendar year only. It must be renewed annually, if desired by the contracting parties.

Much misconception obtains as to the disagreeableness and shame of this practice. Masters had a direct pecuniary interest in their slaves, and it was to their interest to see to it that these secured humane employers. As far as it was possible, each slave was permitted to choose the person for whom he would work. Some there were who remained with the same employers year by year for many years.

Those that were good servants had no difficulty in choosing desirable employers. Very frequently the master left the contract entirely in the hands of the slave.

After all, though, there were those who were unknown and many more who were practically worthless, and these were "hired out" at auction to the highest bidder. This, also, was commonly the practice as to "cornfield niggers" and unskilled laborers generally, of both sexes.

There were pathetic scenes now and then when negroes were sold at public auction on New Year's day. Very rarely it chanced that at such times members of the same family were sold to masters widely separated.

It should appeal to the common sense of any man that slaves being valuable holdings, their owners would neither treat them cruelly nor permit them to be abused by others. Owners of valuable horses universally are kind to them, and horses are not human.

In this Southern New Year's day, too, there was to settle long due debts, to pay notes and to rent farm lands. Taken altogether, it was a busy, busy day, full of its comedies as well as its dramas, sad, sometimes, tragedies.

At such times the slaves of the plantations enjoyed their annual two weeks' vacation and these crowded the villages to buy all manner of gimcrackery—cheap jewelry, ribbons and laces, and, having a sweet tooth, cheap candies as well. Any well-ordered slave could make "overtime" money, and it was a very sorry one, indeed, who had not a few dollars at the New Year, to throw away in folly upon a wife or a sweetheart.

The "white trash" gathered then solely with a view to looking on and to picking up what they could. As they were despised by both the well-to-do whites and the negroes of all degrees, they usually kept to themselves. They neither hired nor were hired, but in some manner contrived to secure their full half share of whisky.

Like the old "general muster" day of the ante-bellum days, the 'ole' de wah' New Year has passed away with all its scenes and shiftings, yet the memory of it remains with the older residents as a reminder that one day at least, and that the initial one, of the Southland, was one of potential energy and signally characteristic in its incidents of the age and times.

Had the Same Effect.

"I hear that Jack's fiancee has made him give a New Year's promise to stop smoking."

"That so? Well, mine has not said a word about giving up the weed, but our engagement has just the same effect."

"How so?"

"Every time I call all the cigars in my vest pocket manage to get crushed, and, of course, I don't smoke them!"—Baltimore Herald.

Plans for the New Year.

Nan may vow to strive anew
To win the condescension more
Of that which scorns Nature to
Than he has ever gained before.

His wife applauds him and sets down
Considering how will show
A few new dozens to the town
That hubby gets his reference to go.

Economy of Labor.

"He is one of the most resourceful men I ever knew."

"Why do you say so?"

THE COAL SHORTAGE.

Railroad Men Say Efforts Are Made to Relieve It.

THE SITUATION IS VERY SERIOUS.

Officials of the Roads Deny Participation In Movement to Increase Price—200,000 Tons Ordered from Abroad.

Carbondale, Ill., Dec. 30.—Every effort was made Monday by the coal operators and railroad officials of southern Illinois to send coal to the markets where the supply is limited. In the southern Illinois fields the mines are working only half of the time owing to a scarcity of cars. This scarcity of cars is due, it is said, to the retention of coal cars in St. Louis and Chicago by coal dealers who refuse to unload their coal. Railroad officials disclaim any concerted movement to increase the price, and say that every effort is being made to relieve the present shortage. A belief is becoming prevalent to the effect that no great supply of coal will be turned out by the mines until after the annual meeting of the operators and miners. The mining scale for the coming year will be adjusted at the coming meeting.

Coal from Abroad.

London, Dec. 30.—It is sold on good authority in Liverpool that contracts have been made for 200,000 tons of coal for shipment from English, Scotch and Welsh ports to eastern ports of the United States. The purchase of coal and the engagement of ships, it is added, have been going on for a fortnight, and are expected to continue for several weeks. Forty steamers have already been chartered. The same authority says the coal purchases are the result of an unexpected hitch in the coal strike arbitration in the United States."

Doing Their Best.

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.—It was announced at the office of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron company Monday that for the first time in several weeks the 31 collieries of the company in the anthracite region are working to their utmost capacity.

Railroads Short of Coal.

New York, Dec. 30.—The coal stringency in New England has become so acute that a curtailment of train schedules on railroads in that section in the near future appears to be almost inevitable.

Will Demand Increase.

Springfield, Ill., Dec. 30.—W. D. Ryan, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of Illinois, in a statement issued today says the miners of the United States will make a demand for a material increase in wages at the national convention at Indianapolis on January 19. Mr. Ryan says that the operators are receiving a larger price for coal than ever before, and they cannot make the excuse that the mines are not paying expenses. Mr. Ryan says that the convention will produce figures to show the total cost of mining a ton of coal and give the public an idea of the profit being reaped by the operators. Mr. Ryan will attend the convention, and no doubt lead the fight for higher wages.

Received Named.

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 30.—Lloyd Lowndes, Jr., and Robert H. Henderson have been appointed receivers for the Maryland Paper company, which operated a large plant here. The company was recently acquired by a Rhode Island syndicate. It is alleged that insufficient capital caused the failure. No statement of assets and liabilities is obtainable.

Roosevelt's Picture.

Washington, Dec. 30.—A new oil painting of President Roosevelt now decorates the private dining-room at the white house. It is life size and shows the president in his rough riders' uniform. He stands in an easy position, leaning on his hat in his hand.

Frozen to Death.

Calumet, Mich., Dec. 30.—There was one fatality in the blizzard throughout northern Michigan on Christmas day. The body of Mrs. Ida Parkkinen, 50 years of age, was to-day found frozen stiff.

Fatal Infatuation.

Washington, Ga., Dec. 30.—Chick Harris, a married man aged 36, shot and slightly wounded Atlie Edmonds, a girl of 18 years, and then killed himself. He was infatuated with Miss Edmonds.

New Battleship Maine.

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.—The new battleship Maine was placed in commission at the League Island navy yard Monday. She was turned over to Capt. Lenker, who will command her.

Six Perish by Fire.

London, Dec. 30.—In a fourth of a fire in a small house in Stepney Monday, Mrs. Schlesinger and her five young children were burned to death.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

IT is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

BOUQUETS FOR THE CHRISTMAS COURIER

EXCELS PREVIOUS EFFORTS.

Windom Reporter: There is only one John King in the country newspaper business, and he ought to be known as the Christmas King of Red Lake Falls. Christmas without John King and his Christmas newspaper would be to the newspapers of this state like Christmas without a Sunday school effort to the children, for John always publishes a Christmas number. This year he excels all former numbers and gives Red Lake county a magnificent showing to the world. His Christmas Courier is full of illustrations—Fine half tone engravings—showing the resources of the county, its streams, dams, bridges and "bumps on legs," and if those young ladies don't put a "bump" on John's ear they will play "hell-en-blazes with him in some other way—nevertheless the loss show a portion of Red Lake county's resources, by no means the least, while part of the "bumps" are making resourceful citizens for the future. God bless the bumps.

A TRANSFORMATION.

Olberg Journal: The Illustrated Christmas number of the Red Lake County Courier, reflect great credit on the entire office force from the devil to editor-in-chief. It is an encyclopedia of information concerning the magnificent Lake county, A copy of which every man in the state of Minnesota should possess. It shows in pictures and words what has been accomplished in a few years, in a district not long ago termed a wilderness, now rivaling with its older communities in progress and prosperity, and still only in its infancy. This number of the Courier contains twenty-eight pages, including two colored covers. Its pages filled with interesting articles concerning Red Lake county's leading businessestablishments. The advertising department is second to none both in style and finish. We congratulate the Courier upon its success attained in the gigantic work undertaken and so successfully accomplished.

A RARE TREAT.

Heron Lake Times: Those among our exchanges that have put out Christmas editions of more than usual brilliancy and workmanship from a typographical standpoint is the Lakefield Herald and Red Lake Falls Courier. To Brother King's old friends in this part of the state his edition will be no surprise, for Johnny when here was looked upon as one of the brightest and most enterprising newspaper men in this part of the state, barring his politics, but to those people in Red Lake county who have had to put up with the old fossilized papers of that part of the state it must be a rare treat.

DOES NOTHING BUT IMPROVE.

Fergus Falls Weekly: John E. King, the editor of the Red Lake Falls Courier, has outdone himself on his Christmas issue this year—a big 28 page paper, crowded with advertising, and a large amount of first-class reading matter. The Courier has done nothing but improve under Mr. King's management, but the current issue overtops any previous efforts of his to set forth the beauties and advantages of Red Lake Falls, and to give advertisers "value received" for their money. A handsome cover sets off the beauty of the edition.

SPOKE'S VOLUMES.

Alexandria Post-News: The Christmas number of the Red Lake Falls Courier was more than that title expresses. It was really a boom edition and a magnificent advertisement for that section of the state. The newspaper sees in such a special number not only the labor, expense and enterprise of the editor, the prosperity, growth and development of the country, but a newspaper equipment and force that of itself speaks volumes for what but a few years ago was the pioneer field of Minnesota.

ONE OF THE HANDSOMEST.

Rock Rapids (Iowa) Review: John King issued one of the handsomest Christmas number of any we have seen this year. Bro. King seems to have struck a gem of a place for the newspaper business at Red Lake Falls, Minn. And its not only special editions that show the enterprise of that place; its every week in the year with the Courier. Well, John deserves good fortune. He has worked for it. May it continue to make his abode its abiding place.

CAUSE FOR GENERAL JUBILATION.

Mapleton Enterprise: If there is any town in the state that has reason to feel proud of its newspapers and what they are doing for the development of Red Lake county it is Red Lake Falls. The Courier and Gazette each issued handsome numbers, filled from cover to cover with live matter relative to that growing country. John King and Phil Kaufer are hustling newspaper men and the Enterprise doffs its hat to their enterprise.

A CREDITABLE EDITION.

Pipestone Star: The Red Lake Falls Courier sends a special Holiday edition to our table this week. It is three or four times the usual size, comes in a plain cover and is altogether, a creditable edition. The publisher of the Courier is John King, formerly editor of the Adrian Democrat. King is making the Courier what he made the Democrat, one of the best newspapers in his section of the state.

A REVELATION.

Currie Courir: John King's Red Lake Falls holiday Courier is at hand and it is a revelation in newspaper work. It contains 28 pages of all home print and carries 95 columns of display advertising together with nearly as many columns of descriptive reading matter. Its has cost Red Lake Falls considerable money to achieve such a newspaper success, but it is worth thousands of dollars to the county. We congratulate John on the edition and also Sam. S. Haislet on his mechanical work.

A WORK OF ART.

Worthington Advocate: John E. King, editor of the Red Lake Falls Courier, with his ability and usual enterprise issued a most handsome Christmas edition filled with interesting reading matter regarding the advantages of that city and surrounding territory. The edition was a work of art and beauty. The advertising patronage demonstrates that Bro. King's work is appreciated by the business men of that thriving town.

A SPLENDID PIECE OF WORK.

Adrian Democrat: The Christmas number of the Red Lake County Courier, John E. King's paper, is a bummer. Twenty-eight pages are filled with well written special articles, excellent display ads and beautiful illustrations. The least that can be said of the production is that it is a splendid piece of work.

A HUMMER.

Warren Sheaf: The Red Lake County Courier also issued a hummer of a Christmas edition, consisting of 28 pages, including a handsome colored cover. To get out a paper of that kind requires a lot of work and a great deal of printing material, and we trust Bro. King will be well repaid, and his efforts appreciated. The Courier advertisements look very neat.

A CARLOAD OF INFORMATION.

Pelan Advocate: The Red Lake County Courier comes to our exchange table this week in the form of a handsome illustrated 28 page Christmas edition. It contains a carload of valuable information about Red Lake County and page after page of bright attractive ads. As a whole it is a great credit to the publishers and to the business men of Red Lake Falls.

STRICTLY UP TO DATE.

Goodhue Enterprise: The illustrated holiday number of the Red Lake County Courier, by John E. King, is one of the most up to date things of this kind we have ever seen issued from a country print shop. A town like Red Lake Falls is to be congratulated for having an office that can turn out such a number.

ABOUT THE BEST EVER.

St. Peter Herald: The holiday number of the Red Lake Falls Courier is about the best of its kind ever printed in this state. John King the editor has reason to feel proud of it and the people of Red Lake have cause to feel proud of John King the able editor of the paper.

A SPLENDID PRODUCTION.

Willmar Tribune: "The Christmas Courier" of Red Lake Falls was a splendid production. Twenty-eight pages of nicely illustrated matter relative to the bustling community of which the Courier is a creditable exponent. We cogratulate you, Bro. King.

DOES NOTHING POORLY.

Warren Register: The Red Lake County Courier came out last week in holiday attire. Bro. King never does anything poorly and it is unnecessary to add that his Christmas number was an excellent one in every respect.

A WORK OF ART.

Beltrami Graphic: The illustrated holiday number of the Red Lake County Courier came to our exchange table last week and is really a work of art as well as advertising their own town and county to an advantage.

THEY ARE, BRO. COBB.

Park Rapids Enterprise: Red Lake Falls people ought to be proud of such newspaper enterprise and ability as John King demonstrated in the thirty page Christmas number of the Courier issued last week.

ALWAYS AT THE FRONT.

Wilmont Initiator: John E. King has shown his skill in newspaperdom by getting out a very showy Christmas number. John is always at the front in his line of business.

Finds Way to Live Long.

The startling announcement of a Discovery that will surely lengthen life is made by editor O. H. Downey, of Churubusco; find "I wish to state," he writes, "that Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption is the most infallible remedy that I have ever known for coughs, colds and grip." It's invaluable to people with weak lungs. Having this wonderful medicine so one need dread pneumonia or consumption. Its relief is instant and cure certain. W. A. Schreiter guarantees every 50c and $1.00 bottle and gives trial bottles free.

School closed last week in district No. 8 until the first of April. By that time we hope to see the school house completed.

Sall Bros. recovered their drilling tools last week at a depth of 100 feet. It was no small undertaking, and the boys are to be congratulated.

Ask Louis Sall what he thinks of the noble red man. It seems to be a trick of his to donate a half dollar every time he meets one of them. Who will the laugh be on next time?

Some one is starting the ball rolling for township officers. 'Tis well to start early and avoid the rush. One little kick of yours may save a dozen by and by. But look out—it may be a homerang.

S. A. Swanson and brother were down last week on a wolf hunt. Wolves seem to be plentiful, but I guess the boys did not have their usual luck in getting some old scalter out with a shotgun and dog.

Christmas tree exercises were held at the home of J. E. Buskirk, followed by an oyster supper on Christmas eve. It was one of those delightful neighborhood events that will always leave a pleasant memory.

R. S. Hamilton, of Morristown Ind., has succeeded Mr. Brooks as operator at the Great Northern depot. For the past year Mr. Hamilton has been in the employ of the Vandalia at North Manchester, Ind., the old home of TIM COURIER editor, and we have enjoyed several chats with him regarding mutual friends and acquaintances.

Ed Townsend expects to leave Saturday for Minneapolis, where he will make his headquarters in the future. Mr. Townsend will be connected with a lumber commission firm, and will represent the house on the road. Ed is one of the best young men in Red Lake Falls, and probably no one has more friends to wish him success in his new venture.

The postal authorities have advised the local office that in the near future the mail will be brought over the Northern Pacific. Before the change is made the government must advertise for bids for carrying the mail between the depot and post-office, so it is not until then that a new schedule will be effective before Feb. 1. This arrangement will be most satisfactor, as Twin city mail will arrive four hours earlier, and depart two hours later.

Forymond Smalley, who has been working on Matt Skala's farm this past year, died early Saturday morning of an apoplectic affection. On Friday morning Mr. Smalley started for town, but had not gone far when he was overcome and was found lying unconscious on the road by the McNerthy boys a few hours later. The sick man was taken to the Skala home and Dr. Lemieux summoned. At first he seemed to rally, but in the night passed peacefully sorrow and died before the doctor could reach his bedside. Mr. Smalley was a single man, 42 years of age, and came from St. Paul, where he had relatives. The funeral occurred Monday from St. Mary's.

A Use for Crusts.

The Columbia restaurant, managers and scene-setters, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, had been wondering what to do with the crusts of breads that are left out every time the 1,000 prisoners sit down to a meal. They finally decided to cut the crust off all bread and make the crust into bread pudding. Since this instrument has been worked its way through the prison the piles of left-over crusts are daily increasing.

World Growing Very Small.

The British cable between Canada and Australia has been completed, and Colonel Gisborne has will soon open regular communication through the air between Nova Scotia and England. So the world grows smaller, in effect, and this brotherhood of the natives is brought nearer by every step. Science's wheels pools have seen N. in their dreams.

A Butterfly Farm.

Near Scarborough a farm exists for rearing moths and butterflies. Eggs of rare and fine kinds are plentiful with trees and shrubs for the purpose. In 1901 the number of eggs supplied was 20,000. From 30,000 to 40,000 preserved insects are kept in reserve, so that butterflies and moths can be supplied irrespective of the time of year.

Heads Should Never Ache.

Never endure such trouble. We assure the remedy that stopped it for Mrs. N. A. Webster, of Winnie, Tex., she writes "Dr. King's New Life Pills entirely cured me of sick headaches I had suffered from for two years." Cure headache, constipation, biliousness. 25c at W. A. Schrang store.

Many Hunchbacks in the World.

Spain has the most hunchbacks of any country. In one small village at the foot of the Sierra Morena there to one in every thirteen inhabitants. France, in the neighborhood of the Loire, has a great many people suffering from deformed shoulders. It has been reckoned that there are a million hunchbacks in the world at present.

"About two months ago" writes L. J. Seddon, Ashland, Wis., "I was struck on the elbow by a bolt in a high speeded planer, causing of the point of bone and severely lacerating the muscle. I kept the wound dressed with Cole's Carbolsalve and in two weeks it was healed as sound as ever." Cole's is a guaranteed cure for wounds, sores and burns. Leave no scar. 25 and 50c. Sold by all druggists.

English Village Sold Cheap.

A Yorkshire village has been sold at Stockton for the sum of £1,810, which seems cheap enough for such a desirable site. The auctioneer remarked to be able to refer to "my village up in Yorkshire" was above worth the money, apart from the substantial consideration of a farmhouse and buildings and sixteen acres of pond land, two dwelling houses, four cottages, several small gardens and a blacksmith's shop.

Grant's Horse and Cattle Food.

Sentiment of Socotor.

As edge must at one, a measure together there's work of greetings, must be spoken and then come to you. Ah, dear, we was most to blame, I'm sure, I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if he needs, giving him support.—HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Girls: If you wish to know the disposition of the man you would marry, observe his treatment of his horse. The man will not be good to his wife who allows his horse to suffer from cuts, galls or sores when he can quickly cure them without scars by using Cole's Veterinary Carbolsalve. Guaranteed. 50c and $1.00. Sold by all druggists.

West Might Have Been.

Colonial Secretary Chamberlain's effort on the part of the government of Great Britain to favorably consider the representation of Canada in one or the other of the two houses of the imperial parliament apparently is revolting to the colonial press. The Mid Kingland made such a proposition to the original American states, what a change would have been effected in the colonial history of America.

Has Attraction for Dogs.

A building stretched across Hagar, near his home in West New York, N. J., and the savage brute sank its teeth in his arm. Hagar grabbed the dog by the tail and dashed out its brains against a telephone pole. This was the fourth dog that had attacked him within a month, and all of them he served in the same way.

How He Might Be Identified.

An amusing story is being told in Paris of a surregnat coal merchant of that city, who was found intoxicated in the streets. Asked who he was, he said he didn't know, "but go and ask the coal merchant in the Rue des Boulets. If he's at home, I don't know who I am, if he's out, it's me."

Getting Rid of the Cause.

Doctor (finding patient sampling a bottle of whisky)—Here, here, my man, that will never do. That's the cause of all the trouble. Facetious Patient—Well, then, fill your glass, doctor. Now we're found the cause, the sooner we get rid of it the better. —Glasgow Evening Times.

No Use as Fuel.

"As to the suggestion that the country's stock of untold novels be used for fuel in this emergency," observed Mr. Naggus, literary editor of the Daily Screech, "all I have to say is that the idea is ridiculous. They will not burn. Most of them are too rotten."—Chicago Tribune.

The Future of Coal.

Apropos of Lord Kelvin's assertion that in 400 years the coal of the world will be used up M. Carnot, chief engineer of the Northern Railway of France, says that in ten years, between petroleum and alcohol, coal mining will not pay.

A Building for the Smiths.

Representatives of the Smith family have applied for space for a building at the World's Fair at St. Louis, to be the headquarters of the members of that great family when visiting the exposition. Some genius has calculated that there are 14,000,000 Smiths in the world.

A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An eminent authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. This paralyzes the digestive juices. Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. Thus cures all the wholesome results. Kodol contains most natural digestants in the strongest form. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fulness and bloating from which most people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

COUNTY BOARD GETS DOWN TO BUSINESS

Bonds of County Officials Approved, and Printing Contract Awarded to the "Combine."

The board of county commissioners met at the court house Tuesday for the regular January session. Louis Falardeau, the new member from the fifth district, was sworn in and the board organized by re-electing James Sutor as chairman.

The first business was approving the bond of James E. Ford as county auditor, and that gentleman at once assumed the duties of his office. The bonds of all the other officers, excepting those of coroner and court commissioner, were also approved.

The contract for the county printing for the year was let to the St. Hilaire Spectator, the bid of that paper being as follows:

For the delinquent tax list, 6 cents per description; for the financial statement, commissioners' proceedings and other notices, 30 cents per folio for the first insertion, and 14 cents per folio for each subsequent insertion. On the basis of the amount of printing done last year this service will cost between $1,200 and $1,400.

THE COURIER'S bid for the same work was $300, but the independent and "hew-to-the-line" policy of this paper has failed to win the approbation of certain members of the board, and THE COURIER'S bid was rejected by a vote of 2 to 3.

PROMENADE CONCERT.

Unique Program to Be Rendered by Red Lake Falls Band.

The Red Lake Falls band, under the leadership of Prof. Clint O. Smith, will give its regular monthly concert at the Metropolitan opera house Friday evening, January 23. We are informed by Manager Berthon that the program will be exceptionally fine, and that some of the features are decidedly novel. The program includes dancing and musical numbers. For instance the first number will be an overture, followed by a waltz, and alternating thus throughout the evening. Honorary members with their ladies will be admitted free, and the band wishes to take this opportunity to thank the business men and citizens generally for their liberal patronage.

BIG INCREASE IN POSTAL RECEIPTS

Business at Post Office Grows Fifteen Per Cent During the Past Year.

The increase of business at the Red Lake Falls post office during the past six years, shows a most satisfactory growth of the town and county during this period. During this time the receipts have very nearly been tripled, and in the past year the increase has been nearly 15 per cent. The gross receipts from 1897 to 1902 are shown as follows:

1898	1,538.24
1899	1,772.63
1900	2,107.20
1901	2,338.47
1902	2,695.45

The money order business for the year 1902 is as follows:

EXAMINER JOHNSON TALKS TO COUNTY DADS

Outlines a Number of Needed Reforms for Transaction of Public Affairs.

Public Examiner S. T. Johnson made an official visit to Red Lake Falls Tuesday for the purpose of laying before the county commissioners information concerning his investigations of the drainage work in Red Lake and other counties of northwestern Minnesota.

Mr. Johnson addressed the commissioners for fully an hour, and although much of his talk was in executive session, the preliminary remarks were sufficient to imbue his hearers with the idea that the earnest endeavors of the examiner's force would be directed toward securing for the taxpayers of Red Lake county an honest and business-like administration of public affairs, and that any official tolerating the loose and irregular methods heretofore in vogue would be held responsible for the neglect to properly safeguard the county's interests. Under the rules for official procedure laid down by Examiner Johnson there will be no possibility of farther scandal with regard to the drainage work or the purchase of supplies.

Under a resolution which Mr. Johnson asked the commissioners to adopt all claims against the county must hy filed with the auditor at least eight days before the meeting at which they are to be audited. At least seven days before the meeting these bills must be referred to the county attorney for investigation as to the legality of the charges and as to verification and certification. By this method it will manifestly be impossible to allow a bill without proper review and scrutiny, and the "grafter" might as well go out of business or move to a more congenial clime. A similar resolution was sent to the auditor's office last summer, with the request that it be adopted, but it was never presented to the board.

Mr. Johnson's recommendations covered a wide scope, and if followed are sure to affect a great saving and prevent farther "untangling alliances" with vultures whose eyes were riveted on the county's cash hok. Mr. Johnson has a right to expect the support and co-operation of those who have been entrusted with the guardianship of public affairs. That he will have it, is devoutly hoped and believed. Red Lake county is no longer on the frontier; it has developed to that point where it is entitled to take rank among the well-governed counties of the state. It is worthy of clean, honest and economical government, and the taxpayers have a right to expect a release from the burden of excessive taxation. If they do not get it, it will be no fault of the present court house officials, for no county in the state has officers of greater ability or higher integrity.

A Creditable Production.

Alboin, Ind., Democrat: One of the finest Christmas editions that has reached our exchange table this year is that of the Red Lake County Courier, published by our friend, John E. King, of Red Lake Falls, Minn. It consisted of thirty pages and is filled with live and interesting reading matter and finely displayed ads. It is a credit to the office in which it was produced. Mr. King is a former devil of the Democrat office.

MRS. MARSHALL RE-APPOINTED.

Present Incumbent Given Another Term as Postmistress.

Tuesday's dailies announce the re-appointment of Mrs. Emma F. Marshall as postmistress at Red Lake Falls. A. P. Toupin, the Red Lake county manager of Halvor Steenerson's campaign, was also a candidate for the place, and by the notion of the president in re-appointing Mrs. Marshall an interesting precedent is established. Her first term expires in May, and the question of succession hinged entirely on the point whether or not it was within the province of Congressman Eddy to name a postmaster for a term beginning after his congressional career is ended. Mr. Toupin, of course, had the endorsement and cordial support of Congressman-elect Steenerson, while Mrs. Marshall's cause was championed by Congressman Eddy.

At any rate, Red Lake Falls has an up-to-date postoffice, and the public is given prompt and efficient service. THE COURIER congratulates the victor and condoles with the vanquished. It is too bad both couldn't win, but politics is a fickle goddess. She bestows many loaves, but with each somewhere else is given a stone.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK FOR CASTRO

Revolutionists Win Another Battle and Are Close to Caracas, Where General Panic Prevails.

THE FALL OF THE CITY IS IMMINENT.

Position of the Venezuelan President Is Critical—The National Treasury Is Empty, and a New Administration Now Under All Peace Plans Thus Far Under Way.

New York, Jan. 6.—According to the Herald's correspondent in Willemstad the revolutionists are advancing in three columns on Gen Castro's army.

A desperate fight occurred Saturday night within eight miles of the city of Caracas resulting favorably to the revolutionists. They are cutting all the telegraph lines, tearing up the railroad tracks and are hourly expected in the immediate neighborhood of the city. A condition of extreme panic prevails among those who have heretofore believed that Castro was invincible.

Awaits Decisive Battle.

A committee of the most prominent citizens has gone to President Castro and made representations of how hopelessly untenable is his position. But he insists on holding on until his forces are defeated in a decisive battle. It seems that this cannot be far distant.

President Castro is already planning what he shall do when the inevitable comes, but he will make a desperate fight before quitting, as he has no chance to escape. The only alternative is imprisonment.

The correspondent adds that no attempt is now being made by the allies to conceal the fact that they are affording assistance to the revolutionists.

Position Is Critical.

Washington, Jan. 6.—A telegram in cipher received by Secretary Hay Sunday from Herbert W. Bowen, the United States minister at Caracas, contained the disturbing information that a new crisis had arisen in Venezuela which may threaten the success of the agreement of all parties concerned to refer the claims of Great Britain, Germany and Italy to The Hague court of arbitration.

Minister Bowen reports that through the development of unexpected strength on the part of the Venezuelan revolutionists the situation of President Castro's government has become extremely critical. The national treasury is empty, which means that Castro is without pecuniary resources to continue the stand he has made so successfully against the forces of his internal enemies, who are apparently well supplied with arms and ammunition and are wherewithal to carry on their struggle.

May Be Overthrown.

The inference is that Castro may be compelled to abandon the reins of government, a change in the control of the republic might bring about a resumption of the dangerous conditions which prevailed when the coercive measures of the allies were begun.

A new national administration at Caracas may mean the undoing of all that has been accomplished toward peace between Venezuela and the powers. Should Castro be overthrown his triumphant successors may repudiate all that has been done by him to bring about a settlement of the international questions.

Delay Means Danger.

Naturally the administration in Washington is concerned over the news sent by Bowen to the effect that the United States to get European war vessels out of Venezuelan waters. President Roosevelt and Secretary Hay will immediately proceed to the exchanges of diplomacy to secure a quick consummation of the understanding that the Venezuelan ports shall be referred to The Hague tribunal.

Wealthy Mad Dies.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 5.—George A. Lowe, a prominent banker and business man of this city, died at his home here, aged 67 years. He was a fortune estimated at $1,000,000 acquired chiefly in the implement business.

SHE IS NOT GUILTY.

Antoinette Dunlap, Charged with Poisoning Her Chum at Aledo, Ill., Given Her Freedom.

Aledo, Ill., Jan. 6.—The jury in the case of Antoinette Dunlap, charged with poisoning Miss Allie Dool, declared Miss Dunlap not guilty. On the first ballot they stood nine for acquittal and three for conviction. When the next ballot was taken there were four for conviction, and then the sentiment turned in her favor, and on the seventh ballot all were in favor of acquittal. Lack of motive was the strong point in bringing over the three men who at first voted for a verdict of guilty.

The case is one of the most interesting in the criminal annals of Illinois. On the night of August 7 Miss Dunlap purchased some chocolates and shared them with Allie Dool, her closest friend. Miss Dool was immediately taken ill and died shortly afterward in great agony. In her dying statements she practically accused Miss Dunlap of poisoning her. At the preliminary hearing Miss Dunlap was dismissed, but subsequently the grand jury indicted her and she remained in jail three months pending the trial which has just concluded and which occupied five weeks.

HIS SECOND TERM.

Gov. La Follette Takes Oath of Office and Once More Becomes Chief Executive of Wisconsin.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 6.—Gov. La Follette was inaugurated for his second term as governor of the state of Wisconsin at exactly 12 o'clock Monday. The ceremony took place in the assembly chamber of the state capitol, which was packed to its utmost capacity, fully 1,200 people being present, while 600 more stood outside the corridors. The oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Cassoday, of the supreme court. The governor was introduced by R. M. Bashford, of this city, and was conducted to the speaker's stand, where the oath was administered by ex-Gov. Peck, of Milwaukee.

Following the governor the new state officers were sworn in here and each took the seat occupied by the former incumbents of the respective offices. After the ceremony Mrs. La Follette held an informal reception in the executive offices, ex-Gov. Peck presiding.

Cross the Border.

Washington, Jan. 6.—The treasury has received word from Inspector Watchorn, on the Mexican border, that 200 indigent Syrians recently arrived at Vera Cruz from Marseilles, France, and were making their way into the United States. Seven have appeared at the border, four of them afflicted with trachoma, a contagious eye disease. Steps will be taken to stop this and all Syrians taken on the border will be deported from New Orleans.

Tobacco Crop Suffered.

New York, Jan. 6.—The tobacco crop of the Connecticut valley, especially that grown in the open air, is not coming from the sheds in a satisfactory condition, according to the Times' Hartford correspondent, and the prices which are being paid rule considerably lower than the growers were expecting. The cold and damp weather of last summer was not favorable to growing the best quality of leaf.

Death of Judge Lore.

Bozeman, Mont., Jan. 6.—Judge Llewellyn Augustus Lore, one of the oldest and best-known lawyers in Montana, is dead at his home in this city. In 1894 Judge Lore was a member of the Montana supreme court and was also a member of the constitutional convention in 1889. He was born in Maine in 1837.

A Serious Question.

Boston, Jan. 6.—Massachusetts cities generally inaugurated city governments Monday, including a socialist mayor at Brockton. In nearly all cases the providing of adequate school accommodations for children was referred to as a most serious question.

Garibaldi's Daughter Dies.

Rome, Jan. 6.—Teresita, the daughter of Garibaldi, and wife of Gen. Canzio, the Italian patriot, died suddenly at Caprera. She accompanied Garibaldi in all his campaigns.

ASKS FOR GOLD BASIS.

The Philippine Commission Urges Congress to Give the Islands a Stable Currency, WANTS BANKS OF ISSUE ESTABLISHED.

Admission of Limited Number of Chinese Skilled Laborers Is Recommended—Insurrection Is Dead and People Are Enjoying Civil Government.

Washington, Dec. 6.—The Philippine commission in its annual report made public here urges congress to establish a gold standard in the islands at once and to authorize the establishment of banks empowered to issue circulating notes.

The commission's report is accompanied by a separate report by Gov. Taft, who reviews the results accomplished by the civil administration of the islands during the fiscal year 1902.

Recommendations.

The report of the commission concludes with the following recommendations:

The establishment of a gold standard in the islands, and of banking corporations empowered to issue circulating bank notes under proper safeguards.

The reduction of at least 75 per cent of the Dingley rates of duty upon goods imported into the United States from the Philippines.

An amendment of the Philippine act so that the limit upon lands which may be sold or be held by individuals or corporations from the public domain shall be increased to 25,000 acres, or in the alternative so that the government shall be given the power to lease for 50 years upon competitive bidding tracts from the public land aggregating in any individual or corporate lessee not more than 30,000. It says this legislation is necessary to the development of the islands, and that as the government owns 65,000,000 out of 90,000,000 acres in the archipelago, there is no danger of concentration of ownership in individuals or corporations.

Chinese Labor Needed.

That an amendment be made to the Chinese exclusion act giving power to the government by law to admit a fixed and limited number of Chinamen into the Philippine islands, who are certified to be skilled laborers, on the bond of the employer that for every Chinese skilled laborer employed he will employ a Filipino apprentice, and that he will return the Chinese skilled laborer thus introduced within five years after his admission to the country.

Insurrection Over.

Referring to conditions in the islands the commission reports says:

"The insurrection as an organized attempt to subvert the authority of the United States in those islands is entirely at an end, and the whole of the Christian Filipino population, with the exception of only a few thousand people in the Moro country in isolated towns, are enjoying civil government. Much remains to be done in perfecting civil government, in establishing the forces of the law against the lawlessness and disturbances, and in teaching the people of the Philippines not only that they have rights under the law, but also that they cannot hope to enjoy such rights unless they acquire courage and independence sufficient to assert and maintain them against their fellow Filipinos to perpetuate the system of caciquism, or, liberally translated, 'bossism.'"

American Soldiers.

Since the civil government was completely established in the Philippine islands throughout the archipelago in July of last year, the governor says, no American soldier has not been called on once to fire a gun, the territory having been policed by the constabulary, a force of 6,000 men.

Gov. Taft says the figures show that for the two years ended in 1902, the imports, exclusive of quartermaster's stores, of all goods, were $41,000,000, while the exports were about $27,000,000.

Going to Switzerland.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Dr. David Jayne Hill, first assistant secretary of state, will relinquish that post this month to become United States minister to Switzerland. He will be succeeded as first assistant by Francis B. Loomis, at present United States minister to Portugal. Mr. Loomis will be succeeded at Lisbon by Charles Page Bryan.

Horses and Boy Burned.

Dallas, Tex., Jan. 5.—J. H. Williams, a stable boy, and 23 horses were burned to death in the fire at the plant of "Hughes Bros.' Extract company. A warehouse was consumed, with its contents of 500 barrels of sugar, ginger, chemicals, machinery and manufactured goods. Loss, $50,000; insurance, about half that sum.

A Bishop Bereaved.

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 6.—Mrs. Elizabeth Farley Ninde, widow of Bishop William X. Ninde, of the M. E. church, died at her residence here from acute bronchitis after an illness of only 46 hours. Four children survive. Mrs. Ninde was born in Fulton, N. Y. She was married to Bishop Ninde in 1867.

Ready to Abdicate.

Madrid, Jan. 6.—A special dispatch from Tangier says the sultan of Morocco is disposed to abdicate in favor of his brother, Mulai Mohammed, who is acclaimed wherever he appears in the streets of Fez.

PACKERS HIT HARD.

Missouri Commissioner Says That They Combined to Fix Prices and Charter May Be Lost.

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 5.—L. H. Kinley, the special commissioner appointed by the Missouri supreme court to take evidence in the quo warranto proceedings brought by Attorney General Crow against the "packers' trust," reported to the court that the Chicago packers were guilty of conspiring to fix and maintain prices. He held the big Chicago firms, Swift, Armour, Cudahy, and Hammond Packing company directly responsible; declared that they had knowledge and directed the actions of the agents who entered into agreement and violated the anti-trust laws of Missouri. If the supreme court affirms the recommendation of the commissioner, the packers will be driven from Missouri and their rights to do business in Kansas City, St. Joseph and St. Louis—three of the great live stock packing and shipping towns in the west—forfeited.

FLOOD IN WASHINGTON.

Between Seattle and Tacoma Water Is Six to Eight Feet Deep and Rescuing Parties Are Drowned.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 6.—The flood situation in the district south of Seattle does not seem to be greatly improved. The first casualties as a result of the rising of the waters are reported from O'Brien on the Northern Pacific between Seattle and Tacoma. There the water is six or eight feet high and it was rushing past the houses with the swiftness of a mountain current. Martin Cummings and F. Shaughnessy were rescuing people from second-story windows when their boat capsized and both were drowned.

Eager to Retire.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Justice George Shiras, of the supreme court of the United States, referring to his contemplated retirement from the bench, denied that he had been requested by President Roosevelt to defer such action for a year in order to benefit Gov. Taft to complete the work he has in hand in the Philippines. Such a statement, he said, had no foundation in fact. Just when he would leave the bench he declined to say.

Will Investigate.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Senator McLaurin, of Mississippi, Monday conferred with Postmaster General Payne on the situation at Indianola, Miss., where the post office has been closed as a result of opposition to the negro postmaster. Subsequently Senator McLaurin stated that he believed the office would be reopened this week. Mr. Payne said that the office will be reopened if there is no intimidation of the postmaster.

Refuse Their Request.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—Committees of passengers and freight conductors and brakemen have been informed by the officials of all western railroads that it would be impossible to grant the increase in wages. The committees were informed, however, that the companies were willing to meet the employes to discuss the request.

Under Arrest.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 6.—A man who gives his name as Jim Borden has been arrested at Eddyville, suspected of being one of the men who robbed P. Sullivan of $1,800 near Bellefont, Iowa, in May last. Another who was wounded by Sullivan is still alive, but his condition is critical.

Indians Go to Prison.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 6.—United States' Marshal Shoup has arrived at Nanaimo, B. C., with three Alaska Indians, sentenced to four years' imprisonment in the United States penitentiary on McNeil's island for causing the death of Indian Isaac, who they said was a witch.

Work of Toy Pistols.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 6.—Thirteen persons dead and seriously injured, such is the record made by the use of toy pistols in this city and vicinity since Christmas day. This list of fatalities has caused action to be taken by the municipal authorities.

Montana Legislature.

Helena, Mont, Jan. 6.—The republican of the house of the Montana legislature organized the same for the first time in ten years. Former Speaker H. Whitlock Dillon was chosen for speaker. The democrats organized the senate.

Spent $18,000,000.

New York, Jan. 6.—Twelve million dollars is the sum expended by the Association of Commerce of Christian association in 1902 for its work. The membership list has overtopped 800,000 and the number of associations exceeds 1,600.

Presented Sir Thomas.

Plainfield, N. J., Jan. 6.—Maj. Gen. Eli Long died at his home here. He was a brigadier general of Gens. Sherman and Rosecrans in the civil war. He was wounded six times in leading charges and twice brevetted.

Swears In.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Jan. 6.—Gov. De Forest Richards and the other state officers were sworn in Monday and an inaugural ball was held at night in the capitol.

Frozen to Death.

Ottumwa, Ia., Jan. 6.—A. A. Seifert, a prominent business man of Eddyville, was found in the rear of his residence frozen to death. He had been ill.

A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An eminent authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. Thus rest and the wholesome tonics Kodol contains need restoring. Dieting unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fulness and bloating—from which some people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

THE WRECK OF THE SPARKWELL ON THE WHIRLWIND SHOAL

FRANK CARLETON

(COPYRIGHT, 1896.)

CHAPTER 8.

On the 25th of May, 1887, I sat alone upon the deck of the Sparkwell, a three-masted schooner, built, according to a description in the cabin, at Sachpee, Me. I was not only alone on the deck, but I was alone on the ship. The Sparkwell was a "derelict;" that is, if a vessel with a man on board of her can be said to be totally abandoned.

I had now been on board the schooner for eight days. How long before that she had been drifting about at the mercy of the winds and currents I did not then know, but I discovered afterward that during a copious early in April she had been abandoned by her entire crew, and had since been reported five times to the hydrographic office of the Navy Department in Washington and her positions and probable courses duly marked on the pilot charts.

She had now become one of that little fleet abandoned at sea for one cause or another and floating about this way and that as the wild winds blew or the ocean currents ran. Voyaging without purpose, as if manned by the spirits of ignorant fandamen, sometimes backward and forward over comparatively small ocean spaces, and sometimes drifting for many months and over thousands of miles, these derelicts form at night and in fog one of the dangers most to be feared by those who sail upon the sea.

As I said before, I came on board the abandoned Sparkwell on the 17th of May and very glad indeed was I to get my feet again on solid planking. Three days previously the small steamer Theseus, from Havana to New York, on which I had been a passenger, had been burned at sea and all on board had left her in the boats.

What became of the other boats I do not know, but the one in which I found myself in company with five other men, all Cuban cigar-makers, was nearly swept by a heavy wave during the second night we were out, and we were all thrown into the sea. As none of the Cubans could swim they were all lost, but I succeeded in reaching the boat which had righted itself, though half full of water.

There was nothing in the boat but two oars which had not slipped out of their rowlocks, a leather scoop which had been tied to a thwart, and the above mentioned water.

Before morning I had nearly baled out the boat, and fortunate it was for me that I did up to this time of the usual wet, bad enough to eat and drink, for otherwise I should not have had strength for that work and what followed.

Not long after daybreak I sighted the Sparkwell, and immediately began to make such signals as I could. The vessel appeared to be but a few miles distant and I could not determine whether she was approaching me or going away from me. I could see no sign that my signals had been noticed and began frantically to row towards her. After a quarter of an hour of violent exertion I did not appear to be much nearer to her, but, observing her more closely, I could see, even with my landsman's eyes, that something was the matter with her. Portions of her mast and rigging were gone and one large sail at her stern appeared to be fluttering in the wind.

But it mattered not to me what had happened to her, she was a ship afloat and I was much too. Tired, hungry and thirsty, I rowed and rowed, but it was not until long after noon that I reached her. She must have been much further from me than I had supposed.

With a great deal of trouble I managed to clamber on board, and found the ship deserted. I had suspected that this would be the case, for as I had drawn near I would have seen some sign that any approach was noticed had there been any body on board to receive it. But I found food and water, and when I was no longer hungry or thirsty I found myself in a berth and slept until the sun was high the next day.

I had now been on this derelict vessel for eight days. Why she had been deserted and left to her fate I was not reasonable enough to know. In the two that her mate and rigging were in a decent condition, but she did not appear to be leaking, and rode well upon the sea. There was plenty of food and water on board and comfortable accommodations. I afterwards learned that during the terrible cyclone which had overtaken her she had been on her beam ends for an hour before the crew left her; in the

For the first day or two of my sojourn on the Sparkwell I was as happy as a man could be under the circumstances. I thought myself to be perfectly safe and believed it could not be long before I would be picked up. Of course I did not know my latitude and longitude, but I felt sure that the part of the Atlantic in which I was must be frequently crossed by steamers and other vessels. About the fourth day I began to feel uneasy. I had seen but three sails, and these had taken no notice of the signal which I had hung as high in the mizzen-mast as I had dared to climb. It was indeed no wonder that the signal had attracted no attention among the fluttering shreds of sail and rope.

I believe that one ship must have approached quite near to me. I had been below some time looking over the books in the captain's room, and when I came on deck I saw the stern of the ship, perhaps a mile or two distant, and sailing away. Of course my shouts and wavings were of no avail. She had probably recognized the derelict Sparkwell and had made a note of her present position order to report it in the hydrographic office.

The weather had been fair for the most part of the time, the sea moderate. Amenth, and when the wind was strong the great sail on the mizzen-mast, which remained hoisted and which I had lightened up a little, acted after the manner of the long end of a weathervane and kept the ship's head to the sea.

Thus it will be seen that I was not in bad plight, but although I appreciated this I grew more and more troubled and uneasy. For several days I had not seen a sail, and I knew that the Sparkwell was already entered upon the list of derelicts I should have been reported.

At first I hung out a lantern as night signal, but on the second night it was broken by the wind and I could find only one other in good condition. The ship's lights must have been blown away in the storm together with her boats and much of her rigging. I would not long cut the only lantern left me, for fear it should come to grief and that I should be left in the dark at night in that great vessel. Had I known that I was on a vessel which had been regularly relegated to the ranks of the forsaken I should better have appreciated the importance of allowing passing vessels to see that there was life on board the Sparkwell, and, therefore, in all probability a life.

A fifth clear day had passed I had become more and more disheartened. It seemed to me that I was in a part of the great ocean avoided by vessels of every kind, that I was not in the track of any thing going anywhere. Every day there seemed to be less and less wind, and what I had been of was a mere joke the Sparkwell was greatly rising and falling on a smooth sea in a dead calm. Hour after hour I swept the horizon with the captain's glass, but only once did I see any thing to encourage me. This was when a speck like a long line of black smoke against the distant sky, which might have been left by a passing steamer, but, were this the case, I never saw the steamer.

Happily there were plenty of provisions on board of a plain kind. I found spirits and wine, and even medicines, and in the captain's room there were pipes, tobacco and some books.

This comparative comfort gave me a new and strange kind of despair. I began to fear that I might become contented to live out my life alone in the midst of this lonely ocean. In that case, what sort of a man should I be?

It was about half-past eight by the captain's chronometer when I came on deck on the morning of the 25th of May. I had become a late riser, for what was the good of rising early when there was nothing to rise for? I had scarcely raised my eyes above the rail of the ship when, to my utter amazement, I perceived a vessel not a mile away. The sight was so unexpected and the surprise was so great that my heart almost stopped beating as I stood and gazed at her.

She was a cruising-sized iron steamer and lay upon the sea in a peculiar fashion. Her head, which was lower than her stern, the latter elevated so much that I could see part of the blades of her motionless propeller. She presented the appearance of a ship which was just about to plunge bow foremost, into the depths of the ocean, or which had just risen from beneath them.

With the exception of her position and the fact that no smoke was issuing visible, she seemed, to my eyes, to be in good condition. She had evidently been in collision with something, and her forward compartments had filled. Deserted by her crew, she had become a derelict, and, drifting about in her desolation, had fallen in with another derelict as desolate as herself. The fact that I was on board the Sparkwell did not, in my eyes, make that vessel any the less forsaken and forlorn.

The coming of this steamer gave me no comfort. Two derelicts, in their saddening effects upon the spirits, would be twice as bad as one, and, more than that, there was danger about a storm arise that they would dash into each other and both go to the bottom. Despairing as I had become, I did not want to go to the bottom.

As I gazed upon the steamer I could see that she was gradually approaching me. There was a little breeze this morning, and so much of her hull stood out of the water that, in sought a good deal of the wind. The Sparkwell, on the contrary, was but little affected by the breeze, for apart from the fact that the great sail kept her head always to the wind, she was heavily laden with liquor and molasses and sat deep in the water. The other was not coming directly towards me, but would probably pass at a considerable distance. I did not at all desire that she should come near the Sparkwell.

Suddenly my heart gave a jump. I could distinctly see the figure of a man on the steamer the flutter of something white. It was waved. Somebody must be waving it.

Hitherto I had not thought of the spyglass, for with my naked eyes I could see all that I cared to see of the vessel, but now I dashed below to get it. When

I TOOK THINGS EASY.

I brought it to bear upon the steamer I saw plainly that the white object was waved by a man, and that some one else was a woman. I could see above the rail the upper part of her body, her arm covered hood, her uplifted arm wildly waving.

Presently the waving ceased and then the thought suddenly struck me that, receiving no response, she had in due spair given up signaling. Cursing my stupidity I pulled my handkerchief from my pocket and climbing a little way into the rigging I began to wave it madly. Almost instantly her waving recommenced. I soon stopped signaling and sat down to look at the news I was needed. I sprang to the deck and took up the glass.

The woman was gone, but in a few moments she reappeared armed with a glass. This action filled me with amazement. Could it be possible that the woman was alone on the steamer and that there was no one else to signal and to look out? The thing was inconceivable, and yet, if there were men on board, why did they not show themselves? And why did not one of them wave the signal and use the glass?

The steamer was steadily but very slowly nearing the Sparkwell when the woman removed the glass and stood motionless with one of her hands on the rail. She appeared to be looking at me. I was fancied I could almost discern her features. She was not old; she was well-shaped; her bluish-gray dress fitted her closely. Dashing the rail with one hand she stood up very erect, which must have been somewhat difficult, considering the inclination of the deck. For a moment I fancied I had seen or known some one whose habit it was to stand up very, erect as this woman stood upon the steamer. The notion was banished as absurd.

Wondering what I should do, when the steamer should be near enough, I put down my glass, and as I did so the woman immediately took up hers. Her object was plain enough; she wanted to observe me, which she could not well do unless I put down the glass was obstructed by the glass and my outstretched arms. I was sure that I had seen some gesture in her that opportunately and for some moments I stood and faced her, waving my hat in the air.

I was wild with excitement. What should I do? What should I not? There were no boats on the Sparkwell, and what had become of the one in which I reached her I did not know. Thinking of nothing but getting on board the vessel, I had forgotten to make the boat fast, and when I went to look for it a day or two afterward it was gone. As for the steamer, however, I saw a boat hanging from davits near the stern. There was hope in that.

But there might be no need for a boat. Under the influence of the gentle breeze, the steamer was steadily drawing nearer and nearer. Perhaps they might shy to touch each other. But this idea was very disagreeable, for I could see that the wind would carry the steamer past me. Although, perhaps, as no great distance. They my hopes sprang back to the boat hanging from her davits.

Her vessel's engine-room could take shape the woman and her glass died and disappeared from the rail of the steamer. In about a minute she reappeared, and, putting down the glass, she stood trumpet to her mouth. It was possible that a high, shrill voice might have been heard from one vessel to the other, but it was plain enough that this was a woman who was speaking. I, however, must be prepared to hail as well as to be hailed. So I seemed a moment ing trumpet from the captain's room and stood up at my post.

Across the water came the unmeaning "Ahoy!" and back I shouted "Hallo!"

Then came these words, as clear and distinct as any I ever heard in my life: "Are you Mr. Randolph Spencer?"

How many of your good resolutions are still intact?

It is not reported that school is any cooler because of the coal famine.

R. H. MERRIGAN has succeeded Harry Sanders as publisher of the Roseau Region.

THE century is not so young as it used to be. Already two per cent of it has joined "the years beyond the flood."

MARK HANNA unwittingly tells the truth once in a while. He says the fellows booming him for the presidency are "unmitigated chumps."

ANYWAY the "combine" is not called upon to pay a bonus for having the delinquent tax list swelled, and perhaps they can afford to print it for less money.

THE action of the board in accepting a bid for the county printing three times as high as another bid for the same work is not a particularly hopeful sign to the friends of economical county government.

THE wisecare of the Hallock News says that "your ordinary free-trade or low tariff expert is the man who will tell you it is a mere fallacy to prefer facts to ideas." What about the man who contends that the tariff schedule is so sacred that we can't even remove the duty on hard coal?

L. W. BABCOCK, alleged to be the Great Northern candidate, was elected speaker of the lower house of the legislature Tuesday. It is freely predicted that the senate, also, is friendly to the railroad interests, so it would appear that the arguments of the Republican campaign orators last fall were largely claptrap.

THE newspaper combine has been hired to do the official printing at one-half of the legal rate. This is a saving of about $1,500 to the taxpayers, but as THE COURIER offered to do the same work for $900, the commissioners had a chance to save another $1,000. However, as THE COURIER advocates economy and official integrity a majority of the board members do not believe in encouraging such sentiments.

IT is said that some of the people of Crookston, especially those opposed to the Ralph prosecution, are several criticizing Public Examiner Johnson for divulging information to the Minneapolis Journal in advance of the trial. For the benefit of these people it might be well to state that Mr. Johnson is in possession of a letter from the Journal which completely exonerates his department from the unjust charge. The Journal's information was secured from outside sources entirely.

WHILE here Tuesday Public Examiner Johnson called the attention of the county commissioners to the fact that the salary of County Attorney Grady was miserably small when the amount of work devolving upon that official is taken into consideration. During the present year the special work to be asked of him by the examiner will require a cash outlay of $400, besides several months of hard labor. In recognition of the good work Mr. Grady is doing the board should see that he is fairly compensated.

THE COUNTY PRINTING.

In the closing days of the late campaign the editor of THE COURIER promised that under certain conditions, which were within the power of the voters to fulfill, he would offer to do the county printing for the year 1903 at a flat price of $900. Heretofore the county has paid approximately $3,000 annually for this work, since the newspapers of the county were organized into a combination to prevent competition, and each shared alike in the ill-gotten gains.

The voters of the county fulfilled their part of the contract handsomely, and on Monday THE COURIER presented to the county board a bid for the county printing in accordance with the pledge the editor gave to the people last November. The "combination," which included all of the other newspapers of the county, bid for the same work at about one-half of legal rates, which, assuming that the amount of printing would be as large as in 1902, would mean a cost to the tax-payers of from $1,200 to $1,400." The contract was let to the "combine," the vote of the board being 3 to 2 in favor of a bid more than three times as high as THE COURIER'S proposition. As the people of the county, and especially those whose taxes are already burdensome, may be informed as to the disposition of the present board to reward personal and political favorites at the expense of the taxpayers, we give the vote in detail:

For the "combination"—James Sator, W. C. L. Demann, Ole J. Johnson.

For THE COURIER—Louis Hanson, Louis Balardeau.

As a matter of fact the relative merits of the bids were not considered by the three members voting for the combination, as a pre-arranged understanding was had to the effect that THE COURIER'S bid must be rejected at all hazards, even though this paper should offer to do the work for nothing.

THE COURIER is not complaining. It would probably have lost money in doing the work at the price named in the bid, but as the publisher was prepared to give bond in any reasonable amount to guarantee execution of the contract, it is up to the commissioners to explain their action. Certainly there can be no defense from the standpoints of justice and economy.

The Fire Insurance Combine.

Willmar Tribune: From over the state come complaints of the extortionate rates levied by the fire insurance trust. It will be remembered that a short time ago the rates in the business districts were raised. The same course was apparently followed in most if not all of the smaller cities and villages of the state. The losses by fire in Willmar were unusually heavy last year, and many supposed that this was the reason for the action. But the premiums collected in Willmar that year exceeded the loss by $3,650.69. That is the smallest gain in premiums over losses that the trust has made as far back as we have any record. To get at anything like a fair ratio of losses and premiums it is necessary to take a period extending over several years. During the six years 1896 to 1901 the insurance companies collected in premiums here $54,313.14, and paid out in losses $23,449.61 leaving an excess of premiums of $30,863.53. There was certainly nothing in the showing to warrant the raise.

In the cities of Albert Lea, Northfield, Fairmont, and Willmar and the village of Preston the excess of premiums over losses during the six year period was $211,160.89.

A heavy levy that on the business men of these cities, and that too without a single dollar in any of them. Is it any wonder that business men are growing restless? Either the insurance companies are robbing the business men in the smaller towns to keep down rates in the larger cities, or they are robbing everywhere. In either case it is time to put a stop to it some way. The Preston Times suggests the following way out of the difficulty:

"Let the smaller towns and cities of the state take the matter up, by appointing a capable business man from each. Let these men meet and devise ways and means for forming a mutual company, confining its business to the smaller places, and there can be no question but that our insurance will be reduced at least fifty per cent. The insurance trust in the most complete and exacting of all trusts and must be curbed. Let it be done quickly and so effectually that we shall no more be subjected to its grinding tyranny."

It seems to us that this is the easiest and most sensible way to settle this question. Co-operation is the order of the day, and it is strange that the business men have not already taken steps to apply that principle to this important item in their expense account. Mutual fire insurance companies have worked splendidly among farmers. There is no reason why such a company should not be a good thing for the business men. By leaving out the big cities the risks would be materially reduced. Most of the smaller cities and larger villages have efficient means for fighting fire, thus giving assurance against any general conflagration.

The losses by fire in the cities under consideration above amounted during the period named to about thirty-four per cent of the premiums paid. Allowing sixteen per cent more for running expenses, the rates could be cut down fifty per cent from those charged by the trust companies. The subject is worthy the earnest thoughts of every business man, and we hope to see them take it up for discussion. The papers throughout the state can do efficient work for their patrons by bringing the subject before them. Publicity may even force the trust to become more reasonable.

Received Certificate.

Crookston Times: Halvor Steenerson received a very pleasing New Year's gift from Gov. Van Sant in the form of a certificate of election entitling him to a seat in the next congress. Mr. Steenerson said that he had heard before that he was elected, but this was the first official notice that he had received, and as near as he could guess the hoosr had become a reality and was no longer a surmise. The governor also conveyed his best wishes for a "happy new year" at the same time. It is something of a coincidence that just twenty years ago yesterday morning Mr. Steenerson received his first certificate of election, the office being state senator.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Brady and Verne Healy.

Most of the classes were given written lessons Monday.

Josephine Kane and Bessie Hunt were visitors at the high school Monday.

If all the high school pupils would mind their own business there still would be enough idleness.

A number of high school pupils were tardy last Monday morning. A bad start for the new year.

The chemistry class had some very interesting experimeots with hydrofluoric acid and its power to etch glassware.

The fact that talk is cheap doesn't prevent some of the high school girls from making some extravagant expressions.

One of the high school girls was heard to say that the stamp of approval is not always to be obtained at the post office.

The Christmas Gazette must have made the Athenian reporters feel like an orator whose grandstand audience fails to respond.

The Juniors were again given a chance to catch up in their chemistry work, as they went up to the laboratory Monday in the Seniors' turn.

Some people say that women always jumpat conclusions, after hearing the high school girls talk for the last four months wears fully determined to disagree with those people.

School opened Monday with a large attendance, though some of the usual ones were late. Everybody seems prepared for work, and we may safely predict a successful term.

The debate on the question, "Resolved, That Labor Organizations are not Desirable," will take place next Friday. It promises to be a good debate. Everybody is invited to attend.

We are sorry to say that tardiness is altogether too frequent, and it seems impossible for some pupils to get to school on time. It is not the boys that live the furthest away from school that are oftenest tardy. We also notice that about 75 per cent of the tardiness is charged up to a comparatively few.

In the Christmas number of the Norman County Index the high school reporter of Ada quotes from our high school items. He admires our high school very much, and in referring to our foot ball, base ball and debating teams says that whatever we went into we did it with the right spirit and won against odds.

Proverbs

"When the butter won't come put a penny in the churn," is an old time dairy proverb. It often seems to work though no one has ever told why.

When mothers are worried because the children do not gain strength and flesh we say give them Scott's Emulsion.

It is like the penny in the milk because it works and because there is something astonishing about it.

Scott's Emulsion is simply a milk of pure cod liver oil with some hypophosphites especially prepared for delicate stomachs.

Children take to it naturally because they like the taste and the remedy takes just as naturally to the children because it is so perfectly adapted to their wants.

For all weak and pale and thin children Scott's Emulsion is the most satisfactory treatment.

We will send you the penny, i. e., a sample free.

To save the 50c stamp to cut from the label on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

The question of the removal of the church services to this side of the river was laid on the table until a future date.

Representative Simons was unable to assume the dignity of his office at the opening session of the legislature because of a failure to have his certificate of election. Mr. Simons was under the appreheasion that the secretary of state issued this document, but it happens that the auditor of the senior county of the district is thus empowered. Mr. Simons telegraphed for the certificate, and one of Auditor Ford's first official acts was to sign and forward the paper.

The Knights of Pythias installed their newly-elected officers at a function held in their hall Monday evening, and all of those present say they enjoyed the exercises and had a good time generally. John E. King was the installing officer, and he was assisted by R. E. Wyer, Dr. N. M. Watson, S. E. Hunt and Dr. F. F. Fletcher. The officers installed are as follows: Chancellor commander, P. B. Gaasz; vice chancellor, W. A. McIntyre; prelate, P. A. Whiteley; master of work, S. S. Hanley; keeper of records and seal, S. E. Hunt; master of finance, H. N. Johnson; master at arms, J. E. Argue; inner guard, H. W. Anderson. Miss Della Tompkins and Prof. Whiteley rendered vocal solos that were much appreciated by the audience. After the exercises several hours were devoted to dancing, and luncheon was served at midnight.

THE RED LAKE LAND.

Senator Clapp and Mayor Kratka Call on Secretary Hitchcock.

A Washington dispatch says Senator Clapp returned to Washington last night. With him came Mayor Kratka of Thief River Falls, to push the Red Lake treaty bill through the house if it is possible before adjournment. Clapp and Kratka had a long conference to-day with Secretary Hitchcock and Indian Commissioner Jones relative to this legislation, principally on the question of amending the bill so that it will meet the objections of Representative Cannon, who is opposed to the passage of all treaty bills requiring appropriations to pay for the land acquired.

Messrs. Hitchcock and Jones were both favorable to the general proposition to dispose of the Red Lake lands by competition. Senator Clapp wants to sell them at public auction, 160 acres to each settler, one-fourth of the purchase price to be paid at once, the balance in five equal annual installments. Messrs. Hitchcock and Jones both want the lands sold by sealed bids and the entire purchase price to be paid in cash.

Clapp and Kratka say it is impracticable to sell by sealed bids, as then each bidder would have to bid on more than one tract in the hope of getting one. They say also that if the purchasers are required to pay cash, only the rich can take the lands, as the average homesteader has not sufficient funds to make cash payment for a quarter section at the price the land is expected to bring if put up for sale by competition. Representative Cannon has said he will not object to the passage of a bill amended to provide for competitive sale of the lands if the condition is inserted that before the law becomes effective it shall be referred to and accepted by the Indians. It is possible that a solution of the difficulty will be reached in time to secure the passage at this session, either as a separate measure or as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill in the senate.

The first report of Superintendent Ed Warren, in charge of the work of classifying the Chippewa land, was received at the interior department, and shows good progress. It indicates that all the land will be separated into "timber" and "agricultural" within a short time.

The Contented People.

America is noted for the fact that you never can tell when a man is going to become a power in the community. The poor man of today may be the corn king, the cattle king, the coal king, etc., of tomorrow, but the average citizen, the one contented to live modestly. Is still the hulward and hope of the country. As Vanderbilt says, "No matter how rich a man may be, he can only sleep in one bed at the time, only wear one suit of clothes, and only eat three times a day." He might add, that the digestion clears the wind and produces perfect health. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson Crookston.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Tonic and Nervine Cured After Thirty-one Years.

"I was a perfectly healthy young man up to February 1865. When my regiment was in Camp Randall I was taken sick with the measles and I did not enjoy good health up to the time I used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Tonic. I suffered with nervous prostration, insomnia, loss of flesh, etc. I cannot say how many physicians did treat me but have had all kinds. Hearing has never helped me. Rheumatism, attacks of headache, rheumatism, nasal catarrh, hay fever, asthma, and chronic diarrhoea have all taken their turn with me. Thanks to the Nervine and Tonic I am completely restored to health. I have also used Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills with good results and I think that they are the best female pill perfect."—Mrs. Hiram Randall, Spearfish, South Dakota.

"I want to return my four good words for Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. I have been troubled very much with insomnia since I made the change in the new paper and on account of this have tried various remedies without success. I was finally induced by a wholesale druggist, a personal friend of mine, to try Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. There is a lot of good. I do not find it necessary to use it regularly now but occasionally when I feel that I am commencing nervous and restless I again take it up as I always keep a supply on hand. It has never failed to give me the desired relief."—A. Hegele, Publisher "Daily Sun-Herald," Milwaukee, Wis.

HOLIDAY RECESS IS OVER

Both Branches of Congress Resume Business in Washington After a Rest of Fifteen Days.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Senator Hoar Gives Notice of an Address on the Anti-Trust Bill—The Cuban Question Predominates in the Senate—Not Over 100 Members Present in the House.

Washington, Jan. 6.—As soon as the senate met Monday Senator Hoar (Mass.) gave notice that he would address the senate Tuesday on his anti-trust bill.

A concurrent resolution was adopted providing for the preparation under the direction of the attorney general of a compilation of all laws enacted by the various states relating to trusts or to combinations in restraint of trade and for the regulation and reorganization of corporations.

Senator Culberson (Tex.) introduced a joint resolution providing for the admission of anthracite coal free of duty. He said there was a great scarcity of coal and this would tend to relieve the people who now were suffering for fuel. He asked for immediate consideration of the resolution, but Senator Platt (Conn.) objected saying there was no duty on anthracite coal. Senator Vest (Mo.) denied this statement, saying the construction of the law was such as to impose a duty.

Senator Lodge (Mass.) introduced a bill suspending for a period of 90 days the duties on coal imported into the United States.

Senator Mason (Ill.) introduced a bill to provide for the temporary operation of coal mines. It provides that hereafter whenever any coal mine is unoperated and continues to be unoperated to the prejudice of the rights of the people, it shall ha the duty of the attorney general to apply to any judge of a United States court for a receiver for the mine, who it appointed shall serve until such a time as the court shall find by decree that neither the general welfare nor public necessity require the further operation of said mine by such receiver.

A resolution offered by Senator Stewart (Nev.) was agreed to directing the secretary of war to inform the senate as to the effect of a system of railroads in the Philippine Islands in maintaining law and order. He also offered an amendment to the army appropriation bill providing for the construction, equipment and operation by the secretary of war of railroads in the Philippine islands for the purpose of protecting life and property and maintaining a stable government, and further providing for the construction of not less than 200 miles each year for ten years.

The resolution had not been disposed of when, at two o'clock, the Hawaiian statehood bill was taken up. In the absence of Senator Quay, Senator Foraker had charge of the bill Senator Nelson (Minn.) addressed the senate against the bill and in favor of a single state composed of Oklahoma and Indian territory.

House Proceedings.

Washington, Jan. 6.—At noon Monday the house reconvened after a holiday recess of 15 days. Many members had not yet returned from their homes and there were not over 100 members on the floor when Speaker Henderson called the house to order. DeWitt C. Flungon, of New Jersey, who was elected to succeed the late Representative Salmon, appeared at the bar and took the oath.

Mr. Hull (Ia.), chairman of the committee on military affairs, then asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill reported from his committee to create a general staff for the army.

Mr. Richardson (Tenn.), the minority leader, said he did not believe such an important measure should be considered by unanimous consent and he objected.

Mr. Hull then moved the passage of the bill under suspension of the rules.

After the bill had been debated for 40 minutes and two roll calls developed that there was no quorum present the house, at two o'clock, adjourned.

Cuban Reciprocity.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Senator Colson, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, had an extended conference with the president Monday concerning the Cuban reciprocity treaty which is pending before his committee. It is his purpose to have a meeting of the committee on Wednesday to consider the treaty. He hopes that it may be reported from the committee to the senate either the latter part of this week or first of next and he believes that while some opposition to the treaty has developed it will be ratified.

Later Senators Aldrich, of Rhode Island, and Foraker, of Ohio, had interviews with the president, during which the status of the Cuban treaty was discussed briefly. Both senators are confident that the treaty will be ratified.

Died Suddenly.

Woonsocket, S. D., Jan. 6.—Just as he resumed his seat at the conclusion of a speech accepting the presidency of the Wausoseke board of aldermen, Emmanuel L. Simmons expired in his chair.

No Changes.

Governor Van Sant will retain all the heads of departments except Oil Inspector Schiffman. He announced the appointment of his office force and of the heads of important state departments directly under the governor. The persons thus given assurance of further tenure of office are the following:

Robert Jaskson, Excelsior, private secretary; Charles J. Moos, St. Cloud, executive clerk; Minnie Hedwig, St. Paul, executive stenographer; David E. Beasley, St. Paul, governor's messenger.

Elmer H. Dearth, St. Paul, insurance commissioner.

John W. Olson, Albert Lea, superintendent of public instruction.

E. A. Nelson, Hollock, librarian.

Silas D. Libbey, St. Paul, adjutant general.

C. M. Nordley, Red Wing, military storekeeper.

W. W. F. McConnell Mankato, dairy and food commissioner.

John O'Donnell, Minneapolis, commissioner of labor.

John P. Gibbs, commissioner of Itasca park.

William C. Masterman, Stillwater surveyor general of logs and lumber, first district.

Others clean up the slate, and relieves the governor of pressure, except the appointments on the various boards. Public Examiner S. T. Johnson over four months over two years. Executive Agent S. F. Fullerton is re-elected by the grass and fish commission.

The Healthiest City.

Health Commissioner Chenge, of St. Paul, yesterday received from Paris a bronze medal giving St. Paul first place in the hygiene of public health competition, the findings being those of the directorats of the Paris exposition.

The medal is a circular disk of bronze, two inches across its face, bearing on one side the coat of arms of the French republic and on the other the exposition design and words "Grand Prix."

The statistics for this competition were compiled by Dr. Chage two years ago and taken from the public records. They included the population, mortality, drawings of the sewerage system, waterworks, pictures of the public baths and statistical information generally pertaining to St. Paul's health as a community.

Nearly every city and community in the new and old world was represented in this competition, and the awarding of the "grand prix" to St. Paul is an honor the health department is proud of. The award was made on the health of St. Paul as statistically compiled two years ago.

Since that time the population has increased and the death rate is even lower per thousand.

Fish Spawn.

Senator W. W. Dunn, of St. Paul, says that nearly forty times as many fish spawn can be produced at the fish hatchery than at present without any additional cost of maintenance, if the facilities for hatching are provided. Attention is directed to the fact that while Wisconsin, with half as many lakes, has two up-to-date hatcheries, Minnesota, with more lakes than any state in the union, has only one hatchery. Money is now available for the purchase of a tract of land adjoining the hatchery, with a spring discharging as much water as the spring which now furnishes all the water used at the hatchery.

What is needed most now, says Executive Agent S. F. Fullerton, is an appropriation for building pools and houses to utilize the water of the spring and for the acquisition and rebuilding of the old plank fish pools and the erection of much larger hatching-houses.

News Notes.

John Doubrovsky, of Springfield, was frozen so badly he will probably be a cripple.

The State Board of Control will soon award contracts for furnishing the new wings at the buildings and Anoka insane asylums.

During 1902 120 homesteads have been proved up in Rinhard county, which adds about 20,000 acres to the taxable property. There is practically no more government land in the county.

Fifty yesterday morning completely gutted the Rivers building, a tenement flat in the east end. The building was occupied by the poorer class of tenants, many of whom suffered severe losses.

The first fine paid for selling wood alcohol "Jamaica ginger" was reported in Deer Commissioner McConnell from Moose Lake, where Swanson Bros. keepers of a general store, plead guilty and paid a $25 fine.

All in One Man's Hands.

The mountings for ship guns and guns in coast fortifications are so designed and constructed as to throw into the power of one man, in so far as possible, the whole control of directing the gun at the desired target and firing it when ready, says the Engineering Magazine.

A Little Improvement.

Senor Ojeda, the Spanish minister at Washington, denies flatly the story that the young King of Spain recently passed through the palace at Madrid wearing nothing save a royal amis sod ona sock. We infer, therefore, that the story had on at least both socks, besides the smile.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from strangulation, says A. L. Spafford, postmaster, Chester, Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and repeated often. It reduced the swelling and inflammation, cut the tough mucus and our child was resting easy and speedily recovered. It cures coughs, colds, la grippe, and all throat and lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure liberates the throat and chest and enables the lungs to contribute pure, health-giving oxygen to the blood. A. L. Reichert.

Suggestive Names.

The Coxcomb mountains of British Honduras, Central America, as un known part of the famous Mahogany coast, are undergoing a process of change which will identify them for all times with the beginning of the twentieth century. One range has just been named the Queen Alexandra mountains, another range takes the name of the Prince of Wales, and a 4,000 foot peak has been named Mount Joseph Chamberlain.

An Expensive Model.

As a model a Munich sculptor has hired a full-grown lion from a menagerie. The animal eats 12 pounds of horseflesh daily and drinks 10 gallons of milk. The cost of its food and its keeper's pay is a day. The menagerie is to receive $1,500 if the lion dies.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

with local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials, free. F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, price 75c. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Automobiles and Dust.

In a study and discussion of dust, Prof. Frankland, of England, says that that the quantity of minute particles raised and suspended in the air has been greatly increased in urban communities by the advent of the automobile. They estimate that one automobile stirs up as much dust as twenty carriages.

White Girl's "Burden."

At the Anderson, Kan., carnival six of the attractions were Indian girl orchestra from one of the government schools in Arkansas. Some of the girls were full bloods and some were half betty said: "It was just as good as the breeds. Two of them got to quarreling over some small matter, and one rest of you, if I am half white."

The crowned heads of every nation. The rich meo, poor men and misers in the world use Dr. King's New Life Pills. DeWitt's Little Early Risers.

William Sanders, San Antonio, Tex., writes: Little Early Riser Pills are the best I ever used. They do not gripe, although I recommend them to everybody. They cure constipation, biliousness, sick headache, torpid liver, jaundice, malaria and all other liver troubles. A. L. Reichert.

Man With the Gun.

The man with the gun has his lanlag. There are as many men promoted from the ranks in the regular army as officer or more civil life as used to be given commissions from the southern states in the war. In a noble profession if nobly carried out, and block marks on the list are few.

Rattlesnake Served at Banquet.

A monster rattlesnake, fried, boiled and stewed, was the principal delicacy at a banquet given by Capt. Dabney of Hot Springs, Ark. It was fattened on rabbits, chickens and lambs. The guests pronounced it delicious.

The Secret Of Long Life.

Consists in keeping all the main organs of the body in healthy, regular action, and in quickly destroying deadly disease germs. Dr. King's New Life Pills regulate stomach, liver and kidneys, purify the blood, and give perfect health. They never work wonders in curing kidney troubles, female complaints, nervous diseases, constipation, dyspepsia and malaria. Vigorous health and strength always follow their use. Only 25c, guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggists.

Paternal Obtuseness.

It is strange, and one of the things a father can never understand, but the desire to save old clothes to bur out lying for the house is never born in a woman until after she is married. —Atchison Globe.

Heads Should Never Ache.

Never endure this trouble. Use at once the remedy that stopped it for Mrs. N. A. Webster, of Winnie, Tex., she writes "Dr. King's New Life Pills wholly cured me of sick headaches that had suffered from for two years." Cure headache, constipation, biliousness. 25c at W. A. Schreiter's drug store.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, that justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next five years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket?

We have no land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $3,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

A Scientific Discovery.

Kodol does for the stomach that which it is unable to do for itself, even when but slightly disordered or over-loaded. It supplies the natural juices of digestion and does the work of the stomach, giving the nervous tension, while the all muscles of that organ are allowed to rest and heal. Kodol digests the food you eat and enables the stomach to get strength and vigor. Kodol digestive organs to transform all food into rich, red blood. A. L. Reichert, druggist.

DEATH OF D. K. WILKINSON.

Expires Suddenly Friday Morning of Heart Disease.

D. K. Wilkinson died at 8 o'clock last Friday morning at the residence of his son, Dr. J. C. Wilkinson. The old gentleman has not been rugged for a year or more, and on the morning of his demise laid down on his bed after breakfast for a rest. In a few minutes a peculiar sound was noticed, and before anything could be done he was dead. Heart failure was the immediate cause.

Mr. Wilkinson was 69 yearsofage, and has lived on a farm near Iowa Falls, Iowa, since 1860. He is survived by his wife, four daughters and two sons. The remains were taken to Iowa Falls Friday evening for burial, and were accompanied by Mrs. Wilkinson and two of her daughters.

FRIDAY EVENING'S BLAZE.

Prof. Whiteley's Home Badly Damaged and Household Goods Ruined.

The residence on Champagne avenue occupied by Prof. Whiteley and family caught fire about nine o'clock Friday evening, and for a time it looked as though the building would burn to the ground. However the prompt work of the fire department resulted in saving the building from destruction, although the interior is badly damaged by water, and most of the household goods are ruined. The house and goods were insured, and while Prof. Whiteley will probably suffer no financial loss it is not the most agreeable thing in the world to be deprived of the comforts of home at this season of the year.

Mr. Whiteley had returned from his claim in Itasca county about an hour before, and started a fire in the wood heater. He then went to V. L. Knight's residence to inquire as to the condition of the sick boy at that place, and upon returning found the house burning through the roof. The fire caught in the floor of the upstairs, where the stove-pipe goes through.

Life is Worth Living.

Fairmont Sentinel: John J. Ialls was in no hurry to take his departure from this world. The following extract from a letter written by him to his wife expresses his sentiments in his own inimitable fashion:

"My world is so lovely at its best, and life is so delightful, that Idread the thought of leaving it. I have seen and experienced so little of what makes life sweet and known that it seems like closing a volume of which I have only glanced at the title page. But so many are taking their leave and I have already survived so large a number of my contemporaries that I must contemplate their departure with the rest. I thought as I lay in bed this morning, having waked early, what an uncivil host life is, to invite us to an entertainment and then be compelled to attend whether we like it or not, and then to unceremoniously take us by the arm and blow us out into the night, stormy and dismal, to go stumbling about without so much as a lantern to show us the way to another town."

Girls: If you wish to know the disposition of the man you would marry, observe his treatment of his horse. The man will not be good to his wife who allows his horse to suffer from cuts, galls or sores when he can quickly cure them without scars by using Cole's Veterinary Carbolisalve. Guaranteed. 25c and $1.00. Sold by all druggists.

Heartless Squeeze of the Poor.

Boston Post: Kerosene oil can be bought in Boston today for 15 cents a gallon. Six months ago, before coal began to be scarce because of the coal strike, it was sold for 10 cents a gallon. As people began to use it more generally for heating purposes, the price was advanced, 5 cent at a time, until when the greatest distress prevailed it was put up to 15 cents, and now, in view of a continued fuel famine, it is made 15 cents. What is the cause of this increase of 50 per cent in the price of an article of universal necessity? Crude petroleum, from which kerosene is made, was never so cheap. The development of new oil territory has bought down the price of the raw material. The cost of manufacture is the same as before, or less. In a time of distress among the poor, kerosene at 10 cents a gallon would be a blessing and would save lives that are now sacrificed to insufficient warmth.

New Century Comfort.

Millions are daily finding a world of comfort in Bucklen's Arnica Salve. It kills pain from burns, scalds, cuts bruises, conquers ulcers, and fever sores; cures eruptions, salt rheum, boils, and felons; removes corns and warts. Best pile cure on earth. Only 25c at W. A. Schechter's drug store.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Swan Anderson, Former Red Lake Farmer, Tells of His New Home.

Clearbrook, Wash., Dec. 27, 1902.

—Editor Courier: Your Christmas number is just at hand, and it is a "hummer." It is certainly a credit to the entire Courier staff, as well as Charles E. Boughton, your contribution, wherein he turns old bygone days and their events into full life and memory. No one but an old settler like myself will enjoy more to look backward upon the early pioneer days, and as I was one of the first settlers of Black River and lived there twenty-two years I thoroughly enjoy reading Mr. Boughton's reminiscences. Well, your county has made wonderful strides in progress, and I think the most of the development has been accomplished in the last ten years. Before that it was a speculation, now it is a reality. Your Courier reaches us weekly and is always welcome. I am glad to note that you are prosperous.

I felt sorry for some of my Populist friends at the last election. I have been a Populist ever since the party was organized, and always took a hand in the party's battles. Although we fought hard, we were badly defeated, and I have come to cause our platforms and purposes were right, and they are just as right now as they ever were. No doubt the boss has been found with the Populist platforms or their reform purposes, and the more radical the measures the more they advocated the peoples' rights, and the more they were hated by the would-be money rulers, until finally they have been crucified and slain for an innocent purpose selfishly undertakes.

It seems to me their mission is ended. They have done nothing to be ashamed of, but instead have left many marks of honor behind them. I suppose the majority of them will breather with the old Democrats. If that party continues to support the principles that it has done to the fullest extent they will become strong and victory will surely follow.

Probably you want to hear a few lines about Washington. We are getting along well. This winter has been worse than the last, for we had about eight inches of snow three weeks ago and the ground was covered with it for about a week. We had to feed all the stock in the stables during that time, but the weather is better now and the grass green, so the stock has plenty of pasture. Almost all the farmers around here are engaged in cattle and sheep raising. We have our own hand separators and [illegible] the cream. Cream we are getting 35 cents for our butter, and 40 cents for eggs. All farm produce is high. We built a church here last summer and have services every Sunday. Our Sunday school numbers eighty children. A great many from Minnesota and other eastern states are coming here and buying homes. Land is not very high as yet, but the price is increasing. The land is mostly level land partially rolling, not stony but very stumpy. The soil is rich alid the climate exquisite. It is probably the finest climate that makes things grow so wonderfully here, as the soil you have in Red Lake county is on an average much better than here. However, much of it is equally as good or better. I wish you all a happy New Year.

SWAN ANDERSON.

"About two months ago" writes L. J. Reddon, Ashland, Wis., "I was struck on the elbow by a bolt in a high speeded pulley, cutting off the point of the arm and severely lacerating the muscle. I kept the wound dressed with Cole's Carbolisalve and in two weeks it was healed as sound as ever." Cole's is a wonderful cure for wounds, sores and burns. Leaves no scar. 25 and 50c. Sold by all druggists.

Does the Consumer Benefit?

Chicago Record-Herald: The cost of beef to the retailer is now from 4 to 6 cents cheaper than it was three months ago. So say the men who control the market. Has this work some reduction been notfeasbin in the price to the consumer? If so it has been him more with which to meet his coal bills.

Don't Do It.

Don't go around with a cough rasking yourself and others miserable. You may say that you can't help it, but you can. If you will take Cole's Cough Cure you will be relieved immediately and soon cured. It is the surest and fastest remedy known and the many marvellous cures of desperate lung diseases prove its matchless merit. Children like it, it is guaranteed. 25 and 50c. Sold by all druggists.

Country Girl's Uncalled-for Sympathy

Frank Benson, the present owner of Benson Point, tells the following story of his father, who originally bought the Montauk property at auction for $150,000. The senior Benson was one much in love with the country life he spent most of his days doing there. One day a maid from The Inn approached him, saying the lone fisherman, and, seeing his goodly catch, said:

"My! What a lot of fish. What are you going to do with them?"

"Well, hun, perhaps," was the response.

"Well, perhaps you could sell that up at The Inn. You ought to make a good deal of money out of them, and," she added, sympathetically, "goodness knows you look as though you needed it!"—New York Times.

OCEAN SPEED COSTS MONEY.

Greyhounds of the Ocean Have Some Disadvantages.

Much has been said of late regarding the speed of the German Atlantic greyhounds, says the London Graphic, but not enough, perhaps, has been said regarding the cost of this speed. The latest creation of the North German Lloyd, Kaiser Wilhelm II., is designed to do twenty-four knots an hour at an expenditure of 40,000 indicated horse power. Her sister, the Star Line Cadric, the largest ship in the world, will go seventeen knots with 14,000 horse power. But, says the Shipping World, the Kaiser Wilhelm II. will burn 700 tons of coal per day, which to 130 per cent more than the Cedric, and she will need 256 more men to work her. Curiously enough, of her crew of 600, only 45 will be engine drivers, stokers, or those under the mechanics of various orders.

The Girl and the Boy.

An Atchison mother died recently, leaving two children, a girl of eight and a boy of nine. The kind neighbors assembled in the parlor, held the usual short talks and wiped copious tears, and made her smile with promises of food and books and candy. At the close of the first long day the boy was needed to go on an errand and he found and had had not been seen since early morning. A search was made, but resulted in the expectation of many women present, he was not out-playing, but in the barn, where he had spent the whole day alone sobbing his heart out on the hay.—Atchison Globe.

Has Exceedingly Rare Coin.

George W. Prentice, a watchman living in Pittsburg, for over twenty years, has had in his possession a coin which is said to be worth $7,000. It is a Macedonian piece and was made 149 B. C. The coin was given to him by A Frenchman who had picked it up during his wanderings over the world. A few evenings ago footpads attempted to "hold up" Prentice and he believes they sought to obtain possession of the extraordinarily rare coin. He says he got it for a safe place. So far as is known there is but one other like it in existence.

Photography and Sunstroke.

If we consider that the sun also gets heatstrokes from the great heat it generates in its enormous furnace, we readily arrive at the conclusion that not the heat rays of the sun, but the sodaic rays are the cause of the evil. Hence if we treat the body as a photographer does his plate, and accept it in orange, using always an orange-yellow shirt and lining the coat and hat with the same color, we are not likely to suffer no bad effects from the sodaic rays. Such is actually do this.—Science Siftings.

Biscuit Was Very Hot.

A citizen invited the pastor to dine with him recently. At the table beside the citizen's wife sat their 4-year-old daughter, before whom the host had frequently but thoughtlessly made some profane remarks. The child was very hungry, and, being served quickly, which caused the preacher to ask it if the biscuit was hot. replied the child, innocently, "It's hot as the devil." "You must get a new name for that child," said the host, turning to his wife. The pastor agreed with him.

Miss Stone States Her Position.

Miss Ellen M. Stone declares it is not her intention to reimburse all the persons who contributed toward her ransom. She considers that it is her purpose, she says, to repay such persons who unreasonably themselves financially by giving toward her ransom. She adds: "I cannot help but feel that I have some plan to direct attention to his mission work in the country. In pursuance of that plan it was our pert to suffer and that of friends to give."

May Be Honored by Postoffice.

Postmaster General Payne is considering the idea of placing portraits of the late Dr. Charles F. McDonald on money order blanks. Dr. McDonald was the first head of the money order system. He was also the first originator. He left by will $2,000 to the postoffice department to be used in any way which might improve the service.

A Disordered System.

If don't know what there is about betting on horse races that should be so deleterious to health," said young Mrs. Torkins, pensively.

"I never heard of such a thing," answered the visitor.

"Neither did I until I heard Charley talking about it. Every time he comes a shad he comes home and says there is something wrong with his system."

PEANUT CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

Sufferer Asserts They Give Sure and Prompt Relief.

Peanuts as a cure for consumption are widely known and believed in, says the Philadelphia Record. Now a Roxborough man comes forward with a peanut cure for insomnia. He says of it: "I had been a poor sleeper for five years. Violent exercise, drugs and other remedies had given me no relief. Finally, at the suggestion of a vegetarian, I tried the peanut. I put beside my bed a bag of them newly roasted, shelled and salted, and on my first attack of insomnia I ate them, masticating them very thoroughly—living in fact twenty-five chews to each one. While taking this slow repast I felt a gradual drowsiness stealing over me, and as soon as the last one was eaten I fell asleep. Since that time I have always kept fresh peanuts by me at night. They have never failed."

WHAT WAS SHE THINKING OF?

Actress, in Fear of Death, Regretted She Had No Fan.

Mr. Anderson tells a good story of Miss Elsworthy during one of his American tours. In the midst of something approaching the wreck of the ship in which the company were traveling from a northern port to New Orleans, Andrews, rushing to the actress to help the ladies, found Miss Elsworthy with her head in the lap of a negroy of fear which had cured their seasickness. The perspiration was falling from her hair down her cheeks, them there was no danger. "No danger! No danger!" cried Andrews hysterically. "Why, I can see the sky and sea through the ship's side. We are going down; the boat is sinking—oh, dear, oh, dear; we are going down, I tell you, and—and (looking everywhere around her)—my God! I have no fan!"

Eagles Instead of Farmhand.

The farm hand and the farm horse are rapidly being supplanted on the level tracts of the west by the traction engine. The farms are large, comprising several hundred acres, unbroken by hedge and rarely with trees or stones. Under these conditions the engine can do any kind of work. It is a compact little machine run by gasoline, and not at all like the ordinary attachment to a threshing machine. It runs a "gang plow" with five in a row, three or four harvest-at a time, is capable when ordered to a separator for threshing grain, runs the mill for grinding cattle feed, and hauls farm wagons to market laden with grain. In fact, there is scarcely a thing about farm work that the little traction engine can not do.

The Mean Things.

"The editor of the Glasgow Echo avers he is not inclined to be much of a fighter," he says, "when we recall a cinch is the rood we recognize it." Then Judge Bell has to accept a provocation made by a friend the other day, and when a passing woman fait to learn if her shirt was going to be soaked to under her belt the friend was to give the editor a sicker, while for each woman who did not do one of these things he walking a block and editor was to give a dime. "We got 63 blocks," the moldor of opinion concludes, "and that's how dime-a-lady with both arms full of parcels came along."—Kansas City Journal.

Growth of Postoffices.

That there has been a better index of the progress of this country in population, and also of the character of the same, than statistics of the Post Office Department showing the number of new postoffices created during the year. Thus it appears that in the year ended June 30, 1902, there was a gain of 294 postoffices in this country, involving an increase in the salary account of $141,800. Accepting the view of the venerable Edward Everett Hale that every postoffice is equivalent to a public school so an educational agency, these figures have a still larger meaning and significance.

"Deacon" White's Career.

S. V. ("Deacon") White, the veteran of Wall street, who has just sold his seat on the New York Stock Exchange, says that when he began trading there over thirty years ago the transactions of a day seldom reached 200,000 shares, as against an average of 2,000,000 now. "Mr. White," said one of his old friends 'a day or two ago, "you have accomplished many big things on the Street, but your greatest achievement has been that in spite of your big speculations you have always paid your debts."

Possibilities of the Trolley

The ramifications of the trolley systems of this country are a source of never-ending wonder. Routes fifty and seventy-five miles long from the different large cities are common. The rapid has been the growth of the trolley system in the Middle States that within five years, it is predicted, one will be able to travel from Augusta, Me., to Chicago, and even much further west. The network of lines comprising this system will represent 7,000 miles.

That's What.

An editor works 86½ days per year to get out his paper—that's labor. Once in a while somebody pays him a year's subscription—that's capital; and once in a while somebody at the last named creature, for then is a place where he will get his just deserts—that's hell.—Victoria Advocate.

How Rich Mine Was Discovered.

The famous Hot Hole mine in the mountains of Arizona was discovered by a woman who watched a trader rat carrying things out of tent tent to the hole in the rocks. The mine, it is said, has paid several millions in dividends.

Exactly So.

"It's curious," said Uncle Eben. "Nobody would think of tryin' to play no banjo without takin' a few lessons, but ev'ybody thinks he could step in an' run de gov'ment without no practice whatever."

Killed at the Telephone.

Otis Farge was instantly killed at Paris, Tex., the other night, while using a telephone. He had the receiver to his ear when he suddenly dropped dead from an electric shock. The 'phone must have come in connection with an alternating current by crossing other wires.

Encouraging Employes.

Six employes of a Barrow (Eng. land) engineering firm have received prizes, ranging from $5 to $40, for suggestions resulting to the more economical production of work.

No Need of Horses.

A Missouri man who went to Washington to sell horses, reports the following conditions there: "The people travel on electric cars and do not need roadsters; they ride bicycles and automobiles and do not need fast trotters; they gamble by wire and do not need race horses, and they drink ars."

Teko Off Their Veils.

Turkish women are said to be getting more independent every year. Nowadays, in spite of orders to cover their faces in public, many boldly let their veils fall aside and keep them off altogether when entering a shop.

FACTS AND FIGURES IN REGARD TO TAXATION

Valuations in Red Lake County Now Reach the Comfortable Figure of $2,201,423.00.

The abstract of taxes in 1902 in Red Lake county presents some interesting figures, a few of which are reproduced for the benefit of our readers.

The average valuation of lands in this county, exclusive of city lots and including buildings, is $3.43.

The highest average on acre property is in Thief River Falls, which rates $39.97 per acre. St. Hilaire comes next at $15.07; while the average valuation of acre property in Red Lake Falls city is only $4.07. The highest valuation among the townships is Red Lake Falls at $4.84, with North next $4.46. The lowest at Numedal $2.90, and Emardville $2.22.

The average rate of taxation in the county is 42.6 mills. The rate in Red Lake Falls is 58.6 mills, in Thief River Falls 57.2 and St. Hilaire 44.9. The highest rate of taxation in the county is in the town of North and is 64.6 mills; the lowest is Poplar River 26.9 and Louisville 28.7. The total amount of taxation for the county is $93,707.64 which is divided as follows: State taxes—Revenue, $2,854.48; school, $3,701.65; state loans, $3,211.52. County taxes—Revenue, $9,556.43; road and bridge, $1,707.10; poor, $990.34; special, $3,514.45. This last item includes smallpox expense, ditch liens, special ditch bonds, etc. City and village taxes—Revenue, $9,160 91; bond and interest, $7,154.80; special, $3,041.23. Township taxes—Revenue, $2268.15; road and bridge, $4700.85; bond and interest, $1027.15; delinquent road, $2107.57; special, $1,982.22. School taxes—Local 1 mill, $2,201.33; special $33,016.67.

The total number of acres, exclusive of city lots, in the county is given as 392,974.29. The total value of same including buildings, is $1,345,260.00. City property is valued at $398,023.00, and personal property at $457,445.00. This foots up a total valuation of $2,201,423.00.

DIDN'T KEEP HIS BRIDE.

Practical Jokers at Thief River Falls Get Into Trouble.

The Thief River Falls "jokers" seem to have worked their propensities for practical jokes to the limit this week, and just now a suit against a prominent citizen is pending on the charge of impersonating a justice of the peace.

A green Bohemian came in from the country the other day and announced to a few of his friends that he wanted a wife, and was prepared to pay a reasonable sum for the exquisite pleasure of having some damsel shower all the wealth of her affection upon him. A member of the Josh club discovered the country jay's ambition, and realizing the glorious opportunity for fun confided the information to the other members. The rest was easy. Arrangements were made with an inmate of one of the questionable resorts to pose as the blushing bride, and a ministerial-looking member of the club agreed to act in the capacity of justice of the peace for the purpose of converging the two loving hearts into one. Another member issued the necessary license, and the wedding details were soon worked out to perfection. The plot was carried through successfully, and the happy groom was liberal in his donations for refreshments. After a reasonable time, however, the bride found opportunity to desert her loving spouse, and the husband in name only finally tumbled to the fact that he was playing the leading role in a side-play for the amusement of a job lot of practical jokers, and finally got mad enough to swear out a warrant against the man who officiated at the mock ceremony. The trial will be heard in the municipal court today, and will at least furnish considerable amusement for the spectators.

SCATHING REBUKE FOR POLK COUNTY OFFICIALS

Grand Jury at Crookston Fires Bomb in Camp of Derelict Officials.

The grand jury of Polk county which has just concluded its labors has filed a sensational report with regard to the past conduct of the county affairs and some earnest recommendations for the future. The report says:

The records of the county show that loose and careless methods have been allowed to maintain in the work; to-wit:

Section 687 Laws of 1894 prescribe the form in which claims against the county shall be presented, the especial point of which is careful and complete itemization.

Section 688 Laws of 1894 clearly defines the methods of certification and 699 Laws of 1894, in no uncertain terms, assumes and sets forth the penalty to be suffered by any member of the board for allowing the accounts not so "itemized" and verified.

Our examination of the records and files of the auditor's office of this county show us conclusively that but slight attention has been paid to these very plain and essential provisions of the law. Many claims have been allowed by the commissioners and auditor's warrants issued for them which are not itemized, as well as many which are not verified. Bills for services not showing where the services were rendered or upon what authority. Bills for goods or merchandise not showing the amount or price of the same, or by whom ordered or received. These bills having been passed and duly signed by the chairman and his warrant being drawn for them, its being duly attested by the auditor, lays the commissioners directly liable for the penalty as provided in section 699 above cited and the auditor and bondsmen liable for the penalty provided by the violation of law by such officer, one of which is removal from office.

We also find that the county treasurer has in an unbusiness like way accepted and drawn his check in payment of warrants without the same having been endorsed or assigned and that the treasurer's books are often paid without the endorsement of the person to whom drawn or assagned, in fact, frequently, not endorsed at all, thus leaving in many instances, an illegal transaction from the reception of the bill to and including its payment.

The records also show that bills filed against the county have been subsequently removed and other bills in favor of the parties substituted. therefore, without calling the same to the attention of the county auditor, county commissioners or any other officer.

The records also show that the official acts of the commissioners as reported in the record book of their official proceedings do not show such details of their transactions as is necessary to a legal record. A case in point is found in Commissioners' record book "D", Polk county, page 94, second paragraph, where it states that "sealed bids were received for furnishing assessment books for 1902 and on motion the contract was let to the lowest bidder." A careful search of the auditor's office fails to reveal but one bid on file, and that not the accepted bid. An inquiry of the officials shows that if other bids were ever on file, the same have been lost and can not be produced at this date.

We especially speak of this class of important business transactions to emphasize the fact that lack of methodical and business like care of the public records.

The records also show that bills have been paid for public printing largely in excess of the actual measurement and price named in the contracts. The excessive bills, running back for a long term of years, which could have come negligence on the part of our county officials in neglecting to properly care for our public treasury.

After taking up some other matters of purely local interest the grand jury makes a recommendation which is evidently the result of a heart to heart talk with the public examiner:

We recommend that the county commissioners by resolution shall provide that all claims against the county of whatever nature, shall be filed with the auditor at least ten days prior to the meeting of the county commissioners at which time such claims are to be considered and that he shall within three days thereafter, refer then to the county attorney, who shall be respectfully requested to pass upon them in the following items:

First, Can the subject matter of this bill be a charge against the county?——Ans.

Second, Is this bill properly itemized?——Ans.

Third, Is this bill properly verified by the claimant?——Ans.

Fourth, Is this bill properly certified by the responsible officer having charge of the work of purchasing and receiving the goods?——Ans.

All of these questions should be answered by him, yes or no, and after any remarks, concerning the cause of his opinion, should be certified by his official signature in ink.

There is a further recommendation that the county attorney's salary be raised to compensate for these added duties. Red Lake county's board has already acted upon similar recommendations.

Loss of Flesh

When you can't eat breakfast, take Scott's Emulsion. When you can't eat bread and butter, take Scott's Emulsion. When you have been living on a milk diet and want something a little more nourishing, take Scott's Emulsion.

To get fat you must eat fat. Scott's Emulsion is a great fattener, a great strength giver.

Those who have lost flesh want to increase all body tissues, not only fat. Scott's Emulsion increases them all, bone, flesh, blood and nerve.

For invalids, for convalescents, for consumptives, for weak children, for all who need flesh, Scott's Emulsion is a rich and comfortable food, and a natural tonic.

Scott's Emulsion for bone, flesh, blood and nerve.

We will send you a free sample.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Kodol does for the stomach that which is in accordance with the laws of nature, but slightly disordered or over-loaded. Kodol supplies the natural juices of digestion and does the work of the stomach, relaxing the nervous tension, while the digestive elements of that organ are allowed to rest and heal. Kodol digests but what you eat and makes the sourest and digestive organs to transform all food into rich, red blood. A. L. Reichert.

SUED FOR $115,000.

Commonwealth Lumber Company Accused of Trespassing.

United States District Attorney C. C. Houpt began an action on behalf of the Federal court at Fergus Falls Saturday, asking damages in the sum of $115,362.24 for timber cut on the White Earth Indian reservation.

The complaint alleges that one Felix Bisson, at the request of the the defendant company, cut and removed 96,650 feet of timber from the reservation during the year 1900, taking the same to the company's mill. Similar allegations are made in regard to a long list of other parties, and the total amount of timber cut and removed is in the neighborhood of 8,000,000 feet.

The case has been carefully worked up by thegovernment inspectors and will come on for trial at the March term of court. The government asks damages and injunction since Oct. 29, 1901. Ray W. Jones, the lieutenant governor, is the president of the company.

Girls: If you wish to know the disposition of the man you would marry, observe his treatment of his horse. Sold by all druggists.

Rung Off With a Hammer.

Fairmont Sentinel: Down at Kanaka, Ill., another day a husband and man became so enraged over the poor telephone service he was receiving that he seized a hammer, broke his office telephone into small pieces and threw them into the street. The man was immediately placed under arrest on the charge of disorderly conduct, and now he threatens a damage suit of $25,000 against the city unless the charge is withdrawn. No doubt there have been times when other patrons of telephone exchanges have felt just as this man did and would liked to have taken revenge on the innocent instruments, but the case cited may act as a warning that it is better to control your temper and make the complaint if you have any to the proper persons.

MEDIUMS AT WORK.

Clairvoyants Expect to Find Miss Gertrude Strassberger.

Miss Gertrude Strassberger, the young lady whose mysterious disappearance has caused a widespread sensation, is shortly to be found if there is any virtue in clairvoyants, says the Crookston Times. Two of these mystic dealers in the dim world of spirits are in that city, and both are sure they can locate the young lady. One is an erratic young dreamer from Fortile, Edward Chase. He is here on the liquor cases from that city which are pending before the district court and incidentally hopes to find the young lady and get the reward. He claims that he has already had a trance and located her, but will have another one on the spot where she was last seen before he gives out his discovery to the public. He expects to have the conversation with the spirit world near the South Crookston bridge some time this evening.

The other is a Frenchman by the name of DeBeau, from Tennessee. He looks the clairvoyant, having long hair, a full black beard and a head figure worked on his over shoes. He is reported to have found various missing things like stray horses and stolen money, and now he says he can locate the hidden articles. He appeared before Judge Toupin, of Red Lake Falls, the other day and submitted a plan of the Strassberger home, locating where the young lady was last seen and gave an accurate description of the house and Mrs. Strassberger and many other things about which he seemed to have no way of knowing. All this was forwarded to Mr. Strassberger with the result that Mr. DeBeau arrived in the city today and has been looking the field over. Since morning he has also purchased a diagram of the journey she made after she was last seen and where she left the river. She skated up toward the dam and back to the bridge. Removing her skates she walked up Broadway to somewhere near the neighborhood of the Hotel Crookston. Here his sled had track of her, but as near as he can make out she is forcibly detained in a room in a building near by. Mr. DeBeau has been in consultation with Mr. Strassberger, Mayor Hitchcock and Chief of Police Conner the greater part of the afternoon, but the missing girl has not yet been found.

I love thee, O yes I love thee,
But life all that I can ever be,
For in my vision in the night,
My dreams are Rocky Mountain Tea.

A Weak Stomach

I SIGHT THE DEVILFISH.

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An eminent authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest even the best food. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. This rest and the wholesome tonics Kodol contains soon restore health. Eating unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the tortures of fullness and bloating from which some people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

G. THOMAS Agent.

W. C. SMILLEY,

SURVEYOR AND DRAUGHTSMAN,

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA.

Four years experience as U. S. Deputy Mineral surveyor in Minnesota. Six years experience with government land surveys in other states. Is surveyor general of Minnesota. Farm and ditch surveys. Maps and plats.

This question almost took away my senses. Was this reality? or had a spirit risen from this lonely ocean to summon me somewhere? Was this the way people died? Rockwell! Yes my name was Rockwell. At least It had been. I was sure of nothing now.

Again came the voice across the sea. "Why don't you answer?" It said.

I raised my trumpet to my lips. At first I could make no sound, but, controlling agitation a little, I shouted: "Yes!"

Instantly the woman disappeared, and for ten minutes I saw her no more. During that time I did nothing but stand and look at the steamer, where was moving more slowly than before for the reason that the wind was dying away. She was now, however, much opposite me, and so near that if the wind should cease entirely conversation might be held without the aid of trumpets. I earnestly hoped that might be the case, for I had now recovered the possession of my senses and greatly desired to hear the natural voice of that young woman on the steamer.

As soon as she reappeared I made a trial of the power of my voice. Laying down the trumpet I shouted: "Where are you?"

Back came the answer, clear, high and perfectly audible: "I am Mary Phillips."

Mary Phillips! It seemed to me that I remembered the name. I was certainly familiar with the street, latitude, and, I fancied that I recognized the features of the speaker. But this was all; I could not place her.

Before I could say any thing she hailed again: "Don't you remember me?" she cried; "I lived in Forty-second street."

The middle of a wild and desolate ocean and a voice from Forty-second street! What manner of conjuncture was this? I clasped my head in my hands and tried to think. Suddenly a memory came to me; a wild, surging, raging memory.

"With what person did you live in Forty-second street?" I asked, somewhat stupified by the statement. I had heard.

I will now say a few words concerning Miss Bertha Nugent. She was lady whom I had known well in New York, and who, for more than a year, I had loved well, although I never told her so. Whether or not she suspected my passion was a question about which I had never been able to satisfy myself. Sometimes I had one opinion; sometimes another. Before I had taken any steps to secure myself positively in regard to this point Miss Nugent went abroad with a party of friends, and for eight months I had neither seen nor heard from her.

During that time I had not ceased to berate myself for my inexcusable procrastination. As she went away without knowing my feelings towards her, of course there could be no cause for speculation. Whatever she might have suspected, or whatever she might have expected, there was nothing between us. But on my part my love for Bertha had grown day by day. Hating the city and even the country where I had seen her and loved her, where now she was not, I travelled here and there, and during the winter went to the West Indies. There I had remained until the weather had become too warm for a longer sojourn, and then I had taken passage in the "Seagle" for New York. I knew that Bertha would probably return in the spring or summer, and I went to go New York when she arrived. If when I met her I found her free, there would be no more delay. My life thenceforth would be black or white. And now here she was near me, in a half-wrecked steamer on the wide Atlantic, with no companion, as I knew, but her maid, Mary Phillips.

CHAPTER II.

I now had a very distinct recollection of Mary Phillips. In my visits to the Nugent household I, in Forty-second street, had frequently seen this young woman. Two or three times when Miss Nugent had not been at home, I had had slight interviews with her. She evidently treated my visits with considerable favor, and I had some reason to think that if Miss Nugent really despised my feelings, Miss Phillips had given her some hints on the subject.

Mary Phillips was an exceedingly bright and quick young woman, and I am quite sure that she could read into the state of a man's feelings as well as any one. Bertha had given me many instances of her maid's facilities for adapting herself to circumstances, and I now was thankful for the hints of my heart that Bertha had this woman with her.

I was recovering from the stupefaction into which my sudden memory had plunged me when a ball came across the water, first. In Mary Phillips' natural voice and then through a speaking-trumpet. I stood up and answered.

"I was wondering," cried Mary Phillips, "what had become of you; I thought perhaps you had gone down to breakfast." In answer I called to her to tell me where Miss Nugent was, how she was, how she came to be in this surprising situation and how many people there were on board the steamer.

"Miss Nugent has not been at all well," came back the reply, "but she hasn't used up as soon as I told her you were here. She not only came on deck very well, hecause the pitch of the ship makes the stairs so steep. But I am going to give her her breakfast now, and after she has eaten something she may be stronger, and I will try to get her on deck."

Brightened up when she knew I was near! That was glorious! That brightened up creation.

By this time I needed food also, but I did not remain below to eat it. I brought a mouthful on deck, because my eyes all the time fixed upon Bertha's steamer. The distance between us did not seem to have varied. How I longed for a little breeze that might bring us together. Bertha was in that vessel, trusting, perhaps, entirely to me; and what could I do? I could remain idle and bring us together. I looked about for something on which I might float to her; but if I made a raft I was not sure that I could steer or propel it, and I might float away and become a third derelict. Once I thought of boldly springing into the water and swimming to her, but the distance was considerable, my swimming powers were only moderate, and there might be sharks. The risk was too great. But some plan would come together. Even if no kind wind arose, there was that strange attraction which draws to each other two bubbles on a cup of tea. If bubbles, why not ships?

It was not long before nearly one-half of Mary Phillips appeared above the rail. "Miss Nugent has come on deck," she cried, "and she wants to see you. She can't stand up very long because every thing is so sliding."

Before my tremulous lips could frame an answer she had bobbed out of sight, and presently reappeared carrying another person, and that other person was Bertha Nugent.

I could discern her features perfectly. She was thinner and paler than when I had seen her, but her beauty was what all times. The same smile which I had known was on her face, and she even waved her handkerchief to me. I waved my hat in return, but I tried two or three times before I could speak loud enough for her to hear me. Then I threw into my words all the good cheer and hope that I could.

"I am not a bit corrupt to answer, but smiled more brightly than before. Her expression seem to indicate that apart from the extraordinary pleasure of meeting a friend on this waste of waters, she was glad that I was there.

"She can't speak loud enough for you to hear," called out Mary Phillips, "but she says that now you are here she thinks every thing will be all right. She wants to know if you are alone on your ship, and if you can come to us."

I explained my situation, but said I did not doubt but the two ships would gradually drift together. "Is there no one who can lower your boat?" I asked.

"No one but me," answered Mary, "and I don't believe I am up to that sort of thing. Miss Nugent says I must not touch it for fear I might fall overboard."

"Do you mean to say," I cried, "that there is nobody but you two on board that steamer?"

"No other living soul!" said Mary, "and I'll tell you how it all happened."

Then she told their story. The friends with whom Miss Nugent had traveled had determined to go to Egypt, and as she did not wish to accompany them, she had remained in Spain and Algiers finishing her winter. After seven days before she and Mary Phillips had started from Marseilles in a steamer in Piedmont. Two days ago, the steamer had collided in the night with another vessel, which I know what, and her front part was driven quite under—Mary half-way and that the vessel would sink, and the captain, crew and passengers—all Frenchmen—went away in boats.

"Is it possible," I yelled, "that they deserted you two women?"

Mary Phillips replied that this was not the case. They had been implored to go in the boats, but the night was dark, the sea was rough and quicky, and she was sure the boat would upset before they had gone a hundred yards. Miss Nugent and she had agreed that it was much safer to remain on a large vessel like the Palatine, even if it were half-full of water, than to go out in the dark and strong space in a miserable little shell of a boat. The captain put down on his knees and implored them to go but they were resolute. He then declared that he would force them into the boat, but Mary Phillips declared that if he tried that she would shoot him; she had a pistol ready. Then when they had all got in the boats but only he, the captain, two of the men jumped on board again, threw their arms around him and carried him off, vowing that he should not lose his life on account of a pair of senseless Americans. A boat would be left, the men said, which they might use if they chose, but of course this was more a piece of sentiment than any thing else.

"And now you see," cried Mary Phillips, "I was right and they were wrong. This steamer has not sunk, and I have no manner of doubt that overnight we won't sway in those boats is now at the bottom of the sea."

This was indeed a wonderful story, and the fact that Bertha Nugent was on board a derelict vessel, and should happen to fall in with me on board of another was one of those events which corroborate that trite and backneyed adage, that truth is stranger than fiction.

It was surprising how plainly I could hear Mary Phillips across the smooth, still water. The ships did not now appear to be moving at all, but they were much nearer, and then I could talk with Bertha, and soon after (it must be so) I would be with her!

I inquired if they had food, and whatever else they needed, and Mary Phillips replied that with the exception of the blasting qualities of the ship they were very comfortable; that she did not imagine that Miss Nugent and that they lived a great deal better than they would on shore.

Mary also informed me that she had arranged a very nice couch for Miss Nugent on the afterdeck, that she was lying there now, and felt better; that she wanted to know which I thought the safer ship of the two; that when-ever a wind arose the two ships would be blown nearer each other, she believed to get up and talk to me herself.

I answered that I thought both the ships were safe enough and that I should be delighted to talk with Miss Nugent, but in my heart I could not believe that a vessel with her now so low as that of the Fidelco could be safe in bad weather, to say nothing of the possibility of a leak in the water-bursting into other compartments of the ship. The Spartan I believed to be in much better condition. Despite the fact that she was utterly helpless as far as sailing qualities were concerned, the greater part of her masts and rigging being in a wrecked condition, and her rudder useless, she did not appear to be damaged. I had no reason to believe that she leaked, and she seemed to be tight and to have sail, she lay rather deep in the water.

If the thing were possible, I intended to go on board the Spartan, and where there was hope that we could all remain safely until we were rescued. With this purpose in view, the moment Mary Phillips announced, I went below and prepared the captain's cabin for forward part and collected all the pipes, bottles and glasses, and such other things as were not suitable for a lady's apartment, and thoroughly aired the cabin, making it as neat and comfortable as circumstances permitted. The very thought of offering hospitality to Bertha was a joy.

I proposed to myself several plans to be used in case circumstances. If the two vessels approached near enough, I would throw a line to Lia Fidelcio, and Mary Phillips would make it fast, I knew. Then with a windlass I might draw the two vessels together. Then I would spring on board the steamer, and when I had transferred Bertha and Mary to the Sparhawk, would cut loose La Fidelcio and let her go where she would.

It was possible that I might convey from the vessel to the other nothing but articles of luxury or necessity, but on this point I would not come to any definite conclusion. I would consult Mary Phillips on the subject.

Another plan was that if we did not approach very close, I would endeavor to bring a line from one steamer to the other, and Mary Phillips would attach it to the hook which hung from the davits. Into this she would put a pair of oars and lower it as well as she could, then I would haul it to the Sparhawk, row over to the steamer, and transfer Bertha and Mary to my vessel. It was possible that she would not have to be very close for this plan to work, but I thought I had been a seaman, I might have thought of some other plan better than those. But I was not a seaman.

I did not waste any time in the cabin, although I was very desirous to make it as pleasant as possible for the reception of Bertha when I returned to the deck I was astonished to find that the steamer was farther away than it had been when I went below. There was no slight breeze from the east, which had nearly turned into Sparhawk above with her bow to the wind, but was gently carrying La Fidelcio before it.

I seized the speaking trumpet, and with all my power hailed the steamer.

And in return came to me, after a single second, the sound of the vowel "O." I could see two handkerchiefs fluttering upon the steamer. The ships had now grown very considerable.

Half-crazed, I shouted and gasped, and gasped, and gasped at the distance steamer. Then, in a high state of excitement, I perceive that she was not becoming more distant. Then, I began to hope. Another wind might bring her nearer. She would bring her back. . . .

And in a minute or two the other wind did spring up. I felt it in my face, and I felt the ship "tackling" to it, and towards it, and, enraptured, sighted the steamer with my Herbon on board began to move slowly but surely to me.

The wind which was now blowing came, from the southwest, and La Fidelcio, which before had lain in the trough of the sea, was now heading to the south of my vessel. Nearer and nearer she came, and then she which must soon complete the voyage that she might not pass under my north.

Then, soon, my wish unless the wind changed the steamer would probably pass within hailing distance.

REPRESENTATIVE SIMONS gets some important committee assignments, among them bolng on banks and banking and drainage.

AUTHORITY kerosene has been advanced another cent the past week we have heard of no college receiving a million dollar endowment.

A MAN with a three days' supply of anthracite on hand and no more in sight is in no condition to discuss the coal question with equanimity. Therefore we pass.

IF a now gross earnings bill is to be submitted to the people, why shouldn't the legislature give it a fair chance by requiring only a majority of the votes cast to insure its adoption?

THERE seems to be quite an exodus of city newspaper men to the country, as five or six good inland weeklies have been transferred during the past month to men formerly engaged on the Twin City dailies.

THE Polk county grand jury has brought in a reportin which various county officials are severely arraigned for loose and irregular business methods. The reform wave is spreading, and better government for more than one county in northwestern Minnesota promises to be the outcome.

THE census shows that there are in the United States 2,000,000 more bachelors than spinsters, and the Chicago Chronicle adds: "Judiciously used, this information should enable the spinsters to direct the thoughts of the bachelors to more serious matters than ping-pong and theatre parties."

MAJOR SCOTT, the Indian agent, is emitting a wild howl anent the intermittent pigs so readily procured by his charges at Walker. The Major should move to Thief River Falls. Most of the aboriginal inhabitants up there lead an earnest and consistent life and few of them have been worse than reasonably sober for years.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR JOHNS has announced his committee assignments, and Senator Swedback is made chairman of the committee on agriculture and a member of the committees on canals, drainage, internal improvements, logs and lumber, public lands, roads and bridges, retrenchments and reforms, towns and counties.

FARMS in Illinois are now selling as high as $150 per acre, and the rents paid for such farms are up to $6 per acre. A quarter-section of this land will buy six quarters of good farm land in Red Lake county, and for stock-raising and general farming the latter is just as good. No wonder eastern farmers of limited means are coming to this country.

AN interstate commerce commissioner has figured out that if the anthracite coal combine advances the price of that commodity to the consumer one dollar per ton it levies upon the poverty of this country which uses that coal a tax of fifty millions of dollars annually in favor of the wealth which engineered and profits by that combine.

IN a news item concerning a local horse-whipping episode, Editor Schaeffer of the Adrian Democrat gives a piece of good advice: "Any young man who will say things calculated to injure a young woman's reputation ought to be whipped even if he speaks the truth. If what he says is true he should keep it to himself; if he lies the whip is too good for him."

THE workhouse board at Toledo has issued an order setting at liberty all prisoners held for stealing coal from the railway tracks and yards. The order includes directions to the superintendent to receive no more prisoners from any court sending them in for petty coal thefts. It is explained that no prosecutions for coal thefts will be recognized by the board during the coal famine.

OLD PEASE, of the Anoka Union, is again indulging his propensity for political prognostications. He predicts that Bob Dunn will be the Republican candidate for governor, and that Joel Heatwole will be chairman of the state committee in order to further a candidacy for United States senator. Pease is right sometimes, but not always. In the meantime it is well to await developments.

THE legislature is listening to the suggestion that the selection of county superintendent be left to the voters of the common districts. There is no valid reason why this change should not be made. The residents of the independent districts have no more right to a voice in the selection of a county superintendent than the people of Crookston would have in voting for a mayor of St. Paul.

IT is reported from St. Paul that the statute revision committe is in favor of recommending that the primary election law be so amended that all tickets be printed on one ballot—the[voter, however, being] allowed to vote for candidates of only one party. This change should commend itself to the voters. The main objection to the primary law has been the necessity of the voter disclosing his political affiliation.

THE Big Fork Compass, published at Ripple, Itasca county, is a new candidate for public favor. A. M. Greeley, whose versatile "Backwoods Sketches" in the Bemidji Pioneer have brought him statewide fame, is the editor, proprietor, reporter, compositor, devil, and general handy man. We trust the Compass will live long to point out through sorrow's gloom the cheerful prospect that shines beyond.

ONE of the governors in the Philippines proposes to adopt the reconcentration policy in dealing with the ladrone element in his province, and in defense of the system this official says that property administered "with the appliance of hus[ness methods to crush disorder; it is a commonsense, thorough and commendable method of cleaning up lan affected district." How soon we forgot! Ere long we may be expected to erect monuments to the memory of General Weyler, the humanitarian of the Cuban revolution!

THE members of the legislature are reported to be very much exercised because the Northern Pacific limited their passes to the end of the legislative session. This illustrates more forcibly than ever the need of a law forbidding public officials accepting gratuities from persons or corporations which in any way come under jurisdiction of the law-making bodies of the state. But this sort of doctrine is now laughed at by the general public, and the legislator who would refuse a railroad pass is set down as a "chump" of the first water. Verily, there are degrees of official rectitude.

"THE people in the region north of Crookston through their personal representative, Mayor Kratka," is the way a Crookston paper refers to the Thief River Falls delegation at Washington. This is eminently characteristic of Crookston. The disposition of that burg to sit and watch their neighborn hustle only to rise up and claim the whole thing after results are accomplished is what endears them to the rest of the community. This same disposition was the prime cause for the existence of Red Lake county and is for Columbia county and will be for Valley county. Thief River Falls was doing all the reservation agitation while the hard knocks were being exchanged. Now that victory is all but here it is "the people in the region north of Crookston."

A BETTER DAY AT HAND.

Thomas A. Edison the electrical wizard, is the most encouraging optimist of the present time. He predicts that wonderful discoveries will be made and put into practical use during the next few years. He thinks that space and time will be practically annihilated so far as communication between people of the earth are concerned. The horse as a beast of burden of traffic will disappear and the steam locomotive will be a back number, while wireless telegraphy will be a success. In addition to all this, medicine will give way to surgery and diet. If all this does not happen during the year, it will in a comparatively short time. His new year's prediction is full of promise.

"I look for a wonderful year," said the wizard as he surveyed his surroundings. "There is more activity in science than there has ever been before, more men are working on big projects and great discoveries would be only natural.

"For myself, my storage battery, on which I have worked for four years, will be put on the market this month. It solves the traction problem and its introduction means that the horse will have to go.

"The newspapers are among the great agents that will grow better in 1903 and in the years to come. They are the great school. A man who does not read the newspapers might as well be dead. They are a power, an influence for advancement. They are getting better, they are printing more science and paying more attention to the things that benefit and improve humanity.

"There will be few more wars. The world seems to be tending to peace. We should have a great navy, one three times as large as the present—not to fight but to have ready in case there should be a fight. A great navy is one of the greatest stimulants to science.

"As to books, the books of today are more to my liking than the old books. It is solid with painting. It is a great time, great things are being done, and it is impossible to prophesy. Better health, greater enlightenment, better facilities of living are being placed in our reach every day."

with local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials, free. F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. Sold by all druggists, price 75c. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Mr. Louis Falardeau returned from Red Lake Falls where he went to be sworn in as county commissioner, but also attended to some county affairs.

Finds Way to Live[Long.

The startling announcement of a Discovery that will surely lengthen life is made by editor O. H. Downey, of Chamberlain, Ind. "I wish to state," he writes, "that Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption is the most infallible remedy that I have ever known for coughs, colds and grip. It's invaluable to people with weak lungs. Having this wonderful medicine 50-one-need dread pneumonia or consumption. Its relief is instant and cure certain." W. A. Schreiner guarantees every 50c and $1.00 bottle, and gives trial bottles free.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

When a man marries his debts begin.

Most men find it easy to make love to all women except their wives.

The girl who thinks too much of herself will never get anybody else to.

New York Press: A girl's education should begin where charity does—at home.

It takes very little oil to burn the lamp of love but the wick must always be fresh and well trimmed.

Give a woman a looking glass and she would enjoy wearing fine clothes if there were nobody else in the world to see her.

The man who always tells his wife he is sorry he was cross when she scolded him is bound to get along in the world by making friends.

When a girl comes out of a corner where she has been alone with a man you can always tell whether he has kissed her by the way she looks as if he hadn't.

A man can never make a woman sure he loves her unless he makes her believe that he doesn't think some other woman pretty who she knows is pretty.

One reason why bad boys don't get caught with the old trick of giving them a Bible with money between the leaves is because they fling it into a corner, and the money falls out.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from strangulation, says A. L. Spafford, postmaster, Chester, Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and repeated often. It relieved the swelling and inflammation, cut the mucous and shortly the child was resting easy and speedily recovered. It cures coughs, colds, la grippe, and all throat and lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure lingers in the throat and chest and enables the lungs to contribute their health-giving oxygen to the blood. A. L. Reichert, Druggist.

"In Rome Do As The Romans Do."

Exchange: We have not much patience with the old farmer who, moving to town to spend his declining years, makes a specialty of growling at the taxes imposed upon him. Municipal government is of necessity more costly than that of the township. If the town schools are better than those of the country, they cost more money to maintain. If the town has lighted streets and fire protection, they cannot be had for nothing. If a towel there are two demands upon a man's time and pocketbook on public account where there is one in the country. So our friends from the country who move into our towns and cities will best enjoy life themselves and they in the greatest degree will be valued and appreciated by town people if they will avoid fault finding at the necessary money cost of the privileges and attractions which draw them there and instead lend a responsive and liberal aid to to all legitimate things conducive to the best interests of the town. If they must grumble, a 40-acre tract in the country is the place on which to do it.

The Result of Cultivation.

Southwest Missouri was once a rock covered and almost barren district; today, it is known as one of the finest fruit-producing sections in the United States and its fruit is known from coast to coast. With human beings the results of careful training are even more marked. The man who will use golden grain belt beer regularly, together with regular exercise in the open air, can develop his body and mind to the highest state of perfection. It is brewed from pureest barley malt and hops and should be in every home. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

Mother

"My mother was troubled with consumption for many years. At last she was given up to die. Then she tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was speedily cured."
D. P. Jolly, Avoca, N. Y.

No matter how hard your cough or how long you have had it, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best thing you can take. It's too risky to wait until you have consumption. If you are coughing today, get a bottle of Cherry Pectoral at once.

Three sizes: 25c., 50c., $1. All druggists.

Consult your doctor. If he says take it, then do as he says. If he tells you not to take it, then you must not. Leave it with him. We are willing.

We deliver to any part of the city free of charge. Call us up by 'phone and your orders will be attended to.—Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

H. P. Luce, of St. Paul, has been re-rating the city this week for the R. G. Dun mercantile agency. This is Mr. Luce's first visit here since 1888, and as Main street has moved several times and a good many metropolitan airs have been donned since then he is not to be blamed for failing to recognize the embryo hamlet of fifteen years ago.

A North Dakota man went with his wife to visit her physician. The doctor placed a thermometer in the woman's mouth. After two or three minutes, just as the physician was about to remove the instrument, the man, who was not used to such a prolonged spell of brilliant silence on the part of his life's partner, said: "Doc, what'll you take for that thing?"

Fire broke out in John Morgan's saloon building at Thief River Falls Wednesday morning and spread to the Delmonico restaurant, both of the buildings being practically ruined. The drug stock of D. P. Curtis in the adjoining building was removed from the building which at one time seemed doomed, and considerable loss was occasioned by the removal.

Prof. Clint O. Smith came in from Reynolds Tuesday and remained three evenings to put the finishing touches on the band for the concerts next week. The Prof. were an unusually cheerful smile this visit, and the reason was apparent when he informed a reporter that he had two tons of hard coal stored away for use at his home in Reynolds. No wonder he smiled.

Horace Bagley, president and cashier of the Mouse River Bank at Towner, N. D., was the guest of Red Lake Falls friends last Friday. Mr. Bagley was formerly engaged in the practice of law at Thief River Falls, and has hosts of friends over the county. The COURIER is glad to learn that Howe is on the high wave of prosperity, and the people of that neck o' the woods may be justly proud in securing him as a citizen.

V. M. Higinbotham, who recently acquired the dignity of a Benedict, gave his former fellow-boarders and a few friends an oyster supper at the Dautremont home Friday evening. "Hig" was not there himself, but he was ably represented by the junior member of the firm, S. L. Lewis. The letter from the host read just before the repast contained a "hit" for each one of the congenial party which feeds at the house of Dautremont, and put them all in prime condition to enjoy the more substantial part of the menu.

Speaking of what a newspaper does for its community, a late prominent man said: "Each year every local paper gives from $500 to $5,000 in free lines for the benefit of the community where it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor is proportionately a means does more for his town than any other man, and with all fairness, more than he ought to be supported, not because you happen to to like him, or happen to admire his writings, but because a local paper is the best investment a community can make."

Blessings, as well as misfortunes, sometimes come in pairs, and this is particularly true in Dr. J. C. Wilkinson's case, as a pair of baby girls came to his home last Friday morning. Each weighed 6½ pounds, and they are so much alike in appearance that Doc is' reminded of the story of tweedledee and tweedledum. A little boy of our acquaintance, however, isn't assured of the Doctor's good faith, as he said upon learning of the arrival of the twins: "I just know one of the girls was intended for some other family and the doctor never gave it to them!"

A deal was closed Tuesday whereby T. G. Brunelle, recently of Crookston became the owner of a half interest in the harness business of J. E. Remick. Mr. Brunelle was formerly a resident of Red Lake Falls and is well known to most of the people here. He is an A 1 harness maker, a good business man and will make a splendid addition to the business circles of the city. The new firm expects to add a large amount of new stock and in other ways place themselves in a position to handle the large spring trade. THE COURIER bespeaks for them a fair share of the public patronage.

Messrs. Anderson & Schwalen announce that the next number of the entertainment course will be on Wednesday evening, February 4, at which time that well known speaker, Rev. Father J. M. Cleary, of Minneapolis, will lecture to the people of Red Lake Falls. Father Cleary is one of the best public speakers in Minnesota and the people of Red Lake Falls should take advantage of this opportunity of hearing him. Following Father Cleary will come a lecture by Prof. R. Watson Cooper, on the evening of March 24. Prof. Cooper is also well and favorably known throughout this state, and our people can be assured of a good evening's entertainment.

The new officers of Clearwater lodge No. 133, I. O. O. F., were installed at the regular meeting Saturday night. James E. Ford, district deputy, was the installing officer, and he was assisted by Past Grands Borghers, Jeffers, Reichel and Hanson. The new officers are F. A. Whiteley, noble grand; Henry Hehnemuth, vice grand; William Schwalen, recording secretary; James E. Ford, financial secretary; P. E. Pirathi, treasurer. Grip Brought On Sciatic Rheumatism.

Nervous Prostration Followed.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Gave Back Health.

"I was laid up during the winter of 94-95 with sciatic rheumatism and nervous prostration brought on by a severe attack of La Grippe. The rheumatic pains were so severe at times that it was impossible for me to turn in bed. I was unable to sleep. I had to be waited on like a child. Several doctors took all the advertised remedies for troubles of this kind but gotten help whatever until I took Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Six bottles restored me to health; I am better than for years; in fact am entirely relieved. I can say with a clear conscience that it was Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine that restored me to health. When the pains of sciatica and rheumatism were most severe I received almost immediate relief by the use of Dr. Miles' Pain Pills. I have recommended Dr. Miles' Remedies to many people."—Fred Myers, Redfield, S. D.

"I was taken with pain in my heart and under the left shoulder; with such heavy oppressed feeling in my chest that I could hardly breathe. I had palpitation so bad and my heart would throb so that it would shake my whole bed. I also had a weak, allgone feeling in the region of my heart. My doctor treated me for liver and stomach trouble but I failed to receive any benefit until a friend recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine. I used one bottle and felt relieved. I used two bottles and Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. I believe I am completely and permanently cured."—Mrs. J. W. Holding, Mishawaka, Ind.

Venezuela Will Only Pledge Payment of Customs Receipts to Settle Claims of Powers.

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN MINISTER BOWEN.

Negotiations Relative to Raising the Blockade Going On in Italy—The United States Minister Given an Ovation by Officials and Citizens When Leaving Carracas.

Paris, Jan. 13.—A Caracas dispatch to the Matin says United States Minister Bowen, who is to conduct the arbitration negotiations at Washington in behalf of Venezuela, is empowered to pledge customs receipts to Venezuela, as a guarantee for the payment of the British, Germna and Italian claims. On behalf of Venezuela he will refuse to apologize for the outrage on the German legation. He has full instructions as to Venezuela's grievances in the matter of the fitting out in England of the rebel warship Ibn Bigh, now the Bolivar, and other counter claims.

Question of Guarantees.

Rome, Jan. 13.—Negotiations between the cooperating powers relative to raising the blockade of the Venezuelan coast are proceeding, the main point being the question of guarantees for the payment of claims should the warships be withdrawn.

The Italian foreign office recognizes the correctness of the contention in Secretary Hay's last note, that a continuance of the blockade will only further imperorish Venezuela and make the settlement of the claims more difficult, and is desirous of meeting the suggestion of the United States. At the same time it cannot act without an agreement with Germany and Great Britain.

Wait on Bowen.

Caracas, Jan. 13.—The Venezuelan foreign office has been informed by the legation at Washington that the blockade of Venezuelan ports by the allies will not be raised, if at all, before the arrival of Mr. Bowen, the United States minister, at Washington, to continue the negotiations with the ambassadors of the powers interested. It is not expected that Mr. Bowen will reach the American capital before January 17.

Given an Ovation.

La Guayra, Jan. 13.—United States Minister Bowen left Caracas Sunday morning at eight o'clock for La Guayra on his way to Washington. President Castro, all the members of the ministry, the leaders of Caracas society and all the German residents of the city, the British colony and other foreigners assembled at the railroad station to bid him farewell. There was also a large gathering of the general public. The English residents of Caracas, led by Mr. Almond, superintendent of the Caracas-LaGuayra railroad; Mr. Wallis, manager of the telephone company, and Mr. Cherry, presented Mr. Bowen with an address thanking him for the services he had rendered the community. The train bearing the minister reached here at 11:30. He was received by the local officials and officers from the Dolphin. As Mr. Bowen left the wharf in a launch he was reclaimed by the people of this port. He boarded the Dolphin, which was anchored in the entrance of the harbor at noon, and received a salute of 16 guns. The Dolphin then left for the north.

Was Well Known.

Marion, O., Jan. 13.—Dr. Oliver Wendell Weeks, past surgeon general of the national encampment, and well known to all grand army men, died here yesterday after a lingering illness, aged 62 years.

Little Girl Takes Poison.

Ottumwa, Ia., Jan. 13.—Because, it is said, her mother refused to allow her to play with certain girls, Lydia Dwyer, ten years old, committed suicide by drinking acid.

WORK DONE IN CONGRESS.

Question of Removal of Duty on Coal Comes Up in the Senate—House Does Little Business.

Washington, Jan. 13.—Senator Stewart, of Nevada, who is conducting the coal investigation before the committee of the District of Columbia, introduced a resolution Monday, providing that the committee shall be authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths and compel the attendance of witnesses.

The Vest resolution, directing the committee on finance to report a free coal bill, was then called up. Senator Aldrich announced that there were strong hopes that action with respect to a removal of the duty on anthracite coal will be taken elsewhere, and he asked that the resolution go over. Senator Vest vigorously objected, saying that he had no assurance that anything will be done in any other place. "Circumstantial evidence," he said, "is strongly against any such assumption." The resolution went over. Senator Mitchell (Ore.) submitted the report of the committee of the senate on its investigation of affairs in the Hawaiian islands.

Washington, Jan. 14.—When the house met Monday the desk of the late Representative Tongue, of Oregon, who died suddenly in this city Sunday, was heavily draped with black and covered with flowers. Chaplain, in his invocation, referred feelingly to the loss the house had sustained and prayed for the bereaved widow and children.

The diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was reported.

Mr. Grosvenor (O.), from the committee on rules, called up the resolution of the committee on merchant marine and fisheries, providing for an investigation by that committee into the coal situation, and it was adopted without debate.

Mr. Moody (Ore.) then announced the death of his colleague, Representative Tongue, and offered the customary resolutions of regret, which were adopted. The speaker appointed a committee to attend the funeral services and then, at 12:10 p. m., as a further mark of respect, the house adjourned.

Favors Cuban Reciprocity.

Washington, Jan. 13.—President Roosevelt had a long conference with Representative Babcock, of Wisconsin, who has just returned from Cuba. Mr. Babcock told the president that he was heartily in favor of the ratification of the pending Cuban reciprocity treaty, particularly as he regarded ratification as a great stroke of business policy for the United States.

Beecher Memorial Assured.

New York, Jan. 13.—Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, speaking in Plymouth church Sunday of the great interest shown in the movement for a Beecher memorial building, said letters had been received from all parts of the country promising subscriptions and support. E. B. Kenney, chairman of the fund, said there could be no doubt as to the success of the project.

Bailey Inaugurated.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 13.—The inaugural ceremony of Governor-elect W. J. Bailey and other state officers took place at the Auditorium Monday, beginning promptly at noon. Gov. W. E. Stanley, its retiring executive, made a brief speech, followed by the inaugural address of the new governor.

Big Insurance Policy.

Philadelphia, Jan. 12.—John M. Mack, financier and street railway magnate, becomes one of the five most heavily insured men in the country when a policy of $1,000,000 on his life was issued by the Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance company, of this city.

Thirty Years Without Pay.

Philadelphia, Jan. 13.—Rev. Dr. H. S. Hoffman, who for 30 years has not accepted a penny of salary in the various churches where he has labored, has announced his resignation as pastor of the Reformed Episcopal church of Our Redeemer.

SAY THAT WAGE STATEMENTS ARE FINAL

Mr. Culver States Some Interesting Facts Concerning the Price of Coal—Statement Submitted Showing Number of Days Collieries Were Idle in 1901.

Philadelphia, Jan. 12.—Brig. Gen. Wilson again presided at Monday's session of the anthracite coal strike commission, Chairman Gray still being confined to his home by illness.

Abel L. Culver, of New York, comptroller of the Delaware & Hudson company, who was on the witness stand when the commission adjourned Saturday, was called upon to testify Monday. Mr. Culver said that the wage statements handed in on Saturday are final and that the miners' representatives have agreed that they are a fair presentation of the case. The statements show that six per cent. of the company's men receive over $1,000 a year; three per cent., from $1,000 six per cent., $900 to $1000; six per cent., $700 to $800; 13 per cent., $600 to $700; 12 per cent., $500 to $600; ten per cent., $400 to $500; nine per cent., $300 to $400; nine per cent., $300 to $300, and 26 per cent., received under $200.

Disputes Mitchell.

Mr. Culver disputed the accuracy of Mr. Mitchell's statement that anthracite miners receive less than the same class of workmen in the soft coal fields. The witness said the company is making a determined effort to lessen child labor.

Number of Idle Days.

A statement was also submitted showing the number of days of ten hours each the 28 collieries were idle during the year 1901, for which the employees were responsible. It showed, that 125 days were lost because of pleules and other holidays, not including legal holidays; 75 days were lost on account of "Mitchell day" and other union days, and 194 days on account of strikes and suspensions, a total of 368 days.

Raised Price of Coal.

Mr. Culver was cross-examined by C. S. Darrow, for the miners, who asked the witness if the company raised the price of coal 50 cents after the strike ended, and he replied that it had, and that so far as he knew the price was still maintained. In answer to other questions Mr. Culver said that the company was selling coal at tidewater at five dollars a ton for prepared sizes. The company sells it to what he termed middlemen. He had no information as to what prices the middlemen were getting for coal beyond what the newspapers are publishing about fancy prices. The employes of the company are receiving their coal supply at a figure materially nader that which the public gets it.

Compelled to Join Union.

Thomas R. Thomas, outside foreman of the Jermyn mine of the Delaware & Hudson company, said he had much trouble with men who refused to load more than a certain number of mine cars. He read a resolution, alleged to have been adopted by local union No. 1023, to the effect that any member guilty of loading more than his share of cars should be expelled from the union. The tools of two men who did not abide by this resolution, he said, were destroyed and the home of one of them was dynamited. He said contract miners averaged about four hours a day. He said that he had trouble with men under him in the mine and that they were compelled to the union, but they told him they were compelled to belong to it.

Henry Gilbert and Michael McHale corroborated Mr. Thomas' testimony relative to the loading of cars. A recess was then taken.

Killed in Jumping.

St. Louis, Jan. 12.—Fire broke out in a negro lodging house in West Pine street and Mrs. Helen Brown and her daughter, Eugenia, were killed by jumping from an upper floor. Jennie Williams was badly injured by jumping. The other 21 lodgers escaped, having only their night clothes.

Ordered to Work.

Webster City, Ia., Jan. 13.—Miners at the Lehigh mines, who were on a strike Saturday, have been ordered back to work Monday by John C. Dewe, president of the Miners' union of Iowa. They obeyed and the mines are running again at full capacity.

Coal Strike Bonds.

Williamsport, Pa., Jan. 13.—Hilliard Probst and Ira Green were crushed to death between moving coal cars in Tangen, Clinton county. The two men got into a small space prior to digging coal for the use of their families when a roof caved in, killing them.

Bond Issue Defeated.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 13.—Judge Hazen, in the district court has decided that the $500,000 bond issue in the public schools of Kansas and also that Sunday theaters could be held in Topeka without molestation. Both cases were vigorously contested.

Delaware's Tribute for Fair.

St. Louis, Jan. 13.—It is stated that the reproduction of King Solomon's temple on a large scale will be one of the attractions of the Louisiana Purchase exposition, the acceptance of this concession now being practically assured.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Gave Back Health.

"I was laid up during the winter of 94-95 with sciatic rheumatism and nervous prostration brought on by a severe attack of La Grippe. The rheumatic pains were so severe at times that I was impossible for me to turn in bed. I was treated by three physicians in our best quarters to attendance, took all the advertised remedies for troubles of this kind but gained no relief whatever until I took Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Six bottles restored me to health; I am better than for years, in fact am entirely relieved. I can say with a clear conscience that it was Dr. Miles' Nervine after more than one physician me to health. When the pains of sciatica and rheumatism were most virulent I found immediate relief in Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. Dr. Miles' Remedies to many people."—Fred Myers, Readell, S. D.

"I was taken with pain in my heart and under the left shoulder; with such heavy oppressed feeling in my chest that I could hardly breathe. I had palpitation so bad and my heart would throb so that it would shake my whole bed. I also had sweat, allgone feeling in the region of my heart. My doctor treated me for two years, but found no relief. I was induced to try Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Restorative Nervine. I used both and one box of the Anti-Pain Pills. I believe I am completely and permanently cured.—Mrs. J. W. Long, Noblesville, Ind.

DETERMINED TO HAVE COAL

Residents of Arcola, Ill., Secure a Supply by Seizing a Train of Sixteen Car Loads.

FUEL FAMINE LEADS TO CONFISCATION.

Situation in Many Localities is Most Serious—Great Suffering Is Reported—National Convention to Be Held in Washington to Urge Need for Immediate Relief.

Arcola, Ill., Jan. 13.—Arcola, which during the last two weeks has suffered a coal famine, now has coal to burn. Saturday morning an Illinois Central train loaded with 16 big cars of coal stopped here for a few minutes to repair the engine. The coal was immediately confiscated by a body of citizens. Efforts to buy the coal from the railway company were fruitless, and the crowd, which had by this time increased to 500 or 600 people, set to work to unload the coal. Many prominent citizens assisted in the raid. Farmers bringing corn to town were persuaded to turn their wagons into drays and assist in hauling coal to those most in need. Several hundred wagons were hauled around the train in the course of the day. The coal was distributed in ton lots. A weigher was secured and a strict account kept in hopes of making satisfactory settlement with the company which owns the coal.

Situation in Chicago Serious.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—With the mercury below zero and likely to sink further in the early hours of the coal famine is reported to be growing worse, or at least more keenly felt. The big office buildings, the schools, the county institutions and hundreds of residences and tenement houses have almost no fire and can get hardly any coal.

Philadelphia Shivers.

Philadelphia, Jan. 13.—This city, the greatest coal center in the world to-day, is cold. The suffering among the poor is very great. People who are able to burn gas are in that way keeping from freezing. Those who cannot afford gas are in a deplorable state. The demand for oil heaters is immense. Absolutely nothing has been done by the municipality to relieve the distress, and charitable organizations are able only to carry out their usual programmes.

Misery at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, Jan. 13.—Cold and hunger have found many poor, starving mortals in Cincinnati during the last few days. Inexcusable prices for coal are able allies of the cruel wind. The demand for aid from the local charitable institutions has increased greatly.

St. Paul id Sore Plight.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 13.—In half of the homes in St. Paul the members of the household use the kitchen almost entirely. The coal famine is responsible for this condition of affairs, and, according to the local dealers, the residents of St. Paul are just beginning to feel the famine. Coal dealers say: "We have no hard coal, and it is a guess when we will have any." As high as $20 per ton was offered by those who needed coal.

National Relief Convention.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—A national convention at Washington for the purpose of impressing on President Roosevelt the urgent need for immediate relief from the stringency of the coal situation was decided on Saturday at a conference in the Grand Pacific hotel. The call for the extraordinary gathering will be issued by Mayor Maybury, of Detroit, acting as chairman of the permanent committee of the Detroit coal convention. It was this committee which agreed on the necessity for a national meeting at the capital.

Cold in Ohio.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 13.—The lowest temperature of the winter was recorded here early Monday, when the government thermometer indicated four degrees below zero. At other points in northern Ohio the temperature fell to eight below. During the night the wind reached a velocity of 44 miles an hour from the west, and combined with the extremely low temperature and scarcity of fuel in many quarters, caused much suffering.

Michigan Has Zero Weather.

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 13.—Following on the heels of the most severe snowstorm of the season Sunday, came the coldest night of the winter in this city. At 7:30 Monday morning the thermometer registered five below zero. The zero temperature was general all over the lower peninsula below Alpena, with the exception of a section close to the shore of Lake Michigan, near Grand Haven.

Out of Fuel.

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 13.—Zero weather prevailed in Kansas City at seven o'clock Monday morning, a fall of 11½ degrees in the past 12 hours. There is no prospect of moderation and suffering because of lack of fuel will, prove severe. The supply of coal in Kansas City, which was short on Saturday, had diminished greatly over Sunday. Similar conditions exist at all points throughout this part of the southwest.

Suffering in Iowa.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 13.—Extreme cold has prevailed throughout Iowa for 30 hours, the temperature ranging from zero to six below, accompanied by considerable wind. It was three below zero here Monday morning. Hard coal cannot be obtained and the soft coal supply is exhausted in many places, resulting in much suffering.

Cold in Wisconsin.

Milwaukee, Jan. 13.—Five below zero is the weather record for Milwaukee. Forecast Official Wilson predicts that the cold weather will moderate by Tuesday. Reports from various parts of the state are to the effect that zero weather is general.

Seven Below in Indiana.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 13.—At seven o'clock Monday morning the official temperature was seven below. The indications are for fair weather and slowly rising temperature.

MAKE THEIR REPORT.

Senate Committee That Visited Hawaiian Islands Makes Public the Result of Investigations.

Washington, Jan. 13.—The senate committee on Porto Rico and the Pacific islands met Monday to receive the report of the subcommittee appointed at the close of the last session of congress to investigate conditions in the Hawaiian islands. The visit to the islands was made last September, and covered 25 days, during which time 43 meetings were held and 170 witnesses were interrogated.

The investigation was general and covered all questions with which the government possibly could be concerned, including the laws, local and federal, and their execution, the public lands, labor, the plantations, the harbors, taxation, the leprosy settlement, Queen Liliuokalani's claims and other subjects.

Much diversity of opinion was found in the territory as to whether the control of the settlement should be retained by the territorial government, though all the territorial officers were found to be favorable to such retention. The committee takes strong grounds in favor of a change.

The committee finds that Queen Liliuokalani had no personal interest in the crown lands which have been claimed for her, but only an official interest during her reign. Such interest would have entitled her to the rental of the lands, and the committee finds that from the time of the disfranchisement in 1893 to September 1 last the rental would have amounted to $175,000. In view of all the circumstances the committee recommends that as an act both of justice and national grace and wisdom that the senate consider with favor, on the lines indicated in this report, the claim of the former queen, now a loyal private citizen of the United States, and make reasonable provision for her.

TENANTS ARE HOPEFUL.

Land Conference Agreement Promises to Bring About Permanent Peace in Agrarian, Ireland.

New York, Jan. 13.—The most notable event that has occurred in Ireland for several generations has been the agreement on the land question by representatives of landlords and tenants, according to a dispatch to the Tribune from London. Extreme landowners who at the outset of their movement to make the Dublin mansion house conference futile now see that the representatives of the tenants are more than willing to go half way in an endeavor to bring about a permanent peace in agrarian Ireland.

Chief Secretary Wyndham intends to make the most of the opportunity, and it is believed that Premier Balfour and the majority of the cabinet agree with the king that a great effort should now be made to settle the whole question. The tenants are now full of expectation and are looking forward to obtaining holdings on the terms laid down in the report.

Good Roads Convention.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Professor W. H. Moore, of the National Good Roads association, has issued a call for the "good roads" convention to be held in St. Louis on April 29 to May 2. The invitation is signed by governors of states, presidents of railroads and representatives of civic societies and business firms in a number of cities. Attention is called to the fact that the question of good roads has received more consideration in the last year than ever before.

Fire in South Haven.

South Haven, Mich., Jan. 13. — The Colonial hotel here and several other buildings were destroyed by fire Sunday night, the total losses aggregating about $50,000. Owing to a high wind the fire department had hard work preventing the destruction of the entire business portion of this town. Frozen hydrants caused a considerable delay before any streams could be turned on the flames.

Baby Burned to Death.

Cincinnati, Jan. 13.—Warren, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Gates, of Covington, Ky., was burned to death. The little fellow, with his older brother, Willie, aged five, had been left alone by their mother. They were sitting by an open fire and the baby tripped on a rug and fell into the fire.

Guilty of Murder.

West Superior, Wis., Jan. 13.—The jury in the trial of Jake Gustafson, after being out 40 hours, returned a verdict of murder in the second degree and recommended that he receive the limit of imprisonment, which is 25 years. Gustafson killed his friend, Isaac Risko, in a drunken quarrel, over 25 cents.

Chinese Students Admitted.

Washington, Jan. 13.—Kung Hsiang Hsi and Fei Chi Ho, the Chinese students whose exclusion by the treasury department has excited the interest of the missionary world, have finally been admitted to the country.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, thus justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLER WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next few years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $5,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time, if interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

Mr. Joseph Gaerard went to Terrebonne Tuesday.

Peter Gaerard was down from the woods to spend the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Desautel were visiting at Bridger last week.

Mr. Cyrille Lussier, our postmaster, was at Red Lake Falls, Tuesday.

A surprise party was to be given Saturday night, but on the refusal of two gents girls to be present it was given up. Those girls!

Ed. Hebert, Peter Guerard, Elrick Desautel and Moses Guerard have gone to the woods and will work to the music of their saws.

Mr. and Mr. Joe St. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Desautel and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Desautel have been visiting with Mr. Desautel's.

There are several cases of diphtheria in our vicinity. The latest case is of the little son of Philip Desautel and he is not improving very fast.

Miss Essie Tice, teacher in district 136, has returned from Mentor where she spent her vacation with her parents, and school reopened Monday.

A very pleasant evening was spent by some of our young people at the home of Edward Leroue of Terrebonne, last Tuesday night. Dancing was indulged in till the wee hours announced it time to go home.

A Scientific Discovery.

Kodol does for the stomach what which it is unable to do for itself, even when but slightly disordered or over-loaded. Kodol supplies the natural juices of digestion and does the work of the stomach, relaxing the nervous tension, while the inflamed muscles of that organ are allowed to rest and heal. HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Grady and Verne Healy.

The book-keeping class had a quiz this week.

The Seniors are going to give a class play some time in February.

The meeting last Friday was called to order by the new president.

The debate after the meeting last Friday was more interesting than the others.

The chemistry class had no recitation last Friday as Mr. Whiteley was not here.

Monday and Tuesday the Senior and Junior classes held joint sessions in chemistry.

Movement is still on foot to organize a base ball league between the high schools of the 9th district.

The opinion for the next debating society is "Resolved that the present system of peasions is desirable."

The Athenians have appointed a more industrious committee, and this week we will look for high school items in their paper.

Some of the lower rooms were dismissed this week, as the steam heating plant failed to keep their rooms comfortably warm.

The junior class of '09 met last Tuesday after school. The meeting was held in secret so we cannot say what took place.

Boys are bound to get into mischief some way, a farmer crossing the high school ground with a load of hay the last week found this to be all too true.

One of the high school girls did not go home to dinner on account of the cold and conditions brought it about so she did not get home till six o'clock that evening so she had our full sympathy.

Last Friday's debate was the best debate of the year as points will show. The Spartans won getting 14.78 points to the Athenians 12.34. The debate was close and exciting and neither side felt sure of the outcome.

Wednesday morning in the chemistry class, Mr. Whiteley was called down stairs, his instructions were to be as quiet as possible. When he came back he said the pupils must have been working hard as the air was full of moisture from escaped steam.

At a party which some of the high school boys attended, the boys stood up in a row and were auctioned off to the highest bidder. One of the boys was heard to say that it made him feel cheap to be sold. But we afterward learned that he was sold for 20 cents.

The Senior class will have a quiz in higher algebra next Friday. It is to be the last given by the high school faculty, and if the Seniors seem to feel sorry, it is only a blind, because algebra is the study that the present Senior mastered (if we may say mastered) with the most difficulty.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Saved by Nerve.

Pinned by his foot under the wreckage of his dismantled engine, near Dayton's bluff, St. Paul, with escaping steam scalding his flesh and slowly torturing him to death, Engineer C. J. Wood, of the Burlington road, searched his pockets for his knife and deliberately amputated his left foot at the ankle.

Crawling away from the fury of roaring steam he sat shivering in the rear of the smashing the flow of blood with a neckerchief until the crew of a wrecked switch engine with which an incoming freight train collided, and several switchmen and brakemen hurried to the scene and, placing him upon another engine, took him to the St. Paul union depot whence he was removed to St. Joseph's hospital.

The wreck occurred at 2:50 in the morning and was charged to the dense fog. The freight train of which Wood was engineer, was approaching the city. Fog, gray and heavy descended the switch lamps into faint glimmers and baffled the rays of the headlight. The rule glistened dimly with clinging moisture and the long train was sheathed with vapor.

Sold Gazelle.

Within a stone's throw of police headquarters, Minneapolis, two desperadoes entered a saloon, and, at the point of a revolver, commanded Gazelle Veasey, the proprietor of the place, to throw up his hands.

Veasey did as he was commanded, one of the robbers covered him with his revolver while his accomplice jumped behind the bar and rifled the cash drawer of its contents.

Simultaneously, Detectives Crummey and Brown passed through the saloon through a rear door and, with drawn revolvers, halted the two robbers and commanded them to drop their weapons. One of the desperadoes, Wm. English, who had been covering Veasey with his gun while his associate was gathering up the cash, wheeled around and opened his revolver directly at Detective Crummey.

One of the robbers was caught but the other escaped.

A Gambling Raid.

The city council and police force made a raid on the Northwest Hotel Tuesday and bagged an elaborate gamblers' outfit. The floor of the room in which the paraphernalia was found was thickly covered with heavy quilts and blankets, to prevent any noise from reaching adjoining rooms. Four arrests have been issued for the arrest of the gamblers. A confederate gave them the tip before the papers could be served and they immediately left for parts unknown. One of the saloonkeepers is under surveillance for running a gambling-room. If the case sent he person his license will be demanded immediately. Mayor Burlingame and Commissioner Ames are determined to rid the town of the gambling fraternity.

A Bad Fire.

An early morning fire, wiped out the Opera House block at Elk River, the biggest building in the town, entailed a loss of $54,000, partially covered by insurance of $36,800.

The flames were discovered at 3 o'clock in the morning in the basement of the hardware store of the Roberts Mercantile Company and rapidly spread through the block.

The volunteer fire department was inadequate to the emergency, as modern apparatus was lacking, but the citizens worked like Trojans to stay the flames, and by the time apparatus arrived from Minneapolis the fire was practically out.

Heavy Fending

Railway fire claims agents state that there are at the present time between 40,000 and 50,000 sheep being fed at the local and South St. Paul stockyards. The shipment of the sheep to Chicago and eastern markets will soon begin and will continue until the local yards are depleted.

The movement of the animals from the western ranges has been on heavy this year. It is ended, as is all live stock movement from that territory. The cattle shipments ended some time ago. Railway live stock men profess to be well pleased with the prospections of the live stock movement this year.

Prize Banners.

W. W. P. McConnell, state dairy and food commissioner, who has been detroctive banners, each awarded to Minnesota in recognition of the superiority of North Star butter. The third banner was won last October at Milwaukee at the annual convention of the National Creamery Buttermakers' association. Buttermakers from this state obtained the banner for the "highest average score."

Mr. McConnell will have ornamental cabinets made in which his trophies may be suitably displayed at the new state capitol.

News Notes.

Peter Grydehal, aged 75 years, died at the hospital in Duluth as the result of freezing his legs on Christmas night.

The regents of the university at a meeting elected Dean W. M. Liggett purchasing agent for the department of agriculture.

A movement is on foot to organize a lodge of Elks at Red Wing. There are about a dozen Elks in Red Wing, all belonging to the Minneapolis lodge and these will form the nucleus for an independent organization.

The new pipe organ for the Pauline church, St. Paul, arrived. It will require a month to put it in place. It is said to be the finest in the northwest.

The state health board sent a representative to Alexandria and Evansville to investigate the reported cases of unquarantined smallpox.

The total receipts of the Duluth United States land office for the last quarter amounted to $117,809.59.

A REAL OLD TIMER.

Amusing Incident at a California Political Meeting.

In the election campaign in California the "native son" issue played some part. Dr. George C. Pardee, the Republican candidate, is the first man born in the state who has been nominated for governor.

An incident occurred at one of Dr. Pardee's campaign meetings which caused some amusement. An aldtimer came up to shake hands with the candidate. He was introduced to the doctor as "one who came to the state earlier than you did."

"Glad to meet you, sir," responded Dr. Pardee, briskly. "I came to California in 1857; when did you arrive?"

"I came in '53," said the voter. "But you look much too young to have been in the '67 bunch."

"Well, when I came," said Dr. Pardee, "I had fewer clothes on than you had" and a sudden dawned on the old pioneer that he was talking to a "native son."—New York Tribune.

ANSWER WAS A POSER.

Wendell Phillips' Apt Reply to Pro-Slavery Minister.

A short time prior to the outbreak of the civil war, Wendell Phillips was touring through the West, making abolition speeches. On the same train one day was a pro-slavery Baptist minister from the South, who, on learning that Phillips was on the train entered his car and introduced himself. He then said, "And you are Wendell Phillips, I believe?" "Yes," replied Mr. Phillips. "Engaged in saving negroes from slavery, eh?" "Yes, sir." "Well, don't you go down South to save them?" Mr. Phillips replied: "Yes, I believe, sir, a minister of the gospel!" "Yes, sir." "Engaged in saving souls from hell?" "Yes, sir." "Well, why don't you go there and save them?"

Yerkes' Business Motto.

London papers have reached the United States with cables about Charles T. Yerkes. Here is one recorded by the Express: "C. T. Yerkes, the triumphant electric tube king, has a reputation for being thirsty when perhaps the explanation lies in a rule which he always observes. This is never to take more than one sitting at a time. He was asked the other day whether he was going to engage in any new schemes. 'If a man came to me with a guarantee that he could make $1,000 several times out of scrap iron,' he said, 'I would not join him or back him. One thing at a time has been my invariable rule.'"

Two of a Kind.

A Philadelphia physician tells the following story: About three weeks ago, while visiting the Zoo, he noticed an old colored man standing in front of one of the cages in the monkey house. The old man seemed to see in deep thought as he watched the antics of the denizens of the forest, and the physician, thinking he might gain some new ideas on the Darwinian theory, said to him: "Uncle, you seem to like monkeys, don't they, Uncle?" With a look of pity and scorn, the old man emphatically replied: "No, sah, deh ain't no mosh human dan I is!"

Woes of Turkish Editors.

All printing establishments in Turkey belong to a new law just passed, may have only one door, and that opening to the street. Windows must be covered with close-meshed wire netting, so that no papers can be handed through. A statement must be made a year in advance of the amount of paper required, which will be supplied by the state. A specimen of everything printed is to be kept, and must be shown at any time to a police inspector on pain of a fine.

Uncle Sam's Waste Basket.

A little more than 9,000,000 pieces of mail turned up at Uncle Sam's dead letter office last year. Letters and parcels to the number of 80,000 were opened, yielding $18,000 in cash and commercial paper of an aggregate face value of $1,250,000. Yet there are some people cruel enough to say that husbands who neglect to mail their wives' letters or the absent-minded people on earth. It will be consoling to the maligned to know there are others.—Omaha Bee.

When a Man is Drunk.

An English magistrate has added fresh fuel to the many judicial dicta on the subject of how to test whether a man is drunk or not. "Were you sober?" asked counsel of a witness in a case at Norwich. "Well, I knew what I was doing," replied the witness. "Ah," interrupted the recorder, "when a man is drunk and knows that he is drunk, then he is not drunk; but when he is drunk and does not know that he is drunk, then he is drunk, indeed."

A Child's View of it.

The mother of a little three-year-old son of a well-known public man was trying to explain to him about the seasons of the year. She told him the best she could, but the little fellow did not understand, so she went on to say that each year we have a new spring, a new summer, &c. The little man answered: "Oh, then we have twins in the calf of the leg."

Three Lions to Kill Panther.

At a menagerie in the Champs Elysees at Paris three lions managed to make their way into a neighboring cage in which a panther was lodged. A terrible fight ensued, and, despite the efforts of the keepers, the panther was literally torn to pieces by the intruders.

A Use for Cranks.

The Ohio penitentiary managers and economists, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, had been wondering what to do with the crusts of breads that are left out every time the 1,000 prisoners sit down to a meal. They finally decided to cut the crust off all bread and make the crust into bread pudding. Since this information has worked its way through the prison the piles of left-over crusts are daily increasing.

World Growing Very Small.

The British cable between Canada and Australia has been completed, and Marconi thinks he will soon open regular communication through the air between Nova Scotia and England. So the world grows smaller, in effect, and the brotherhood of the nations is brought nearer from out the dim future where poets have seen it in their dreams.

A Butterfly Farm.

Near Farnborough a farm exists for rearing moths and butterflies. Half an acre of land has been planted with trees and shrubs for the purpose. In their season the stock of caterpillars is brought nearer from out the dim future where poets have seen it in their dreams.

Increases Life of Railroad Ties.

The forcing out of sap from railroad ties with a solution of chloride of zinc embalms them at a cost of 12 cents each, increasing their lifetime in use from four years, the present limit, to about twelve years.

Stick to the Alleys.

Uncle Sam still has land enough to give us all a farm, more than 900,000,000 acres awaiting entry and settlement. But the inhabitants of the cities, who have grown to love the lights and the burdy-gurdies, stick to their alley homes.—Boston Globe.

CASES AGAINST GEO. A. RALPH DISMISSED

Sudden Termination of the Indictments Brought Against the Crookston Engineer.

The prosecution of the first of three indictments returned by the last grand jury against George A. Ralph for offering fraudulent bills to to the board of county commissioners of Polk county was called in Judge Watts' court Tuesday, and the case came to a sudden termination, being dismissed on motion of County Attorney Bove.

The Crookston Journal says the allegation in the indictment was that Mr. Ralph had on March last presented to the county of Red Lake a bill for the services of an assistant, J. A. McPhaul, for seven days' work at a rate of $2 per day and that fourteen days later he presented a bill to the commissioners of Polk county for the service of McPhaul as engineer at $5 per day covering the same identical dates.

Attorney General Douglass had assigned to A. Y. Merrill, of St. Paul, the task of assisting Mr. Rowe in the prosecution of the case, his experience being valuable in similar cases, notably that against Sheriff Meguarden, of Minneapolis, where the conditions were similar. The state claimed that the prosecution would not be confined to the evidence to show only partial facts in reference to the indictment, because a charge of that nature might stand ing alone, easily be the result of accident or mistake, and for the purpose of showing to the contrary the state should be entitled to show that a large number of other fraudulent charges had been presented to the county commissioners of Polk and Red Lake counties, to the state drainage board and also to the judicial ditch, in which case the officer allowing the bill is the judge of the court.

The state also claimed it had evidence of these facts which it desired to introduce.

The state claimed that Judge Watts having acted in this capacity as the officer authorized to allow claims on a judicial ditch, he would be a necessary and material witness for the state to prove allowance of these various bills on the judicial ditch which the state claimed contains fraudulent items. For this reason the state moved to change the place of trial to another judicial district, on account of the disqualification of Judge Watts, he being a witness.

On argument of this motion the Court decided that he was not disqualified, for the reason that upon trial of this indictment the state would not be permitted to show any false charges in any bills presented to any of the various boards included in the judicial ditch matter, but that the state would be confined in this trial to evidence of the one specific charge contained in the indictment.

Mr. Merrill, who was present on request of Attorney General Douglas, was of the opinion that under the ruling of the judge cutting out evidence there was not sufficient evidence to warrant a jury in a conviction on this specific charge, as it might easily be claimed that in this instance it was the result of accident or mistake in book-keeping.

Mr. Merrill claimed that not being able to rebut this presumption with evidence of innumerable other false charges, he would advise the county attorney to dismiss the cases as to all three indictments, as the others were in the same situation as this and the same ruling would apply. He also stated that he would withdraw from the cases himself.

Mr. Merrill's view of the case was concurred in by County Attorney Bove and he thereupon moved that there be a dismissal of the other indictments against Geo. A. Ralph on the ground that under the ruling of the Court the evidence obtainable is not sufficient to warrant a conviction, and the Court having practically decided that evidence of other like offenses cannot be introduced in this case. The motion for dismissal was granted.

New York to Paris by Land.

Mr. Harry de Windt has just returned from a trip from New York to Paris by land. Through Siberia the struggle was terrific. Over a distance of 1,500 miles he went by sleigh, using 735 horses to make the trip. Another 1,500 miles was made on reindeer sleds, which kept them in a reclining position for two months of steady travel. A man who has undergone such hardships feels confident of standing mostanything, but that is no reason why he should not fortify his constitution with golden grain belt beer. It is good for the healthiest or the sickest man. Order of your nearest dealer, or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

CLAPP'S RED LAKE BILL.

It Provides for the Sale of the Land at Public Auction.

Senator Clapp introduced his bill for the sale of eleven townships of the ceded Red Lake lands, about which there has been so much discussion lately. It provides for the sale at public auction of not more than 160 acres to each purchaser, one-fifth purchase money to be paid in cash and the balance in five equal annual installments.

Sections 16 and 36 of each township are to be reserved and patented to the state of Minnesota under the school grant. The bill also provides that the Indians are to remove to a diminished reserve within six months of the passage of the act, and are to be allowed to take allotments of 160 acres each on the diminished reserve.

They are also to be paid $20,000 for abandoned improvements and $300,000 of the proceeds of the sales are to be distributed per capita among them immediately after the sale and the remainder is fifteen annual installment. It is provided further that the Red Lake band is to hold the diminished reserve separate from any other band and is not to lose the rights accruing to it under the existing treaties. The bill will be referred to the secretary of the interior for report.

WILLIAM VAGUE INJURED.

Poplar River Farmer Seriously Hurt in Great Northern Wreck.

Adrian Democrat: Monday's Sioux City Journal contained an account of a wreck on the Great Northern near Holland, Minn., in which William Vague, who used to live on a farm east of Adrian, was dangerously hurt. Mr. Vague, who has been a resident of Red Lake county for the past two years, was shipping a carload of horses to Merrill, Iowa. He was in the caboose of the train, which was trying to make the siding at Holland, when in the midst of a snow storm it was overtaken by a passenger train, which crashed into the caboose, knocking it into splinters and throwing Mr. Vague and the conductor, who were the only occupants of the car, into the air. The conductor escaped with a few bruises, but Mr. Vague suffered such severe injury that he was placed in the passenger and taken to the hospital at Sioux City, where he is lying in a precarious condition.

Card of Thanks.

I desire to extend my heartfelt thanks to all the good friends and neighbors who have so generously assisted and sympathized with me in my recent bereavement. I am especially grateful for the kindly assistance of the members of the Society of St. Ann, who have done so much to alleviate the sorrow and anguish of the family of a dearly beloved wife and mother. May God in His infinite wisdom and justice compensate them all for their charitable acts is the wish and prayer of the husband and children of the departed one.—George Robillard and children.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

Sam S. Haislet and Miss Stella Dautremont Joined in Wedlock.

The marriage of Sam S. Haislet to Miss Stella A. Dautremont was solemnized yesterday evening at 6:30 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Dautremont. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Fayolle in the presence of a small company of relatives and friends. Mr. Raymond Dautremont was best man, and Miss Rose Dautremont bridesmaid.

After the ceremony the guests partook of a sumptuous supper, and the evening was made merry with dancing and music. A large number of handsome presents were received, and the happy couple will go to housekeeping at once in the Lemieux cottage on Third street.

Mr. Haislet is foreman in THE COURIER office, and for the past twelve years has been employed in the printing business. For four years he has been in the employ of the publisher of this paper, and we are glad to testify to his splendid qualities as an employee and as a man. The bride, although also comparatively a newcomer to Red Lake Falls, has endeared herself to a large circle of friends, and possesses the splendid qualities of womanhood which fit her for the new duties she has assumed. THE COURIER congratulates its young friends on the auspicious beginning of their married life, and "may they be happy forever after."

The walking sick, what a crowd of them there are. Persons who are thin and weak but not sick enough to go to bed.

"Chronic cases" that's what the doctors call them, which in common English means—long sickness.

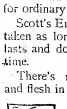
To stop the continued loss of flesh they need Scott's Emulsion. For the feeling of weakness they need Scott's Emulsion.

It makes new flesh and gives new life to the weak system.

Scott's Emulsion gets thin and weak persons out of the rut. It makes new, rich blood, strengthens the nerves and gives appetite for ordinary food.

Scott's Emulsion can be taken as long as sickness lasts and do good all the time.

There's new strength and flesh in every dose.



We will be glad to send you a few doses free.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

with local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonial free. Sold by druggists, price 75c. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from a strangulation, says A. L. Spafford, postmaster, Chester, Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and repeated often. It reduced the swelling and inflammation, cut the mucous and shortly the child was resting easy and speedily recovered. It cures croup, colds, la grippe, and all throat and lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure lingers in the throat and chest and enables the lungs to contribute pure, health-giving oxygen to the blood. A. L. Reichert.

German Postal Slogans.

The multiplication of railways has not diminished the number of postal stages in Germany. On the contrary, the number of stage drivers rose from 1,700 in 1896 to 2,344 in 1900.

Many of the ills from which women suffer can be completely cured with Rocky Mountain Tea. Rich, red blood, good digestion and health follow its use. 35 cents. A. L. Reichert.

Year's Cranberry Crop.

The 1902 cranberry crop of the United States is estimated at 726,000 bushels, against 1,040,000 bushels in 1901.

The Secret Of Long Life.

Consists in keeping all the main organs of the body in healthy, regular action, and in quickly destroying deadly disease germs. Electric Bitters regulate stomach, liver and kidneys, purify the blood, give a splendid appetite and they work wonders in curing kidney troubles, female complaints, nervous disorders, constipation, dyspepsia and malaria. How is This for Rent?

FOR a storeroom 25 feet wide and 110 feet deep, a block distant from Herald square, New York city, beginning with May 1, 1903, a railroad will, for the coming three years, pay $37,000 as annual rental. Architects for the railroad company are drawing plans to transform the room into what it asserted will be the finest office building in the United States.

The Indian Chief Tammany.

Tammany lived in the seventeenth century. He was a native of Delaware, but settled on the banks of the Ohio river. He was chief sachem of his tribe, and his reign was discreet and peaceful. His great maxim was: "Unite. In peace unite for mutual happiness; in war, for mutual defense."

Eggs in Missouri.

A Boone County hen owned by Jack Lynne has produced a novelty in the form of an "eggless egg." The shell was perfect, but when broken open was found to have no contents. The production of such fruit is a species of enterprise which Missouri farmers will hardly approve in their hens.

Instinct of Birds.

The principal routes taken by migratory birds are registered in books of natural history, show a wonderful geographical instinct on the part of the feathered bipeds, as they take, for the most part, the ones most direct at their narrowest and the river valleys at their longest.

Fine Portrait of McKinley.

B. J. Greenhut of New York has just bought what is considered the best lifelike portrait of President McKinley ever painted. The president sat for this picture a short time before the assassination. Mr. Greenhut was a warm personal friend of Mr. McKinley.

A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An eminent authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. This rest and the wholesome tonics Kodol contains each restore health. Dieting unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fulness and bloating from which some people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

Soon I could see Mary Phillips on deck, speaking trumpet in hand, and seeing my trumpet I hailed as soon as I thought we were near enough, eagerly inquired after Bertha, and the high voice of Mary Phillips came across the water telling me that Miss Nugent was not feeling at all well. This uncertain state of affairs was making her feel very nervous. "Can she come on deck?" I cried. "Can she use a speaking trumpet? If I could talk to her I might encourage her."

She would be, answered Mary, "but she can not speak through the trumpet, she tried it and it made her head ache. She is here on deck and I am going to help her stand up as soon as we get nearer. Perhaps she may be able to speak to you."

CHAPTER III.

The two vessels were now near enough for a high-pitched conversation without the assistance of trumpets, and Mary Phillips assisted Bertha to the side of the steamer, where I could distinctly see her. I shouted as hearty a greeting as ever was sent across the water, bidding her to keep up a good heart, for help of some kind must surely come to us. She tried to answer me, but her voice was not strong enough. Then she shook her head, by which I understood that she did not agree with me in my hopeful predictions. I called back to her that all in this drifting about the two vessels must certainly come together, and that by the assistance of the steamer's boat, we could certainly devise some way of getting us, of this annoying plight. She smiled, apparently in the affirmative of my expression, and again shook her head. She now seemed tired, for her position by the rail was none easy one to maintain, and her maid assisted her to her couch on the deck. Then stood up Mary Phillips, speaking loud and forcefully:

"She has a message for you," she said, "which she wanted to give to you herself, but she can not do it. She thinks—but I tell her it is of no use thinking that way—that we are bound to be lost. You may be saved because your ship seems in a better condition than ours, and she does not believe that the two vessels will ever come together, so she wants me to tell you that if you get home and she never does, that she wishes her share in the Forty-second street house to go to her married sister, and to be used for the education of her children. She doesn't want it divided up in the ordinary way, because each one will get so little and it will do no good. Do you think that will be a good will?"

"Don't speak of wills!" I shouted; "there is no need of a will. She will get home in safety and attend to her own affairs."

"I think so too," cried Mary Phillips; "but I tell it to her just as she said. And now she wants to know if you have any message to send to your parents, for we might show off somewhere and be picked up, while this might not happen to you. But I don't believe in that sort of thing any more than in the other."

I shook back my disbelief in the necessity of any such messages, when Mary Phillips seized her trumpet and cried that she did not hear me.

Also the breeze was still blowing and the steamer was moving away to the north-east. Through my trumpet I repeated my words and that I had something which I could not hear. The wind was against her. I shouted to her to speak louder, and she must have screamed with all her force, but I could only hear some words to the effect that we were bound to come together again and she stayed her handkerchief energetically.

Then the steamer moved further and further away and speaking trumpets were of no avail. I seized the glass and watched La Fidelete until she was nothing but a black spot upon the sea.

Then despair seized upon me and I cared not whether I lived or died. I forgot to eat and threw myself upon the deck, where I remained for several hours, unpardonably lazy in neglecting the opportunities which were now lost.

Over and over again I told myself bitterly that when I had been near enough to the vessel when here Bertha Nugent to converse with Mary Phillips without the aid of a speaking trumpet, I should have tried to reach that vessel, no matter what the danger or the difficulties. I should have launched a raft—I should have tried to swim—I should have done something.

I knew now that, even had it been impossible for me to reach the steamer, I should have endeavored to reach Bertha's heart. I should have told her that I loved her. Whether she were lost, or I were lost, or both of us, she should have known I loved her. In this night and have been able to answer me, but she could not hear me. For that terrible mistake, that crime there was no pardon. Now every chance was gone. What reason was there to suppose that these two derelicts ever again would drift together?

In the afternoon I rose languidly and looked about me. I saw something on the horizon and seizing the glass, I knew it to be La Fidelete. I could recognize the black sides of the hull and the masts.

Now hope blazed up again. If she were nearer she must come nearer still. I recovered my offensive state of mind sufficiently to know that I was hungry, and that I must eat to be strong and ready for what might happen.

Upon one thing I was determined. If Bertha should ever again be brought near enough to hear me, I would tell her that I loved her. The object of life, however much of it might be left me, should be to make Bertha know that I loved her. If I swam toward the vessel or floated on a plank, I must get near enough to tell her that I loved her.

But there was no wind and the apparent state of the steamer did not increase. This was a region or season of calms or fitful winds. During the rest of the day the distant vessel continued to be a black speck upon the smooth and gently rolling sea. Again I spent the night on deck, but I did not sleep, I listen or watch. I was wan eyed and slept heavily.

The day was bright when I was awakened by a chilly feeling; a strong breeze was blowing over me. I sprang to my feet. There was quite a heavy sea; the vessel was rolling and pitching much.

I looked for the steamer and did not see her. Perhaps, in Fidelete was coming straight towards me. Lightened, and with a great part of the hull high out of water, the high wind was driving her before it. While my vessel, her bow to the breeze, was moving at a speed of seven knots.

As I looked at the rapidly-approaching steamer I seemed as if she certainly must run into the lighter hulk. But for that I cared not. All that I now hoped for was that Bertha should come to me. Whether one vessel sank or struck or whether both went down together, I should be with Bertha, I would live or die with her. Mary Phillips stood full in view on the deck of the oncoming steamer, a speaking trumpet in her hand. I could now see that it was not probable that the two vessels would collide. The steamer would pass me, but probably very near. Before I could make up my mind what I should do in this momentous emergency, Mary Phillips hailed me.

"When we got near enough," she shouted, "throw me a rope. I'll tie it to the boat and you'll know."

Wildly I looked about me for a line which I might throw. Perhaps there was in abundance, but it was broken and I was hurried and listened to something, or too heavy to handle. I remembered, however, seeing a coil of small rope below, and, hastening down, I brought it on deck, took the coil in my right hand and stood ready to hurl it when the proper moment should come.

That moment came quickly. The steamer was not a hundred feet from me when I reached the deck. It passed me on the port side.

"Be ready!" cried Mary Phillips, the instant she saw me. It was not now necessary to use a trumpet.

"Throw as soon as I get opposite to you!" she cried.

"To Bertha with!" I shouted.

"Yes!" said Mary Phillips, "but what you've got to do is to throw that rope. Give it a good heave. Throw now!"

The two vessels were not fifty feet apart. With all my strength I hurled the coil of rope. The steamer's stern was above me and I aimed high. The flying coil went over the deck of La Fidelete, but in my excitement I forgot to grasp tightly the other end at it and the whole rope flew from me and disappeared beyond the steamer. Stupefied by this deplorable accident I staggered backward and a portion of the vessel threw me against the rail. Recovering myself, I glared about for another rope, but of course there was none.

Then came a shout from Mary Phillips. But she had already passed me, and as I was not looking toward her I did not catch her words. As I remembered, her appearance she seemed to be tearing her hair in a flash I thought of my resolution. Rushing to the rail, I got the trumpet to my mouth. The wind would carry my words to her if it would carry hers to me.

"Tell Bertha to come on deck!" I shouted. Mary Phillips looked at me, but did not move. I wished her to rush below and bring up Bertha. Not an instant was to be lost. But she did not move.

"I tell her I love her!" I yelled through the trumpet. "Tell her that I love her now and shall love her forever. Tell her I love her no matter what happens. Tell her I love her, I have her, I love her!" And for a second the scream until it was plain I was no longer heard. Then I threw down my useless trumpet and seized the glass. Madly I scanned the steamer. No sign of Bertha was to be seen. Mary Phillips was there, and now she waved her handkerchief. At all events she had gone me. At such a terrible moment what could one do but be forgiven?

I watched, and watched, and watched, but no figure but Mary Phillips appeared upon the steamer, and at last I could not even distinguish that. Now I became filled with desperate fury. I determined to sail down to Bertha and overtake her. A great sail was flapping from one of my masts and I would put my ship about and run before the wind should carry me to Bertha.

I knew nothing of sailing, but even if I had known all my efforts would have been useless. I rushed to the tiller and tried to move it, pulling it this way and that, but the vessel would not be jammed, I know not what had happened to it. I cursed the ropes attached to the boom of the sail. I cursed, I prayed, I wailed, I did not know what I was doing. I did not think of Bertha, in utter despair and exhaustion, I fell to thedeck.

CHAPTER IV.

But before that time had almost died away and in the afternoon the sea was perfectly calm, and when the sun set I could plainly see the steamer on the far off edge of the glassy water. Then, during the whole of the next day I saw her. She neither disappeared nor came nearer. Sometimes I was in the depths of despair; sometimes I began to hope a little. Then I would again sink into the midst of my misery—Bertha knew that I loved her. I was positively sure that my words had been heard.

It was a strange manner in which I had told my love. I had roared my burning words of passion through a speaking-trumpet, but I told them not to Bertha herself, but to Mary Phillips. But the mistake was of no importance. Bertha now knew that I loved her. That was everything to me.

As long as light remained I watched La Fidelete through the glass, but I could see nothing of her hull, save from a standing upper line. She was beyond the sea. Why could she not have been headlined near me? I dared not let my mind run to answer to opportunities I had lost when she had been headlined near me. During the night the wind and sea were rough, for the Sparhawk rolled and dipped a good deal, breathing a fresher breeze. Very early in the morning I was awakened by a great shock and crash. At first I knew I did not know whether it was a dream or had actually occurred and I lay as the sound died away. Then I knew that it was no dream, but as I looked about I saw something which took away my breath, which made me wonder if I were awake or dreaming, or mad.

It was Bertha Nugent standing hailing distance!

Above the rail I saw the head and body of Mary Phillips, who was screaming through the trumpet. I stood and gazed in perfect amazement.

I could not hear what Mary Phillips said. Perhaps my senses were benumbed. Perhaps the wind was carrying away her words. But I knew that I was receiving from me toward her soon became too evident. The steamer was receding from the Sparhawk. She had evidently come aware of this my powers of propulsion and was turning around as well with a burning flash.

Bertha was drifting away from me—she was almost gone.

Then, like a great trumpet, I leaned over the rail and shouted with all my might: "Did you hear me say I loved her? Did you hear me?"

Mary Phillips had put down her trumpet and was waving her arms to me her mouth, and I could see that she was going to make a great effort. The distance between us had increased considerably since I began to speak, and she had to speak against the wind.

With all the concentrated intensity of which a determined nerves could give a man who is trying to hear the one thing to him above everything in the world, I listened. Had a wild beast faced in a desert at that moment I would not have withdrawn my attention.

I heard the voice of Mary Phillips, faint, far away. I heard the words: "I—she—her—" and was lost. She must have known from my aspect that my message had been for me, for she tried again and again to make herself heard.

The wind continued to blow and the steamer continued to float and float and float away. A wind had come up in the night. It had blown Bertha near me; perhaps it had blown her very near me. She had not known it and I had not known it. Mary Phillips had not known that I was not too late, and now that wind had blown her past me and was blowing her away. For all time there was a flutter of a handkerchief, but only one handkerchief, and then La Fidelete, with Bertha on board, was blown away and away and away until she disappeared, and I never saw her again.

All night I sat upon the deck of the Sparhawk, thinking, wondering and conjecturing. I was in a strange state of mind. I did not wonder at conjecture whether Bertha's vessel would come back to me again; I did not think at what I should do if it did come back. I did not think of what I should do if it never came back. All night, I thought, wandered and conjectured what Mary Phillips had meant by the word "but."

It was plain to me what "yes" had meant. My message had been heard and I knew Mary Phillips well enough to feel positively sure that having received such a message under such circumstances, she had given it to Bertha. Therefore I had positive proof that Bertha knew that I loved her. But what did the "but" mean?

It could be not that there were a thousand things that this word might mean. It might mean that she was already engaged to be married. It might mean that she had vowed never to marry. It might mean that she disapproved of such words at such a time. It can not repeat the tenth of the meanings which I thought I might attach to this word. But the worst thing that it could purport, the most terrible signification of all, recurred to me over and over again. It might mean that Bertha could not return my affection. She knew that I loved her, but she could not love me.

In the morning I ate something and then lay down upon the deck to sleep. It was well that I should do this, I thought, because if Bertha came near me again in the day-time Mary Phillips would hail me if I were not awake. At night long I would watch, and, as there was a moon, I would see her if I rescued if it came again.

I did watch all that afternoon and all that night, and during my watching I never ceased to wonder and conjecture what Mary Phillips meant by that word "but."

About the middle of the next day I saw in the distance something upon the water. I first thought it was a drifting spar, for it was white, but as there were now no waves there could be no spars. With the glass I could only see that it was something white shining in the sun, but it might be the glistening body of a dead fish. After a time it became plainer to me. It was such a little object that the fairest breezes which occasionally arose would never move, not the Sparhawk than upon it, and so I gradually approached it.

It was a bottle. I made out that it was something round, with something white raised above it, and then I discovered that it was a bird-preserver which supported a little stick or twig to which was fastened a handkerchief, a handkerchief to the top of the stick. Bertha had written a message and Mary had wrapped it in a piece of oiled silk and fastened it to the life-preserver. And then she lowered this contrivance to the surface of the water, hoping that it would float to me or that I would float to it.

I was floating to it. It contained the solution of all my doubts, the answer to all my conjectures. It was then that I made up my decision of love, and a drifting slowly but surely towards it. Soon I would know.

But after a little the course of the Sparhawk or the course of the message changed. I drifted to the north. Little by little my course deviated from the bottle which I might have met the message. At last I saw that I should not reach it. When I became convinced of this my first impulse was to spring overboard and swim for it. But I restrained this impulse as I had restrained others like it. If Bertha came back I must be there to meet her. If she had no and she had come back, she might come back again. Some new message I must not run the risk of missing her. And so with yearning heart and perhaps tearful eyes I watched the bottle drift disappear and become another derelicts.

I do not know how many days and nights I watched and waited for Bertha's ship and wondered and conjectured what Mary Phillips meant by "but." I was awake so much and ate so little and thought so hard that I was exhausted both of mind and body. All that I asked of my body was to look not for Bertha's steamer, and all that I asked of my mind was to resolve the meaning of the last words I had heard from Bertha's lips.

One day, I do not know whether it was in the morning or afternoon, I realized my head sod on the horizon I saw a steamer. Instantly my heart was brought to her upon it. In the next instant all my arms dropped, the telescope fell into the sea, my head drooped. It was not Bertha's steamer, it was an ordinary steamer with the look parallel with the water and a long line of smoke fully outside of the line. The shock of the disappointment was very great.

When I looked up again I could see that the steamer was headed directly towards me, and was approaching with considerable rapidity. But this fact affected me little. It would not bring me Bertha. It would not bring me any message from her. It was an ordinary vessel of traffic. I took no great interest in it, one way or the other.

Before long it was so near that I could see people on board. I arose and looked over the rail. Then some one on the steamer fired a gun or a pistol. As this seemed to be a signal I waved my hat. Then the steamer began to move more slowly, and soon lay to and lowered a boat.

THE Princeton Union says: "A one-sided crank is better than a two-sided fool."

AND now the straight-laced Ada Index urges removal of the coal duty. Isn't this heresy, Bro. Ward?

IT costs Uncle Sam $1,250,000 annually to predict that tomorrow will be fair. And then it is likely to rain.

THE Tillmans seem to be upholding the dignity of South Carolina after the manner of the ante-bellum days.

THE hearing before the supreme court to determine the status of Columbia county has been postponed until January 26.

IN NEW YORK City the other day a man died of starvation. There are still a few chumps who fail to recognize prosperity when they see it.

THERE is quite a sentiment among the legislators favorable to extending the terms of county auditors and county attorneys to four years.

THE Pennsylvania coal lands were deeded by the British crown to William Penn, and the perplexing question is how Baer ever got title direct from God.

WISCONSIN legislators are forbidden to accept railroad passes, and yet they seem to "keep in touch with their constituencies" about as closely as any of them.

SENATOR SWEDBACK, the Bemidji lumberman, has been made chairman of the committee on agriculture. This is one of the best jokes on the farmer that Ray Jones ever perpetrated.

"GAS" ADDICKS is reported to have spent $250,000 in an unsuccessful effort to break into the United States Senate from Delaware, Mr. Addicks should move further west and get a better run for his money.

THERE seems to be no objection from any quarter to granting Cole Younger a full pardon. The old man ought to be allowed to return to Missouri if he likes. Minnesota has had enough of the Younger family.

CROOKSTON'S public building has been held up on the president. The committee appointed to select a site report that no one is philanthropic enough to sell a patch of ground suitable for the purpose for $4,000, the amount appropriated.

ST. PAUL wants a million and a half more to complete the state capitol. No one objects to a liberal provision for this magnificent structure, but the people of the state ought to know pretty soon how much it is going to cost to finish the job.

THE country editor is again having his innings. Chas. S. Mitchell has been appointed superintendent of the Minnesota building at the St. Louis exposition and A. N. Dare made state printing expert. In both instances the honor is worthily bestowed.

THE coal operators in the anthracite district are reported to be making a supreme effort to relieve the coal famine in Philadelphia, Washington, New York and Boston. The people of the west will have to wait until the eastern sufferers are supplied with fuel.

MINNESOTA ranks first among the states in the production of spring wheat during 1902, according to a government report. For that year Minnesota had an acreage of 5,737,853 devoted to spring wheat, and the yield was 79,752,624 bushels, valued at $48,648,966.

THE coal shortage is causing a lot of inconvenience if not actual suffering in many parts of Minnesota. In the southern part of the state the electric light plants shut down at 10 or 11 o'clock, and several of the railroads have found it necessary to decrease the number of trains.

THE Illinois Democrats talk of nominating John Mitchell for governor of Illinois, but it is not likely the president of the mine workers cares to shy his castor in the arena of partisan politics. His present position is more honorable than any civic office in the gift of the people.

GOV. VAN SANT and the board of control recommend that the legislature enact a law requiring each county to pay $1.50 per week for the maintainance of each patient which it sends to the insane hospitals. Such a law would reduce the number of commitments quite materially.

REPRESENTATIVE MINNETTE, a Democrat, has introduced a bill to extend the terms of the members of the lower house to four years. It is possible that Minnette is proceeding on the theory that it is so extremely difficult for a Democrat to get elected in Minnesota that the job is worth hanging onto.

SPEAKER BABCOCK has at least one of the elements of greatness. In the exuberance of victory he has not attempted to punish his enemies. Many a man of ability makes the fatal mistake of his career in using his official position to redress personal grievances. The successful politician must learn to forgive and forget.

THE closing of the Indianola postoffice still occupies the center of the stage, and the settlement of the color question is as far away as before. If the president is bound to have colored postmasters why not practice on some of the northern towns, where the dusky children are assumed to be on an equal social footing with the whites?

REPRESENTATIVE SIMONS had the honor of being author of the first bill passed by the present legislature. It is an act to change the date of the winter term of the Red Lake county district court from February 15 to March. This change is desirable from the fact that the fall term convenes in October, leaving the terms but three months apart.

SENATOR CLAPP and Representative Eddy will present early this week the new bill relating to the sale of the eleven townships in the western portion of the Red Lake reservation. It will provide for the sale of the land at public auction, the minimum price to be $5 an acre. It will probably be offered in the house as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill. If it is not incorporated in the measure in the house in effort will be made by Senator Clapp to have it put in the Indian bill in the senate.

THE Thief River Falls News gloats over the alleged fact that the post-office receipts of that town exceed Red Lake Falls by $1,200. This would be interesting if true. The fact that the statement is found in the News is pretty good evidence that it isn't true. The gross receipts of the Red Lake Falls office for 1902 were $3,948.16, and as the News says the receipts at Thief River Falls were "in round numbers" $4,200 it will be seen that the lead of the Upper Falls cannot be more than $250.

THE announcement is made from Washington that capitalists are interested in a movement to manufacture paper from cornstalks. It is claimed that three grades of paper can be made: One from the shell of the stalk, one from the pith and one from the husks. A machine has been invented which will husk the corn and separate the husk, shell and pith. The men behind the enterprise expect to get a supply of cornstalks in Indiana, Illinois and other corn growing states. It is expected that the enterprise will be launched next year.

ONE of the measures now pending in congress is that which provides for what is known as "post check currency," which is intended to furnish a practical and convenient method of sending small sums of money by mail. A great deal has been written on the subject and the proposed measure has the universal endorsement of the press as well as the business interests of the country. The "post check currency" is in effect a greenback in denominations from 25 cents to five dollars, which passes current like any other money until the holder writes in a space on the back the name of a person to whom he wishes to send it by mail. It then becomes payable to the payee only, and on his endorsement is deposited in the bank and sent back to Washington through the usual channels and is destroyed as "mutilated currency."

EVADING THE POINT.

The St. Hilaire Spectator imagines it has discovered a mare's nest in THE COURIER'S bid for county printing, from the fact that the bid did not include job work on legal notices other than the official publications, and gives THE COURIER credit for a ran ambition to exact fancy prices for all work not embraced in the bid. A practical admission follows that the bid of the "combine" accepted by the commissioners is at least four times higher than THE COURIER'S offer.

It ought to occur to most people that THE COURIER 'shid did not carry with it an obligation to give this paper the job printing or any other work not contemplated by the bid. Acceptance of THE COURIER'S offer is now prevented the board from securing bids for the work not embraced therein from any quarter, desired.

The taxpayers will hardly approve of the action of the commissioners in applying a different rule in spending the public money from that which the prudent man uses in his private business. The unvarnished truth of the matter is that three members of the board deliberately voted to spend a thousand dollars more than necessary in order to favor the "combine."

The crowned heads of every nation, The rich men, poor men and misers Alll join in paying tribute to DeWitt's Little Early Risers. H. Williams, San Antonio, Tex., writes: "Little Early Riser Pills are the best I used in my family. I unhesitatingly recommend them to everybody. They cure constipation, biliousness, sick headache, torpid liver, jaundice, malaria and all other liver troubles. A. L. Reichert.

The Way of the World.

St. Peter Herald: A few days ago an elderly gentlemn and his wife were walking along the street when a lady in crossing the road fell down. The old gentleman rushed to her assistance and helped her in every possible way. When he returned to his wife, she looked like a thunder cloud.

"It's all right; it's all right!" he whispered.

"Yes, I know it's all right! she replied hotly. "Here's an unknown woman falls down, and you plow across the street to help her, and the other day, when I fell down stairs, you wanted to know if I was practicing for a circus."

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Bratlund Verne Healy.

The temperature fell very low in some of the rooms Tuesday morning.

Crowds of high school students were out sleigh riding several evenings of the past week.

Henry F. Keller, of Graceville, Minn. has entered school here and joined the Junior class.

The long promised mandolin quartette was given at last by only three members at Friday's program.

There was a large amount of tardiness again this week. Your devoted servant was among the number.

The geometry class take so much interest in geometry that they discuss points after class and down town.

Juniors first, last and all the time. The Junior class again went to the laboratory last Thursday, the Seniors' day of recitation.

The chemistry class is required to write out the equations for the reactions that take place in all their experiments from now on.

The Virgil class transited a very interesting giant story this week and some of the pupils of the lower classes were so much interested as to neglect their own lessons.

Orders came Monday morning for the chemistry class to "dig up." That is they were requested to pay all the breakage in the laboratory and it was found that the experiments of the class had cost a sum ranging from 15c to 75c, according to their carelessness.

The question is debate Jan. 30th is on the question Resolved "that the pension policy of the United States is desirable." The debaters are: Spartans—Grace Fletcher, Etta Garceau and Elsie Mead; Athenians—Gilbert Westphal, Delia Toupio, Anesey Cromp.

The program last Friday was a success from a Spartan point of view. The program netted 38.78 points. This goes to show that we are not discouraged and that we do intend to take all that our Athenian brothers want to give (?) us and make as much for ourselves as we possibly can.— Anything that will count we want whether it is given to us or we have to make it for ourselves.

The Athenians say they gave us the debate Jan. 9th. Then how do you account for the marked magdues that were so carefully looked over, which were read on the general debate, and some of the regular debaters staying home from school so as to prepare their debate? But we thank you very much for having been so generous(?) as not to have dealt us out a goose egg, seeing that we were at your mercy(?).

The Seniors looked about 200 per cent better after the examination in higher algebra than they did just before that long promised examination. They now breathe freely while before they would draw in this examination with a sigh, but now that it is over and the returns are in they are all satisfied. Some of the Seniors regarded this examination very seriously it meaning '03 or .04 to them, but now they are willing to turn their attention to other studies.

Hair Splits

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for thirty years. It is a elegant hair dressing and for keeping the hair from splitting at the ends."—J. A. Gruenenfelder, Granford, Ill.

Hair-splitting splits friendships. If the hair-splitting is done on your own head, it loses friends for you, for every hair of your head is a friend.

Ayer's Hair Vigor in advance will prevent the splitting. If the splitting has begun, it will stop it.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

If your druggist cannot supply you, send us one dollar and we will send you a bottle. Be sure to give the name of your nearest express office. Address J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

Thief River Falls was again visited by a fire Sunday, the Catholic church being practically destroyed. The entire rear end of the church was burned and the building was saved only by the most active exertions. The loss in fixtures and decorations was considerable in addition to the building. The loss was fully covered by insurance.

The annual meeting of the Emardville creamery association was held last Monday and the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, P. S. Medehlil; vice president, H. P. Benson; secretary, A. J. Hempstead; treasurer, A. F. Anderson; directors, Remi Lefaive, E. Craft, H. Bugge, O. Jacobsen and J. Haugen. The creamery will commence the spring season April 1.

The residence of Jacob Pahlen, on the north side, was practically ruined by fire Monday afternoon. The blaze originated from a stove pipe leading through the upstairs floor, and before the fire department could reach the scene the upper part of the house was in flames. The members of the family lost all of their clothing and bedding. The total loss is estimated at $1,100, with an insurance of $600.

Crookston Times: James E. Ford, Red Lake county's new auditor, is in the city today on matters of private business. Mr. Ford is, one of the successful young business men of Red Lake county and will without doubt give the county a clean-cut, businesslike administration. While in town he took occasion to call on Auditor Hoffard and look over the methods used in doing business in Polk county.

At Crookston Saturday afternoon Judge Watts passed sentence on Emma Rogers, the Indian woman convicted of manslaughter in the second degree. When arraigned before the court the woman maintained her stolid calmness, although she seemed a trifle paler than usual. The judge admonished her for her crime and said that he had made the sentence as light as possible. He sentenced her to the state penitentiary at Stillwater for three years. She will be taken below at once.

Some of our exchanges say that festive wire fence swindlers are already abroad in the land, and our farmer friends had better look out for them. This is not a bill of fence wire at a ridiculously low price, and offers to throw in a fancy gate if the victim puts up $10 or $20 cash—and that is the last seen of him. They say the game usually works. When dealing with strangers you had better be careful. It is always the best policy to buy of your old established firms. It pays in the long run.

About the slickest swindle which comes the farmer's way is the cloth deal. It is catcher, and some of the shrewdest men get caught. It is safe to say here that when a peddler wants to sell you a five dollar blanket for one dollar and thirty yards of calico for a cent, there is a hen on, and the time is right there when you should whistle for Towser and make a bee line for the old shotgun, and inside of three minutes after either have a job for a coroner or see a peddler flying for his life in a cloud of dust up the highway.

The supreme court will take up for consideration at the April term a suit that has a local interest. Several years ago action was brought in the district court against the holders of $9,000 of Northern Pacific railroad bonds issued by the village at the time the road was first projected through. The contention of the city is that the bonds are invalid because they exceeded the constitutional limit of indebtedness at the time they were issued, and suit was brought to restrain the county auditor from paying interest on the bonds. Several other similar suits were raised, but Judge Watts decided some weeks ago in favor of the bondholders. The case was appealed and City Attorney Boughton is now preparing the brief. Warner & Lawrence of St. Paul and H. W. Smith of Minneapolis are attorneys for the bondholders.

In the Philippines.

"While serving in the Philippines," writes J. A. Cook, Mt. N. Dak. Vols., "many of us were attacked with what is known as Philippine itch. We could not find anything that would alleviate our sufferings, until the Red Cross Society secured some of Cole's Carbolisalve. It gave instant relief, stopped the itch, legged we were soon cured." Cole's Carbolisalve always relieves and heals from all parts of the world tell of its wonderful cures of skin diseases, wounds, burns and sores. Always Guaranteed. 25 and 50c. Sold by all druggists.

Bids for Wood.

Lost

The Use of Arm. Heart Trouble.

Could Not Eat, Sleep or Walk.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure Cured Entirely.

"If it hadn't been for Dr. Miles' Remedies I would not be here to write this letter. Two years ago last June I lost the use of my left arm, could not use it and could only trust it a little with my right. My heart was so weak I could not walk. My pain was something awful. I was out of doors all over and could get nothing. I grew so weak that I could not walk without staggering like a drunken man and my home doctor said he could do nothing for me. I was in so much pain I was almost wild. I could not take Morphine nor spirits as they made me worse. I had been reading about Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine, and the more I thought about it the more I felt I must have it. I wrote to the Dr. Miles Medical Co. for advice which I followed to the letter. I can say today that I am glad I did as I am a well woman now; can work and can walk two or three miles and not mind it. I can also use my arm again as well as ever. You do not know how thankful I am for these grand medicines Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and Nervine. Dr. Miles' Remedies are the best in the world, and I should get sick again, I should use no other medicine. The refunding also helped my pocket very, so wonderfully that I should have written you before to thank you, but I wanted to be sure that the cure was permanent, which I now know to be the case."—Mrs. Frank Lorenz, Allen, Mich.

DID NOT STICK LONG ENOUGH.

Varnish on Chair Gave Way at Inopportune Moment.

A delegation of young people from the First Presbyterian church of Brooklyn, led by the assistant minister, went down one evening to the Floating chapel to hold a religious meeting with the sailors. The seats of the place had been newly varnished and when one of the young men sat, attempted to rise to speak he discovered he was stuck fast in his chair. Three times he tried to free himself, and each attempt, though more vigorous than the last, was unsuccessful. Pausing for a moment, as the audience looked at him, he exclaimed with emphasis:

"If I stick to the Lord as hard as I stick to this chair I'll be all right."

And with these words still sounding in the air he gave another pull—and freed himself.

HARD TO STIR NEW YORKERS.

Incident That Illustrates Their Indifference to the Tragic.

At 20 o'clock on election night a prominent restaurant in Madison Square was packed with people, drinking, talking, laughing, singing, so that, with the blasts of the orchestrin, one had to yell to his neighbor to be heard. Suddenly a frightful, big-volumed roar of ominous sound belched forth outside. It was no big shot even above the din it told unmistakably of some casualty. One woman's face stiffened, a few heads turned interrogatively, and that was all. There was not an instant's cessation in the babel of resonant gayety. Yet an appalling explosion of fireworks near by had scattered death and physical disaster among scores of the holiday throng. It was New York's insensibility to the tragic.—New York Times.

A Safe Hiding Place.

When Patrolman George Piepenbring of the First District drew his nalmy the other day he picked out a new crisp ten-dollar bill, and, rolling it into as small a wad as possible, crammed it into the button of his revolver holster, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. Other policemen who had been watching him were puzzled at this act and asked for an explanation. At first he evaded, but finally, under pressure, replied that his wife bed s deadly fear of a pistol. This explanation seemed to be satisfactory, but in view of the fact that he has not been married many months his friends are wondering how he managed to catch on so quickly.

Long-Deferred Reward.

Michael Crean of Detroit, Mich., was forty years late in receiving o de served reward. Crean was a young men when he served under Col. (now Field Marshal) Lord Roberts in the Bhotian campaign of 1852. Through some few in the distributions years ago Crean was overlooked. When his whereabouts was ascertained the British government struck for him the medal and clasp for the possession of which many men risked their lives. A registered letter containing the medel from London reached him last week.

Queer Life of French Author.

Henri Murger, author of "Le Vie de Boheme," whose name is inseparably associated with traditions of the Quertier Latin is said to have arranged his life month by month on a plan characteristic of that happy-go-lucky region. He chose to have three days of enjoyment of $60 a day, twenty-seven days of dragging and pinching at the rate of $1 a day, and if the month happened to have thirty-one days the extra day was provided for with the help of a dollar borrowed from a friend.

School Teachers Threaten a Gult.

The little principality of Birkenfeld in the grand duchy of Oldenburg, is threatened with the strange spectacle of a general strike of school teachers. The population is about 40,000 all told, but the pay of school teachers is so low that, after many vain efforts to obtain redress, they have drawn up an ultimatum in form, declaring that unless a new scale of emoluments be granted within a specified time the entire body of school teachers will resign.

Bacon as a Student.

Robert Bacon was as conspicuous as Harvard a little more than twenty years ago as he is now as the partner of J. Pierpont Morgan. "Handsome Bob Bacon" they called him at Cambridge. He was Harvard's football captain in '79 and there never was a finer physical specimen on Harvard's eleven. More then six feet tall, broad shouldered and powerful, he was the idol of the students as a football player in those days.

For International Stamp.

The Danmark general postoffice has suggested to the international postal authorities the adoption of an international stamp. The excellent idea would allow of stamps being forwarded for reply, a difficulty that is often met with under the present regulations. The stamp would be marked "Reply," and certain precautions would have to be adopted to prevent fraud between the countries.

For Uplifting of Jewish Race.

A new agricultural school for Jewish boys is being established near Grodno, in the government of Warsaw, Russian Poland. This is in the line of improving the physical welfare of the race, which is in danger of degeneration, not being able to understand the destructive influences of overcrowded ghetties.

DID GOOD WITH STOLEN MONEY

Proceeds of Swindles Given Over to Helpless Children.

Gustave Rosell was the greatest swindler Italy has ever known, though his many crimes were perpetrated purely in the interests of children and charities. He was a cripple, and from his earliest days displayed unwonted interest in those of tender age similarly afflicted. When only 23 he set in motion a scheme of fraud on a gigantic scale which relieved the wealthy of thousands of francs.

With the proceeds of his crime he founded and endowed a cripples' home in Rome, cleared off the debts of three children's hospitals, and instituted homes for waifs in many of the principal Italian cities, though he lived in a dilapidated cottage and almost denied himself the bare necessities of life. When eventually the bubble burst he was sentenced to lifelong imprisonment, but as popular had he become with the masses that frantic crowds cheered him as he was led from the courts. After fifteen years spent in a dungeon he was pardoned.

RELIC DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Tavern at Weston, Mass., Which Antedated the Revolution.

The inn at Weston, Mass., recently destroyed the famous John Flagg tavern, which antedated the revolution many years. It was here that President Washington passed a night on his way to Cambridge and Boston in 1789, and in 1798 President John Adams occupied the chamber previously used by Washington. On the following day he received an address from the townspeople, and his reply is still preserved in the Weston town library. What renders the loss of this memorable tavern the more to be regretted is the loss by this fire of the old Colonial flag of thirteen stars, which for many years floated over this tavern from the date of Washington's visit.

Retired Senator Gorman.

Senator Gorman of Maryland will not keep house in Washington this coming winter, having decided to close his mansion at Laurel because of a recent experience with dishonest servants. Some half dozen persons in his employ joined in a conspiracy to steal money, silverware, bedclothes and other articles, the agreement among them being that the plunder should go toward furnishing a house for one of the number. One of the conspirators became alarmed when $450 in cash, some silver and a quantity of other things had been purloined. Confession was made to the senator, who refused to prosecute. Instead he closed his house and took rooms in an apartment house.

The Most Precious Fur.

The most precious of all furs, that of the silver fox, is of a dark sooty black, with tips of white of a metallic luster. The silver fox is found only in Siberia and Alaska. The pelt of the sea otter, which is now nearly extinct, is of a rich dark velvety brown. The animal survives only in the Kuriles and Alaska. Last year $1,700 was paid for a single silver fox, and a sea otter pelt brought $750. Sea otter furs are sunk through a hole cut in the ice. A bell suspended above and connected by a string with the net gives the trapper notice of a capture.

Revolting Spectacle on Scaffold.

A revolting spectacle was witnessed at the execution of a peasant for murder in Widdin Citadel, Vienna, recently. As he was being led to the scaffold the condemned man, Zeco Kamenow, suddenly drew a poniard which he had concealed and wounded three of the warders and a soldier. He was overpowered, dragged to the scaffold and three successive attempts were made to hang him. In the first the rope gave way, in the second he was cut down too soon, and the wretched criminal's head was again put in the noose and held there till life was finally extinct.

Fierce Ants of Australia.

The biggest and fiercest ants in the world are to be found on the far northern plains of Australia. They build hills as big as houses and fight in the most ferocious fashion. Recently a man named James Stanley was pitchforked to the ground by a falling tree in northern Queensland. He was immediately attacked by bees and huge green ants. When rescued his body was covered with them. He was also badly bitten and stung thet he died in the ambulance after reaching the nearest hospital.

Discarded War Material.

Some idea of the vast quantities of discarded war material thrown upon the general market by the successive changes in armament adopted by the various great powers may be gathered from the list of arms now offered for sale from this cause by the Italian government. The list includes 600,000 rifles adopted so recently as 1887, with 48,000,000 cartridges, 1,200 nine-pounders and 600 seven-pounder guns, with 200,000 shells, and 170 seven-pounder mountain guns with 17,000 shells.

Do Fishes Hear?

Did any one ever see a fish's ears? Do fishes have ears? It has been pretty well proven that they hear. Scientists have made up a list of about 100 fishes that make sounds. Why should they make sounds unless they expect to be heard? The drum fish. The surfer croaks. Even the weakfish complains with an interval voice when the cruel fisherman leaves it to die in the bottom of the boat. Possibly fishes hear through their teeth.

STRANGE CASE OF PARRICIDE.

Inhuman Act Committed in French Dependency of Algeria.

Quite extraordinary is the parricide which is reported from Algiers, the capital of the French dependency of Algeria. Not very far from that town dwelt an old man, upwards of 112 years of age, with three of his sons, the eldest of whom is 75, while the youngest is 50. In a tent, a league mile of 65 summers. This three sons beit aggrieved because their father had not gone over to the majority and left his property to them. He was, however, still hale and hearty, as they frequently exhorted him to divide his estate between them, a fact proposal which he naturally enough strongly declined to entertain. A few evenings ago, as the venerable patriarch was returning homeward with a mule laden with dates, his eldest son went out to meet, and after confronting him with an ultimatum which he rejected with contempt, pulled out a pistol and shot him through the heart. The murderer and his brother then took flight, but they were captured after a hot chase. They would inevitably have been lynched if the gendarmerie had not strained every nerve to protect them.

NEEDED THE RIGHT MAN.

How Professor Qualified a Statement Which He Had Made.

Prof. William G. Sumner of Yale, instructor in sociology, devoted a recent lecture to women in trade in reply from the earliest periods to the present day.

"The numerous occupations that are open to women nowadays in the business and industrial world," said Prof. Sumner, "has created on her part a comparative indifference to family memory."

As the class made a note of this, the professor added, wagging a warning finger:

"Mind you, gentlemen, I said comparative, because I never knew of one yet that could be induced to change her mind if the right men tried."

Husband and Wife Die.

An inquest was held recently at Orsun, near Worthing, Sussex, upon Constershire, England, on the bodies of Albert Clapp, an elderly fisherman, and his wife. The evidence showed that one Saturday evening Clapp had gone to fish his nets. The night was dark and foggy, and, losing his way, he stuck in the mud and was drowned by the flowing tide. Mrs. Clapp, anxious at her husband's prolonged absence, went to look for him with a lantern. She suffered from heart disease, and in her fright at not finding her husband succumbed to the end. Both bodies were washed ashore, about half a mile apart, next morning.

Bertillon Makes One Success.

Bertillon, the expert, who won unenviable notoriety in the Dreyfus case, has at last vindicated his claims for his system of detection. A mysterious murder was committed in Paris lately and no clew was left by the murderer except certain finger-marks on a window pane. The strokes were photographed and enlarged and Bertillon identified them as belonging to a man who had undergone the anthropometric system eight years ago. The man was found and arrested and the murder has been proved against him.

Babylon's Ruins.

The explorations of Dr. Koldeshey and his discoveries in the ruins of Nebuchadnezzar's palace at Babylon are creating the deepest interest among German orientalists. Dr. Koldeshey declares that the tiling he has found consists in fineness of glaze and lustrous beauty anything that modern art has ever attained, and he has therefore come to be convinced that he will find further specimens proving that even in the time of Abraham and earlier art had reached a high point of development on the plains of Mesopotamia.

Washington's Numerous Pews.

It is hardly conceivable that George Washington could have reminded the richest man in America had he paid rent for all the church pews accredited to him. Scarcely a village that had a church in his day but prided with pride now to the Washington family pew. It is true, however, that he' had much need of the invocation of spiritual grace, for when he lost control of a horse he never very mild, as he did at Trenton and other places, he could be capable of swearing a volley of good, round oaths.—Petersburg Index-Appeal.

Deaths of Turkish Sultans.

Abdul Hamid, sultan of Turkey, has just celebrated his 66th birthday. Thirty-four Othmans have reigned in Turkey since the present reign was less than fifty years, Solyman I. having sat upon the throne from 1520 to 1566. Only one sultan in the nineteenth century, only one in the eighteenth and only three in the seventeenth have lasted longer than Abdul, and most of his predecessors have been slain or put in chains before their friends were able to wish them many happy returns of their 30th birthday.

Pioneer in Hard Luck.

Petar Da Vilia, the discoverer of gold in the Klondike region and once fabulously rich, is now earning a livelihood by selling boxes at the Ben Lomond winery at Santa Cruz, Cal. He has a suit pending for the recovery of one of the richest mines in the Nome region, but has no means with which to prosecute it, and the case is likely to go against him by default.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

IT is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:

"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:

"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

THE PHILOSOPHER'S SONG.

What's the voice that lifts my spirit to the mountain peaks of song
But a diaphragm vibrating, making air-waves short and long?
What's the color that comes bursting from the crimson rose's bosom
But a chemical reaction ripples breaking on the shore of nerves.
What's the kiss of love, or touches coaling in the lover's veins of fire
But a phosphorescent glimmer in the dim cells of the brain?
What's the smile that lifts me, thrills me with excess of sweet delight
But a cellular contraction of red muscles linked in unison?
Could I cry to tender lovers shining in the moon
Tender bulbs of sense and reason, on their goblet down to die,
Oh, the color would be vanished where the moon's sensitive blend,
And the kiss, of red-cool summer changed into a thread of mold
Can [illegible] fingers three [illegible] they fraud.
Melting [illegible] assembling not the [illegible] whence they came.
All [illegible] is for without me with its [illegible] found
Wh[illegible] moon tremble, music's in the air
O f[illegible]
O blobl whence our dearest [illegible]
Over the gulf that lies beyond you, Fancy dredge her wanting sense.

A NEWSPAPER WOMAN.

BY LAURA O. LEVY.

It was the dull season on the Morning Star. Brown, the city editor, was hungrily seeking "spreads," and none were in sight. He brightened up when Grayson came into the city room. But the "crack" reporter had an ashen color quite different from his usual ruddy hue, the result of the active life he led.

He went up to the editor's desk and made his report, but evidently his news was "not stuff," for the editor looked up eagerly, asking: "Do you know the whole story? Did anyone get it? Have we her picture?"

The crack reporter hesitated in a strange manner and said: "Look here, Brown, can't we let the story slide? No one else has it. Don't print her picture."

Brown glanced sharply at his side with those keen eyes of his. "Nonsense!" he said; "make a good story of it."

Grayson was an unconscionable time writing the story, and, in the end, he made hardly a quarter of a column out of it. When it was finished he waited until he saw the editor getting into his overcoat to go home.

Brown and he were old friends. Together they had struggled for a foothold in the newspaper world, on the staff of the Moon. And together they had left it after Grayson's famous fight over his bill. He had been ordered to Johnstown at the time of the floods, and of course had gone at a moment's notice to brave dangers in pursuit of news for his paper. Nights in the open air, his cent rolled up for a pillow, on damp ground or in freight cars, once in a limekiln, once in the branches of a tree, he had raised a bill which was over the day of his departure. When he made out his bill for that eventful assignment, he added the cost of the suit. But the paper in whose service he had faithfully done and dared, whose prestige he assisted had been his work, cut out the 50c. Then he and his friend left it.

To-night he waited for Brown with reasonable surety. The two men walked up Broadway to their favorite restaurant, for a while in silence.

"You didn't remember Miss Taylor when I mentioned her just now, did you, Frank?" Grayson said, at length.

"Rarely; I lost track of her after we left the Moon. She was a pleasant, inoffensive little thing, wasn't she?"

"She was a rich nice girl, minding her own business, neither saucy nor sedate. I remember how she blushed when she was praised or when the boys [illegible] her."

"In short," put in Brown, "she was as unlike as possible what people think

SHE SEEMED ASLEEP.

answer. Then a dreadful idea came to her. Perhaps her kindness had been abused, and Miss Taylor had gone off without paying her. Of course, she was a great straight down to consummate this to her husband, as life sort of a fad now, when she supported, and we were upstairs looked up to finally. They came up together prepared to force the door if need be. The thought that if their guest were dead she'd have to face the lock it after her was too simple to occur to them.

They, strange to say, the door opened to their touch and there was the girl seated as she had been the day before. She was not writing. Her elbows were on the table, her head resting on her hands. She seemed asleep, for she did not notice Thompson's cough. But he was determined, warned by his servant, to be paid for the use of the room. He coughed again louder, then spoke her name, then approached her. The setting sun shone full on her face. She was dead.

"On the table there were a few sheets of manuscript—a little story just begun. The Gladstone bag held only some worn-out underclothes and a photograph. There was no sign of anything to owl in the room."

Brown's face exhaled Grayson's. "How had she died?" he asked, at length.

Grayson hesitated; then, slowly: "Of starvation. Her 'story' was simply an account of her suffering. Here, take it." He handed his friend a folded sheet and the latter read: "When first I met him I was well and working hard. But sickness came to put an end to all my hopes. I have been unable to get work. I have not had sufficient food or clothes or warmth in months. Would he be sorry if he knew? I have begged from passers-by. I have gone to charitable institutions, which "investigated" my case, but could not help me, there were so many appeals.' No doubt the end is in sight now. I wish, I wish he knew!"

The editor looked at Grayson, whose eyes were fastened on the ground.

"Where is the body?" he asked.

"You know Burnside gave us the slip. He's just been appointed to the morgue." Grayson spoke sharply and held out his hand for the "story."

Brown moved a pace longer. Then he said: "One question more, Bob: Whose was the photograph?"

"Mine."—Illustrated American.

NO LAUNDRIES IN CHINA.

Sailor Ponders Over What to Him Is a Mystery.

"It's the funniest thing to me," said an old sea captain who for many years was in the China trade, as he settled himself comfortably back in his chair and blew a few rings of smoke into the air, "that nine out of every ten Chinamen who come to this country start laundries and engage in a business which does not exist in their native land.

"Was everyone knows, the Chinese at home wear soft cotton and woolen garments, according to the season, and there is not a pound of starch in all China. Stiffly starched clothes are unknown, and the Chinese men do not do the washing, as they do in this country. Neither is there any regular laundry in the Flowery Kingdom. Therefore it is more than passing strange that Chinamen should all come to America to engage in a trade so foreign to their home industries."

HAD HIS LESSON LEARNED

Pupil in Mr. Rockefeller's Sunday School Gave Good Answer.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., as is well known, is an ardent Sunday School worker and superintends a number of youngsters every Sunday. His expectancies are not unlike those of other religious workers and the answers to some of his queries are amusing. In fact, one answer was entirely unique rather than amusing.

He desired to encourage the members of his class to commit to memory certain bible verses. Accordingly the teacher would quote a portion of the sentence, halt, and almost invariably the student would complete it.

"The earth is the Lord's?" suggested the teacher.

The boy could not continue.

"And the fullness thereof——" encouraged Mr. Rockefeller.

"Belongs to the Standard Oil company," added the pupil.

Kept Given Name Secret.

Col. A. W. Shaffer, ex-postmaster of Raleigh, N. C., and a man of prominence throughout the state, for the thirty-two years in Raleigh and was a resident of that place at the time of death last week. But no one there or elsewhere, not even his wife, knew his given name. When Col. Shaffer was appointed postmaster by President Harrison it was supposed, of course, that he would give his full name when subscribing to the oath of office, thus being required by the government. This colonel, however, refused to do so and it was only after considerable correspondence that he was permitted to assume the office. No one knows why he was so secret ive about the matter.

Negroes Will Reign Supreme.

An American paradise for the negro is to be established on Long Island, and it will be known as Beulah-land, and the design is to promote the colony with negroes from the Virginias, Pennsylvania and the southern states. The object is to have a cooperative colored colony. The colored man is to rule everything. Seventy-five hundred colored men and women will come from Georgia and South Carolina within a month. They will be established in portable houses capable of accommodating five persons and costing $125 each. Negroes will own and operate the factories, electric roads, electric light, gas and water plants.

Rather Ambiguous.

George Seton, a London writer, has published a budget of anecdotes, one of which tells of a fashionable lady who an appeared before Pope Leo in a very low-necked gown. His holiness disapproved of the costume so strongly that he sent a cardinal to remonstrate with the wearer. The messenger made this rather ambiguous speech, however: "Your dress, madam, is rather old-fashioned, you know, and children are very lazy in evening dress. I, on the other hand, who have spent six years of my life as a missionary among the cannibals, am quite used to it."

Where Feathers Come From.

The beautifully colored feathers one sees in the shops come from China, Japan, and the islands of the Pacific South seas. India, Africa and South America send a great quantity of parrakeets birds, herons, cockatoos and parrots, although most parrots' plumes come from China, where the small, green parrot is so common as to be almost a pest. The iridescent lapwing and the little merla come from South Africa. Wings and plumes from Japan take the place of the gull, now protected on American shores.

A Good Suggestion.

Boarders Tree, the London actor, has a daughter, Viola, who shows strong artistic tendencies, though she does not wish to enter the profession in which her parents have been so long prominent. When quite a little girl she begged her father to put her a penny. "But, my dear," said he, "a penny means a lot of money." Little Viola considered a moment and then said: "Well, why don't you get better and then you would get more money."

How Words Came True.

Senator Pritchard of North Carolina, telling how healthy his section of the state is, remarked: "A mountaineer, aged ninety-two, and his wife, aged ninety, were returning from the funeral of their oldest child, who had died at the age of seventy-one. They were both deeply grieved. As they were discussing their loss the wife said:

"'I always told you, John, that we would never raise that child.'"

Waltz of French Origin.

The controversy between continental papers as to the origin of the waltz was settled by the discovery that the first waltz heard at the French court on Nov. 9, 1778, when it was announced as the composition of a French count who called it "Volta." Heretofore it has been generally assumed that the waltz originated on the blue banube or thereabouts.

A Use for Crusts.

The Ohio [illegible] managers and economists, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, had been wondering what to do with the crusts of breads that are left out every time the 1,000 prisoners sit down to a meal. They finally decided to cut the crust off all bread and make the crust into bread pudding. Since this information has worked its way through the prison the piles of left-over crusts are daily increasing.

World Growing Very Small.

The British cable between Canada and Australia has been completed, and Marconi thinks he will soon open regular communication through the air between Nova Scotia and England. So the world grows smaller, in effect, and the brotherhood of the nations is brought nearer from out the dim future where poets have seen it in their dreams.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE

Olaf Mossbeck Left Home Last Friday And Has Not Returned.

Thief River Press: A disappearance which has created considerable disussion occurred last Friday when Olaf Mossbeck, section foreman on the Great Northern branch, left his home and family and has not since been heard from.

Mr. Mossbeck in company with one man started toward St. Hilaire Friday morning, and after running down within a few miles of that place the car was stopped. Here the foreman got off and started across country toward the east station by way of explanation that the Catholics and Irish were after him and that he must get out of the country if he would save his life.

The lono section man returned to town and reported the case to the depot employers, who in turn notified Mrs. Mossbeck and the railroad authorities.

Mrs. Mossbeck, who is left alone with several small children, did not appear to be greatly alarmed over the disappearance and consequently no search has been made for the missing man either by the railroad or city authorities.

In view of the woman's indifference it is thought by many that the desertion was, for reasons unknown to the public planned by the couple. Of this assertion there is, however, no proof. Another opinion advanced is that the man was demented, and his statement at the time of departure would give much color to this belief, although nothing unusual in his actions was noticed by those who came in contact with him during the morning, and no such person has been reported as being seen by any of the surrounding farmers or the authorities of nearby towns.

The entire affair is one which is at his writing, shrouded in a mystery which the wife refuses to dispel, if she is capable of doing so, and which there now is small prospect will ever be dissipated unless the missing man returns or is found.

For Sale Cheap—two organs—slightly used. Apply to Anderson & Schwleen.

THE RED LAKE RESERVATION

From the Crookston Times.

There is now hope that the eleven townships in the vicinity of Thief River Falls which the Red Lake Indians have ceded to the national government by treaty, will be opened to settlement by a bill now before congress. This bill has been introduced by Senator Clapp. It will easily pass the senate, and it is hoped that no obstruction will be met in the house.

The bill provides for the opening of eleven townships. The land is all agricultural. Attempts have been made to secure this land for settlement in the past, but all attempts have thus far failed. The fact that the land is still withheld from settlement is now seriously retarding the development of northern Minnesota. These eleven townships are among the richest lands of the valley and they will undoubtedly be immediately taken up by actual settlers and the country east and north of Thief River Falls will enjoy a substantial and immediate development in case the Red Lake bill passes.

Under the terms of the bill now before congress, the eleven townships will not be opened for homestead entry, but will be sold to the highest bidder at public auction, the price per acre to be in no case less than $4 per acre. Inasmuch as the lands are said to be worth from $20 to $40 per acre, there seems to be little chance for the poor man under the provisions of the bills. However, the bill provides that but one-fifth of the purchase price need be paid in cash, the balance being paid in five annual installments.

The effect of the cash auction sale will probably place a major portion of the land in the hands of speculators. It is argued that this method of disposing of the land will bring to the country a class of settlers with ready money, a class that will be more desirable for the rapid development of the country than if the lands were thrown open for homestead entry. This will, in a measure, prove to be true, but the big land companies now operating in northern Minnesota can be depended upon to be on the ground when the auction opens and the chances are they will be possessed of a great deal of the eleven townships when the bidding closes. But in any event, either actual settlers and owners or renters, will be placed on the land at once, and the chief object in opening the reservation will be accomplished.

In case the bill passes at this session of congress, a new treaty will have to be negotiated with the Indians, or at least, the treaty negotiated one year ago will have to be amended to meet the provisions of the bill. Under the present treaty, the government is to pay the Indians $3.92 per acre for the land.

In addition to the eleven townships in the vicinity of Thief River Falls, there are other agricultural lands scattered throughout the reservation which, it is hoped, can be opened for settlement within a short time. Nothing can be expected from the present session of congress in this respect. Congressman-elect Steenerson has much at heart the opening of all these agricultural lands and when the next congress assembles he will introduce a bill to provide for their opening. These lands have already been ceded to the government under the terms of the Nelson bill of 1889 and are generally classed with pine lands. It is true that portions of them are still covered with heavy pine and no attempt will be made to place these pine lands on the market for some years to come. But much of the land covered by the Nelson bill is purely agricultural and it is highly desirable that this should be made available for actual settlers as soon as possible.

The lands of the Red Lake reservation which are not devoted exclusively to the use of the Indians, or which are are not valuable for forestry purposes, should certainly be opened for settlement at the earliest possible date. Such action, together with a vigorous prosecution of drainage measures will result in a wonderful development in northern Minnesota during the ensuing five years.

The Visit of Dr. Lorenz.

After reading and hearing constantly of men working and sqniring for personal advancement, it is refreshing to hear of the beneficient achievements of Dr. Lorenz, the great Viennese surgeon. His visit to America and the wonderful blood-less operations performed by him was one of the most notable events in the history of American surgery. Physically this clever doctor is a giant, and his success in the special operations performed in New York is partly due to his great strength. Success in any line is dependent on good health, the kind of health that comes with drinking good malt bell beer, the purest of nerve tonics and health foods. Order of your nearest dealer, or be supplied by Alex Thompson Crookston.

EFFECT OF HIGH COLLARS.

Rabendasher Says They Have Weakened the Neck Muscles.

"A remarkable fact," says a Portland haberdasher, "has been revealed by the inauguration among men of very low collars. This fact is that the high, stiff collars heretofore worn have weakened men's neck muscles precisely as the corset weakens the back muscles of a woman. Several men who bought from me at the beginning of the summer backs of low collars, have returned them with the statement that they are unsatisfactory, while because they don't offer any support to the neck. High, stiff collars are a great support, you see, they relieve a certain set of muscles of the work they ought to do, and these muscles become in consequence flaccid and atrophied. Then, when a low collar is put on, weakened muscles are set to work and the result is discomfort and pain.—Portland Express.

WAS NOT A GRAMMARIAN

But the Stalwart Westerner Was Proud of Being an Oregonian.

Senator John L. Wilson of Oregon is one of the most popular men in the state. He went across the continent a few weeks ago with one of the pioneers of the neighboring state of Oregon. In the midst of a warm argument with a third passenger a dispute arose over the proper use of a word.

"I am willing to leave it to my friend from Portland," said Senator Wilson. "Tell us which is right; you are a grammarian."

"What did you say I was?" demanded the pioneer.

"You are a grammarian," repeated the senator.

"I am nothing of the kind, sir," he returned with some indignation, "I am an Oregonian and I'm proud of it."

Had Plenty of Surprises.

The removers of the old Portage railway near Altoona, Pa., is causing no end of disturbance among reptiles and wild beasts. Several days ago laborers clearing out a cutting of levelling unearthed a colony of wild rattlesnakes among the fallen rocks. Half the reptiles were stiff in the cold. Later a level man disconcerted his aim while sighting when a full-grown deer ran in front of his instrument. Half an hour later a man far down the slope dropped his implements and ran when a mother bear and two cubs came up in a friendly sort of way to see what was going on. All sorts of wild game are abundant along the line of the old road.

Dusse's Search for Rest.

Madame de Montmorel, mother of the late novelists, lives at Nice in a large, quiet house. She rarely receives visitors, but recently made an exception in favor of Eleanor Duse, the Italian actress, who is a great admirer of her son's work. When the two women were about to part, Madame de Montmorel said to the actress: "You have everything—genius, fame and wealth. What is there for me to wish you?" "Rest," was the unguileless reply. Duse then tiring to make the world accept the dramas of D'Annunzio.

The Babies in Japan.

The arrival of a baby is a very important event in Japan, especially if it be a boy. For seven days after the interesting event the house is full of relatives and friends, who come to congratulate the happy parents. At the end of twenty-one days it is etiquette for the parents to give a big feast to their friends in honor of the event, and it is understood that every guest gives a present of the value. The birth of a girl is greeted with less ceremony and she gets fewer presents.

Dissatisfied American Women.

The American woman is restless, dissatisfied. Society, whether among the highest or lowest classes, has driven her toward a destiny that is not normal. The factories are full of old maids; the colleges are full of old maids; the social rooms are the temples of millions are full of old maids. For natural obligations are substituted the fictitious duties of clubs, committees, meetings, organizations, professions, a thousand unnatural occupations.—Everybody's Magazine.

Longfellow's Birthplace.

Longfellow, the poet, was born in Portland, Me., in a house which is now a tenement, chiefly inhabited by poor Irish. A school teacher was instructing her pupils in the life of the poet recently and after a time began to ask questions: "Where was Longfellow born?" A cmubby, freckle-faced little chap held up his hand and is ready to be teacher's need shocked her with the saying confidently: "In Patsy Maguire's bedroom."

Sixty Years an Odd Fellow.

B. F. Simmons, of Baltimore, now in his sixty-fourth year, is the oldest living past grand master of the independent Order of Odd Fellows throughout the world, having been identified with the organization for sixty years. For a long period he has been on the executive board of the Maryland Baltimore, in which city he was born and educated.

Emperor William and Art.

Emperor William's Creed about art in the despair of the true artists among his subjects. In the first place, he is at all art should be patriotic; second place, German; third, it morally elevating in subject; thirdly, traditions are not easy to fully destroying the artists else ent this the emperor ignores.

VOTING IN OLDEN TIMES.

Election Methods in Baltimore Not "Unfolded" Fraud.

Andrew Simpson, one of the oldest voters in Baltimore, recalls with much amusement an incident at an election in the city in Know-Nothing times. A visitor of Baltimore was walking near one of the polls with his wife when he was approached by some of the Know-Nothings and asked to vote. He replied that he did not live in Baltimore, but they said that did not make any difference and bustled him up to the polls and put him where they threw him into the street. Another party came along, brushed the mud off him, declared it was a shame to treat him so, and asked him to vote again. He protested that he had just voted, but that made no difference and he voted and was again thrown into the street. In that way he voted three times.—Baltimore Sun.

NO BENEFIT IN SUFFERING.

Famous Physician Says It Invariably Sours the Temper.

"In all my experience as a physician," said Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, the Philadelphia nerve specialist, in a lecture last week, "I have not seen more than a dozen men or women who have been improved morally by long-continued suffering. Acute illness and illness which keeps the patient close to death often has a beneficial effect upon the disposition, but I cannot agree with the assertion which we frequently hear made in the pulpit that suffering is usually the means of refining. I have seen a few isolated cases in which this was so, but it is not the rule by any means. The chronic invalid is almost invariably selfish and peevish, and it is a hard task to find a nurse who can stand the strain of such a service."

No Duty on "Pants."

The custom houses of the United States admit all clerical robes and theological seed in church services free of duty. A clergyman not very long ago landed in New York with a large collection of surplices, stoles and vestments, and with a pair of trousers. The customs house examiner passed the clerical robes without a murmur. But he drew attention to the "pants" with the remark: "You must pay duty on these, for only those articles which you wear in divine service are free of duty." "My good fellow," replied the clergyman, "you surely would not expect me to officiate in my church without my 'pants'!" They were passed free of duty.

Heat Retained in Lava.

The lava streams from the eruption of Vesuvius in 1858 were so hot twelve years later that steam issued from their cracks and crevices. Those that flowed from Etna in 1787 were found to be steaming hot just below the crust as late as 1840. The volcano Jorullo, in Mexico, poured forth in 1759 lava that eighty-seven years later gave off columns of steaming vapor. In 1760 it was found that a stick thrust into the crevices instantly ignited, although no discomfort was experienced in walking on the hardened crust.

Irving's First Opportunity.

When he was a young actor Sir Henry John Morley was eminent chiefly as an amateur actor. Later in life he took a good deal of interest in London theaters. In the early 70s Mr. Bateman was lessee of the Lyceum theater. One day Bateman said to Morley: "I am at a loss to know what to play next." "Why don't you give that tall young man a chance as Hamlet?" asked Morley. The "tall young man" was Irving, in whom Mr. Morley saw the possibilities which were developed in after years.

Insanity in Professions.

A French investigator has come to the conclusion that the brains of naval and military men give out most quickly. He states that out of every 100,000 men of the army or naval professions 199 are hopeless lunatics. Of the liberal professions artists are the first to succumb to the brain straits, next the lawyers, followed at some distance by doctors, clergy, literary men and civil servants. Striking an average of this group 177 go mad to each 100,000.

To Show Water Route.

Tennessee's World's Fair exhibit may be transported all the way to St. Louis by water, just to show the people of the world that river navigation is open clear to Chattanooga. It is proposed to load the entire exhibit in the steamer Avalon at Chattanooga, carry it down the Tennessee across Northern Alabama, both across Tennessee and Kentucky to the Ohio, to the Mississippi, and up the Mississippi to St. Louis.

Smoke Nuisance Worries Vienna.

The smoke nuisance is annoying even the quiet soul of the Austrian and half of Vienna is worried because the other half is disfiguring the city with the black clouds from the chimneys of industry. Several proposed bills have been drawn up, and it is likely that in comparatively short time a strong effort will be made to have one or other of these become a law.

The Year's Cotton Crop.

A report issued by the Census Bureau places the quantity of the present crop of cotton which has been ginned up to October 18 at 5,236,872 running bales, which is estimated to be a little more than 60 per cent of the entire crop. The figures were collected by the agents of the bureau, and 29,-214 gineries are represented by the returns.

Color Was All Right.

The elder Dumas once was wearing the ribbon of a certain order, having recently been made a commandant, and an envious friend remarked upon it. "My dear fellow," he said, "that cordon is a wretched color. One would think it was your woolen vest that was showing." "Oh, no, my dear d'Er—," replied Dumas with a smile, "you're mistaken. It is not a bad color. It is exactly the shade of the sour grapes in the fable."

Mystery Cleared Up.

A steam crawler on the Gare Loch, Scotland, has brought up the remains of a horse and a carriage and harness. The recovery explains the disappearance 16 years ago of a doctor's coachman. He went to meet the doctor one wild night, and was never heard of again. At the time the belief was that he had be engulfed in a the river carried into the Gare Loch.

Export of Rabbit Skins.

Not everyone knows of the enormous trade between England and the United States in rabbit skins. Over 3,000,000 were sent to us by one Birmingham dealer last year. The skins are first sent to the Continent, where the long hairs are extracted by hand, the skins being subsequently prepared for the making of hats.

Rarity Among Women.

There may be some husbands who will be filled with envy when they read that the chap something in which Lucretia is said to be lends her to presence always for long intervals on in the presence of guests. Certainly her alleged wonderful gift is a more acute and objectionable form.

Ireland's School Census.

The commissioners of National Education in Ireland in their report which was issued recently state that during the past year they had provided places for 987,406 pupils. The number in average attendance, which in 1900 had already increased last year an increase of 2,807.

A Bridegroom's Gift.

Cameos are again coming into fashion, and some beautiful things in this line are to be seen in the shops. A recent bride's "corbeille." The bridegroom gave his future wife a cameo brooch for each cameo being a life-like profile of the bride's father, mother, brothers and sisters.

Superstition About Cats.

Scotch peasants believe that a cat scraping is a sign that some beast—horse, pig or dog—will be found dead on the farm before long. A cat washing its face portends rain next day; washing its back to the fire portends storms and rains.

Carlyle's Good Advice.

Many of the ills from which women suffer can be completely cured with Rocky Mountain Tea. Rich, red blood, bright eyes and good health follow. 35 cents. A. L. Reichert.

Some Valuable Hints.

If your collar is dry it will be healthy for the children; if it is damp it will do to raise that delicacy, snails, in which cases no much profit. Suggests the Baltimore Herald. Water in the cellar can be used for the purpose and the conservatories could be used for ducks, which are palatable; these few hints may suffice to suggest many profitable industry to homekeepers.

I have then, O yes I have thee,
But it's all that I can ever be,
For my visions of thy beauty
My dreams are Rocky Mountain Tea.
—A. L. Reichert.

Must Remain Legally Blind.

A German dancing master, who the other day appeared before the tribunal of Hamburg, Germany, for a trivial offence, was described in the charge-sheet as blind. He protested against this assertion, and politely requested the judge to correct the mistake, as there was nothing wrong with his eyesight. He was, however, informed that no alteration could be made in consequence the man will remain legally blind as long as he lives.

A. L. Reichert.

German Postal Stages.

The multiplication of railways has not diminished the number of postal stages in Germany. On the contrary, the number of stage drivers rose from 5,176 in 1898 to 5,314 in 1900.

Year's Cranberry Crop.

The 1903 cranberry crop of the United States is estimated at 726,000 bushels, against 1,040,000 bushels in 1901.

Bringing It Home.

When Horace Greeley wrote a famous speech for the dedication of a building that had cost many thousand dollars devote to the reforestation of bad boys, he said: "If all this which has been spent upon this building were used in the reformation of one boy, it is money well spent." Somebody said to him: "Mr. Mann do you think one boy is worth all that money?" He replied: "Yes, if it is my boy or your boy."—Primary Education.

What Determination Can Do.

Dr. John Clifford, a famous English preacher, when eleven years old, began to work as an ordinary "hand" in a lace factory. At sixteen, he was manager of the lace mending department, later he became a bookkeeper, and then began the studies which enabled him to become a great preacher.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from strangulation, says A. L. Spafford, postmaster, Chester, Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and repeated often. It relieved the swelling and inflammation, cut the mucous and tightness and she was resting easy and speedily recovered. It cures coughs, colds, la grippe, and all throat and lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure instantly relieves the throat and chest and expels the lungs to contribute pure, health-giving oxygen to the blood. A. L. Reichert.

Zola Not Popular in Paris.

A goodly number of municipalities in France have decided to have streets named after Zola—Zola is one of them. There is e movement to this effect in Paris, but it does not promise to be successful. The French subscription toward the erection of a monument to Zola now amounts to about $7,000 francs.

A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An abnormal authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. Get all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. This rest and the wholesome tonics Kodol contains soon restore health. Resting unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fullness and bloating from which some people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

W. C. SMILEY,

SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER.

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA.

Four years experience as U. S. Hydrological Survey in Minnesota. Has resided in Polk county and had surveys in nine of the surrounding counties of Minnesota. Farm and ditch surveys. Maps and plats.

In ten minutes three men stood on the deck of the ferry-boat. Some one had nailed no in English to lower something. I had lowered nothing; but here they were on deck. They asked me a lot of questions, but I answered none of them.

"Is your captain with you?" I said. They answered that he was not, that he was on the steamer. "Then take me to him," said I.

"Of course we will," said their leader with a smile. And they took me.

I was received on the steamer with much cordiality and much questioning, but to none of it did I pay any attention. I addressed the captain.

"Sir," said I, "I will be obliged to you if you will immediately cruise to the southward and pick up four men. Direct preserver with a little white flag attached to it. I also carrie a message for me, wrapped in a piece of oiled silk. It is very important that I should obtain that message without delay.

"Is it important?" said he. "Why, man!" said he, "what are you thinking of? Do you suppose that I can go out of my course to cruise after a life-preserver?"

I looked at him with scorn. "Unmanly fiend!" said I.

Another officer now approached whom I afterward knew to be the ship's doctor.

"Come, come now," he said, "don't let us have any hard words. The captain is only joking." Of course he will return after your life-preserver and no doubt will come up with it very soon. In the meantime you must come below and have something to eat and drink and rest yourself."

Satisfied by this assurance I went below, was given food and medicine and was put into a berth, where I remained for four days, in a half insensible condition, knowing nothing—caring for nothing.

When I came on deck again I was very weak, but I had regained my senses and the captain and I talked rationally together. I told him how I had come on board the Sparhawk and how I had fallen in with the La Plideau, half wrecked, having on board only a dear friend of mine. In answer to his questions I described the details of the communications between the two vessels and could not avoid mentioning the wild hopes and heart-breaking disappointments of that terrible time. And, somewhat to my languid surprise, the captain asked no questions regarding these subjects, but finished by thanking him for having taken me from the wreck, but added that I felt like a false-hearted coward for having deserted upon the sea the woman I loved, who now would never know my fate, nor I hers.

"Don't be too sure of that," said the captain, "for you are about to hear from her now."

I gazed at him in blank amazement. "Yes," said the captain, "I have seen her and she has sent me to you. But I see you are all knocked into a heap and I will make the story as short as I can. This vessel of mine is bound from Liverpool to La Guayra and on the way down we called at Lisbon. On the morning of the day I was to sail from there there came into port the Mary Glanford, a big English merchantman, from Buenos Ayres to London. I knew her skipper, Captain Guy Chesters, as handsome a young English sailor as ever stood upon a deck.

CHAPTER V.

"In less than an hour from the time we dropped anchor Captain Guy was on my vessel. He was on the lookout, he said, for some craft bound for South America or the West Indies, and was delighted to find me there. Then he told me that ten days before he had taken on board from a half-wrecked French steamer and that they had prayed and brought him to cruise about and look for the Sparhawk, a helpless ship with a friend of theirs afore on board.

"'You know, old Captain Guy to me, 'I couldn't do that, for I'd lost time enough already, and the wind was very light and variable, so all I could do was to vow to the ladies that when we got to Lisbon we'd be bound to find a steamer going south, and that she could easily keep a lookout for the Sparhawk and take off the friend.' That was a pretty big contract you marked out for the steamer going south,' I said, 'and so far the Sparhawk she's an old derelict and I sighted her on my voyages north and south a respectful few positions and there couldn't have been anybody on board of her then.' 'Can't say,' said Captain Guy; 'from what I can make out this fellow must have boarded her a good while after she was abandoned and seems to have been lying low after that. Was that so, sir? Did my lie low?'

I made no answer. My whole soul was engaged in the comprehension of the fact that Bertha had sent for me.

"Go on!" I cried.

"All right," said he, "I ought not to keep you waiting. I promised Captain Guy I would keep a lookout for the Sparhawk and take you off if you were on board. I promised the quickest because my conscience was growling at me for having, perhaps, passed a fellow being on an abandoned vessel. But I had heard of the Sparhawk before. I had sighted her and so didn't keep a very sharp lookout for living beings aboard. Then Captain Guy took me on board his ship to see the two ladies, for they wanted to give me instructions themselves. And I'll tell you what, my boy, don't often see two prettier women on board ship, nor anywhere else for that matter. Captain Guy told me that he knew I saw them. He was in great spirits about his luck. He is the luckiest fellow in the merchant service. Now, it I had picked up two people that way it would have been very old men. But you gets a couple of lovely ladies; that's the way the world goes. The ladies made me pretty sigh swear that I'd never set foot on shore till I found you. I would have been glad enough to stay there all day and make promises to those women, but my time was short and I had to leave them to Captain Guy. So I did keep a lookout for the Sparhawk and heard of her from two vessels coming north and finally fell in with you. And a regular lunatic you were when I took you on board; but that's not to be wondered at; and you seem to be all right now."

"Did you not bring me any message from them?" I asked.

"Oh, yes, now," said the captain. "Let me see if I can remember some of them." And then he knit his brows with the effort, and repeated several very commonplace expressions of congratulation and sympathy.

The effect of these upon me was very different from what the captain had expected. I had hoped for a note, a line —anything direct from Bertha. If she had written something which would explain the meaning of those last words from Mary Philips, whether that creplantation were favorable or otherwise, I would have been better satisfied; but now my terrible anxiety was more intense.

"Well," said the captain, "you don't seem cheered up much by word from four friends. I was too busy looking to do anything else when I sighted the wreck, said, but I know they told me they were going to London in the Mary Glanford. I remembered, because it struck me what a jolly piece of good luck it all was for Captain Guy."

"And for what port are you bound?" I asked. "La Guayra," he said. "It isn't a very good time of the year to be there, but I don't think that you can find some vessel or other there that will take you north, so you're all right."

I was not all right. Bertha was saved; I was saved; but I had received no message. I knew nothing, and I was going away from her.

Two or three days more on the cozy, calm cruise to me and said: "Look here, young man, you seem to be in the worst kind of doleful dumps. People who have been picked up in the middle of the ocean don't generally look like that. I wonder if you're not a little homesick on account of a young woman on the Glanford."

I rode no answer. I would not rebuke him, for he had saved my life, but this was a subject on which I did not wish to discuss with a sea captain.

"If that's really what's the matter with you," said he, "I can give you a piece of advice which will do you good if you take it. I think you will not know you are not engaged to this lady," (I nodded) "and that you were prepared to her except through a speaking-trumpet." I allowed this to be quite correct.

"Well, now, my advice is to give her up, to drop all thoughts of her and to make up your mind to tackle some some other girl when you find one that is good enough. You haven't the least chance in the world with this one. Captain Guy is all right as far as he goes. He sold me so himself, and when he's not and on in love with a girl he's bound to get her. When I was with him a month have been married once a month if he'd chosen to but he didn't choose. Now he does choose, and I can tell you that he's not going to make love through a speaking-trumpet. He'll go ashore, and he'll win, too. There's not every reason why he should win. In the first place, he's one of the handsomest fellows and I don't doubt one of the best love-makers that you would be likely to meet on land or sea. And then again, she has every reason to be grateful to him and to look on him as a hero."

I listened without a word. The captain's reasoning seemed to me very fallacious.

"You don't know it," said he, "but Captain Guy did a good deal more than pick up those two women from an abandoned vessel. You see he was making his way north with a pretty fair wind from the southward, the last thing I had for several days, and when his lookout sighted La Plideau nearly in the morning, he knew that it would be useless for him to go to her, for the log long way to the west of his course, though pretty well in sight.

"But Captain Guy has sharp eyes and a good glass, and he vowed that he could see something on the wreck that looked like a handkerchief waved by a woman. He told me this himself as we were walking from my ship to his. Every body laughed at him and wanted to know if women waved handkerchiefs different from other people.

"They said that any bit of canvas might wave like that, and that it was plain enough that the vessel was abandoned. If it was not, it could be, for there was a boat still hanging to one of its davits. Captain Guy paid no attention to this, but spoke a little longer, then he vowed that he was going to make for that vessel. There was one of the owners on board and he my brother Captain Guy to do it. He told him that they had been delayed enough on the voyage by light winds and now that they would be under steam he must put a good many days before they got there. Every one knew, he said, how money lost to the owners. He had never heard of any skipper undertaking a piece of tomfoolery like this. It would take all day to beat up to that wreck and when they reached her, how long would it take to wreck. So he ordered the ship put down, paying no attention to the cursing and swearing of the owner, and beat against a wind that was getting lighter and lighter for over four hours until he reached the French steamer and took off the two ladies.

"There was nobody on board the Glanford save the brutes that Captain Guy will not shoot until they speak. And in fact he don't like to do that, for he says that to me 'If I can marry that girl, the ship will go.' If I can't get another ship, I can sail under a skipper. But there's no other girl in the world like this one.'

"And so you see, sir," he continued, "there isn't the least chance in the world for you. Captain Guy has you on board his ship, he's with her by sunlight and starlight, first one in the ship for her and he wants to marry her. And the end is inevitable. In two weeks and weeks and perhaps months before you can see her, or write to her either, as I see you do, you will find that Captain Guy will have his affair settled. It does not require much sense in my mind to doubt which way it will settle. And so you just take my advice, sir, and stop drawing that long face. There are plenty of good girls in the world, no reason why you should not get one, but if you are moping for the one that Captain Guy's got his eyes upon I'm afraid you'll end by being as much out of the way as the Flying Dutchman."

When we reached La Guayra—and the voyage seemed to me a never-ending one—I immediately set about finding a vessel bound for England. My captain advised me to go up on the mountains and wait until a steamer should sail for New York, which event might be expected in two or three weeks. America would be much better for me, he thought, than a sailing vessel for England. I took no attention to him, and as there was nothing in port that would sail for England I took passage in a Spanish steamer bound for Barcelona. Arriving there, I had no longer enough to give me plenty of time for the voyage home. Then I should be able to hear from Mary Phillips, and of the value of the communications I had received regarding Guy Chesters.

I immediately started by rail for London. In this journey I found that what I had heard concerning the reason of my Bertha had had a greater effect upon me than I had supposed. Trains could not go fast enough for me. I was in restless e a maniac; I may have looked like one.

Over and over I tried to quiet myself by comforting reflections, saying to myself, for instance, that if the message which Bertha had sent floating on the sea to me had not been a good one she would not have sent it. Bad as she might, she could not have been heartbreaked as to crush the hopes at a man who, like herself, might soon lie in a watery grave. But then, there was that terrible word, "Beware!" locked as in certain light what could be more crushing or heart-breaking than that.

And then again Mary Phillips may not have understood what I said to her through the speaking-trumpet. A grim humor of despair suggested that at that distance, and in that bi stering wind, his faithful maid-servant might have thought that instead of shouting that I loved my Bertha, I was asking her if they had plenty of salt pork and hardtack. It was indeed a time of terrible suspense.

I did not know Bertha's address in England. I knew that she had friends in London and others in the country; but I was sure that I would find her if she were on the island. I arrived in London very early in the morning, too early to expect to find open any of the banking houses or other places where Americans would be likely to register. Unable to remain inactive, I took a cab and drove to the London docks.

I went to inquire the whereabouts of Captain Guy Chester.

This plan of action was almost repulsive to me, but I felt that it offered an opportunity which I should not neglect. I would cordially learn about Bertha if I saw him, and whether it would be a thing good or any thing bad I ought to know it.

In making my inquiries the cabman was of much assistance to me. And after having been referred from one person to another I at last found, in a manifest mate of a vessel in the docks, who knew Captain Chesters and could tell me all about him.

"Yes, sir," said he, "I can tell you where to find Captain Guy Chesters. He's on shore, for he doesn't command the Glanford now, and as for as I know he hasn't signed articles yet either as skipper or mate in any other craft. The fact is he's engaged to a heiress, which I suppose he thinks better than sailing the seas. He was married about a month ago. It's only two or three days since he's got back from a little land trip they took on the continent. I saw him myself before he left. The heiress was alive. But its as like as not that he's ready for business now that he's got through with his honeymoon, and if it's a skipper you're looking for you can't find a better man than Captain Guy, not about these docks."

I stood and looked at the man without seeing him, and then in a hollow voice asked: "Where does he live?"

"A hundred and nine Lisbury street, Calistoy road, East. Now that I've told you I wish I hadn't. You look as though you were going to measure him for a coffin."

"Thank you," said I, and walked away.

I told the cabman to drive me to the corner of Lisbury street, and in due time we arrived in front of a very good-looking house, in a quiet and respectable street.

It was a peculiar state of mind. I had half expected the terrible shock and I had received it. But I had not been stunned. I had been aware of the unusual condition of mental activity. My senses were sharpened by the torment of hope and I observed every thing in the quarter of the city, the street, the house.

The woman who opened the door startled a little when she saw me and asked for Mrs. Captain Chesters and walked in, without waiting to be told whether she was in or not. The woman showed me into a little parlor and left me. Her manner plainly indicated that she suspected something was not right with me.

In a very short time a tall, well-made man with curly brown hair, a handsome, sun-browned face and that fine presence which commend at sea frequently gives, entered the room.

"I understand, sir," said he, "that you asked for my wife, but I thought I help her to come to you myself. What's your business with her, sir, and what is your name?"

"My name is Charles Rockwell," I said, "and my business is to see her. If she has already forgotten me perhaps you can tell her that I kept company with her for awhile on the Atlantic Ocean when she was in one wreck and I was in another."

"Good heavens" cried the young sailor. "Do you mean to say that you are the man I saved on the derelict Sparhawk? And were you picked up by Captain Stearns, whom I sent after you? I supposed he would have written to me about you."

"I came faster than a letter would come," I answered. "Can I see her?"

"Why, certainly," said the Captain Guy. "I never know a man so talked about as you have been since I fell in with the wreck of that French steamer. By George! sir, there was a time when I was dead jealous of you. But I'm married right and now and that's out of everything. Come with me. Of course you shall see her."

He left the room and presently I heard the sound of running footsteps, the door was opened and Mary Phillips entered, closely followed by the captain. I started before I shouted as if I had a speaking-trumpet to my mouth:

"What!" I cried, "is this your wife?"

"Yes," said Captain Guy, stopping forward, "of course she is. Why not?"

But I was not to be put with cross-ex I rushed upon Mary Phillips and folded her in a wild embrace. I heard a burst of nautical oaths and probably would have been felled by a nautical fist had Mary screamed to her husband:

"Stop, Guy!" she cried; "I understand him. It's all right. He's come after me."

I released her from my embrace, and, staggering back, sank upon a chair.

"Here's a pleasant how-d'ye-do, Guy," she said, and wheeling up a great easy-chair she told me to sit in it, for I looked dreadfully tired. I took the chair, and when the wine was brought I drank it.

"Where is Miss Ingress?" I asked.

"Miss Nugent is all right," said Mary Phillips, "that is we were all right a week a word about her or any thing else until you've had some breakfast. I know you have not tasted food this day."

I admitted that I had not. I would eat, I would do any thing, so that afterwards she would tell me about Bertha.

When I had a cup of coffee and some toast which Mary brought to me upon a tray I arose from my chair.

ARE we of Minnesota drifting toward imperialism? The Republicans are talking of giving us a Governor Lord.

WILLIAM R. DAY, former secretary of state, will be appointed as an associate justice of the United States supreme court to succeed Justice Shiras, who is about to retire.

WE are told again by Congressman Tawney that the tariff must be revised by its friends. As the most active friends of the tariff are the beneficiaries the wisdom of the suggestion is apparent.

IT costs money to open an Indian reservation. According to the city clerk's report Thief River Falls spent $3,100 last year for that purpose. And it didn't open, either, but we'll hope for better luck next time.

FAIR weather friends should not be too loud in their protensions,

WEEDS

Consumption is a human weed flourishing best in weak lungs. Like other weeds it's easily destroyed while young; when old, sometimes impossible.

Strengthen the lungs as you would weak land and the weeds will disappear.

The best lung fertilizer is Scott's Emulsion. Salt pork is good too, but it is very hard to digest.

The time to treat consumption is when you begin trying to hide it from yourself. Others see it, you won't.

Don't wait until you can't deceive yourself any longer. Begin with the first thought to take Scott's Emulsion. If it isn't really consumption so much the better; you will soon forget it and be better for the treatment. If it is consumption you can't expect to be cured at once, but if you will begin in time and will be rigidly regular in your treatment you will win.

Scott's Emulsion, fresh air, rest all you can, eat all you can, that's the treatment and that's the best treatment.

We will send you a little of the Emulsion free.

Be sure this little picture is on the wrapper. It is the trademark of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

The Gazette editor should remember that only a few moons have waxed and waned since he was persistently active in his opposition to Congressman Steenerson.

THE re-election of United States Senator Henry M. Teller by the Colorado legislature ought to be gratifying to the fair-minded men of all parties. Few statesman have performed such yoeman service to the country as has the grand old man of the Centeanial state.

SECRETARY HITCHCOCK has made a report on Senator Clapp's bill for opening the Red Lake reservation, in which he suggests several radical amendments. He wants the minimum price of land fixed at $5 per mere instead of $4. He is also in favor of requiring cash payments in full for lands, but if deferred payments are decided upon, he suggests the purchasers be allowed ninety days' grace when payments are due. He also suggests that deferred payments bear six per cent. interest.

A WRITER for the Human Review says that "instead of being the highest, man is in some respects the lowest of the animal kingdom. Man is the most unchaste, the most miserly, the most drunken, the most hypocritical and the most atrocious of all living creatures. No animal except man gloats over accumulations that are of no possible use to him and often an injury, and in whose acquisition he has often committed irreparable crimes upon others. No animal except man kills for the mere pastime of killing. No other form of animal life organizes packs or bands for indiscriminate slaughter. Vipers and hyenas do not kill for recreation." Now what do you think of yourself?

THE Gazette seems to lying awake of nights to prevent THE COURIER from libelling Congressman Steenerson. To relieve our contemporary of the necessity of exercising such extraordinary vigilance we wish to say that this paper has never treated Mr. Steenerson unfairly nor purposely misrepresented him. A recent item regarding the re-appointment of Mrs. Marshall as postmistress of Red Lake Falls was written under a misapprehension as to the date Mrs. Marshall's first term expired, and is a pleasure for us to make the correction in justice to all parties concerned. Since the term expired in January instead of May, it was clearly within the provinces of Congressman Eddy to dictate the appointment. The attempt of the Gazette to make the public believe that this paper purposely misstated the facts is to be expected, but the sincerity of the Gazette has so often been put to the test and found wanting that there is no disposition on the part of the people to believe the exaggerations put forth by that paper.

ANCIENT LAWS.

The oldest code of laws in the world was recently discovered by French archaeologists in Susa, the ancient capital of Persia, says the State Prison Mirror. There are 282 of them, short, sweet and decidedly to the point, framed by King Hammurabi of Babylon about 2,300 years before Christ. Engraved on a block of stone, they have withstood the action of the elements to be deciphered, translated and commented upon by French and German savants in the twentieth century, A. D. The code was received direct by Hammurabi from the sun god. The king explains this. Many of them differ but little from the English laws of two centuries ago and some which are in force today. Mercy is conspicuous by its absence, as is to be expected in a code emanating from such a primitive civilization. But then, even today one can find traces of the "eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth" doctrine if one looks for it.

Among the first provisions of the code is one calculated to uphold the probity of the bench. It says:

"If a Judge has charge of a trial and passes a judgment has been put into working, and if afterward it turns out that this judgment has been false and the Judge is then convicted of having given a false decision, then he shall return the fine he has inflicted twelvefold and he shall be deprived of his office as Judge and shall never return to the office."

Another discourages house breaking in the following manner:

"If anybody breaks a hole into a house he shall be killed in front of this hole and shall be buried there."

Here are some other selections from the code, which while they were written some five hundred years before the time of Moses, prove that the Jews were not alone in their outspoken desire for vengeance:

"If a son strike his father his hands shall hewn off.

"If anybody strikes out the eye of another, his own shall be forfeited.

"If anybody breaks the bone of another, his bone, too, shall be broken.

"If anybody destroys the teeth of his equal, his teeth, too, shall be broken."

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Brady and Verne Healy.

The physiology class is to be given a test the last next Friday.

The chemistry class had experiments in sulphuric acid this week.

The geometry class has completed the two first books and have begun on the third.

Some of the descriptive briefs in English composition were more humorous than descriptive.

The higher algebra class is reviewing the book preparatory to the final test to be held in two weeks.

Last Thursday Miss Lusby announced that there only two cases of absence and no tardiness on that day.

The picture of the ruins of Athens by the class of '02 has been put up in the high school room as a souvenir.

The canvass for a captain for this year's base ball club has begun. The election will be held in the near future.

We believe our high school notes on the subject of tardiness have had the desired effect. Some of the pupils do not go home to dinner for fear of not getting back to school in time.

The new model laundry is operated by the classes of '03 and '04. They learned the trade in the laboratory. The process is performed by dissolving cloths with HNO3 (nitric acid.)

Mr. Whiteley has informed the high school pupils that they are not to make calls on the teachers in the other rooms during school hours. He did not designate the boys guilty of this offense.

Last Wednesday the juniors cleaned the desks in the laboratory, and the results are shining bottles. On some of the desks they left notes reading: "Please leave this as clean as you find it."

From the assembly room last Thursday morning we heard the tchooping of big men in the laboratory, and we afterward heard that it was caused by someone trying to put a fire in the waste box.

Senate File No. 44 of the South Dakota legislature is a bill making it a crime to watch or play a game of foot ball, punishable by a fine of $1,000 to watch a game and $5,000 to play. We're glad we don't live in South Dakota.

Next Friday occurs the debate on the subject: "Resolved, That the Present Pension System of the Country is Not Wise." Though on a very dry subject this debate is going to be very good, because all the members of both teams are good debaters.

The crowned heads of every nation, The rich men, poor men and misers All join in paying tribute to DeWitt's Little Early Risers. H. Williams, San Antonio, Tex., writes: Little Early Riser Pills are the best I used in my family. I unhesitatingly recommend them to everybody. They cure constipation, biliousness, sick headache, torpid liver, jaundice, malaria and all other liver troubles. A. L. Reichert.

Finds Way to Live Long.

The startling announcement of a Discovery that will surely lengthen life is made by editor O. H. Downey, of Churubusco, Ind "I with to state," he writes, "that Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption is the most infallible remedy that I have ever known for coughs, colds and grip. It is invaluable to people with weak lungs. Having this wonderful medicine no one need dread pneumonia or consumption. Its relief is instant and cure certain." W. A. Schenter guarantees every 50c and $1.00 bottle, and give trial bottles free.

A Cough

"I have made a most thorough trial of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and can recommend it to any one afflicted with diseases of the lungs it never disappoints."

J. Early Finley, Ironton, O.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral won't cure rheumatism; we never said it would. It won't cure dyspepsia; we never claimed it. But it will cure your cough or colds of all kinds. It first said this sixty years ago; we've been saying it ever since.

Cough over Cough. If you will take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral as soon as you begin to cough, you will not have a bad cough. It will cure you quickly.

FEBRUARY 4

Father Cleary is one of the finest orators before the public today, and every resident of our city should hear him.

Reserved Seats on Sale FRIDAY NOON

SECURE SEATS EARLY

The people of Red Lake Falls should make it a point to hear Rev. Father Cleary at the Metropolitan February 4.

A party of young people took possession of P. N. Bourdon's home one night this week, and a jolly good time was had.

Joseph Perrault, Noel Delorme, Emery Levack and Dan Latendresse went to Blackduck last week for a visit with friends.

Conductor Hank Murray, an old time favorite in Red Lake Falls, was in charge of the passenger train on this branch Saturday.

F. J. Parker is here from Marshall this week in company with John W. Blake, who expects to buy a farm from the Healy agency.

W. C. Smiley returned to his home at Thief River Falls Saturday after spending several weeks in this vicinity doing surveying work.

Misses Clara Berg and Sophie Brekke and Mr. John Rice came in from Wyandotte Friday for a short visit with friends and relatives.

August Krueger has been suffering from an attack of quinsey this week, and has been confined to the house a greater part of the time.

Perl W. Mabey, the popular Thief River attorney, was a professional visitor to the county-seat Monday and paid his respects at THE COURIER office.

J. L. Johnson, deputy county auditor, has moved his family down from St. Hilaire. They are occupying the building just north of the court house.

Vorsbrock & McGuire, of Crookston, have leased a building at Thief River Falls and intend to open a music store in that city about February 12.

A petition from the residents of Columbia and Belmont counties for a $10,000 state ditch in eastern Columbia was presented to the legislature Tuesday.

Scott C. Hall returned to Grand Forks Saturday after having spent the week visiting friends and relatives at this place and the other cities on the "P" line.

Frank A. Mixer, of the Northern Pacific, is now agent for the Travelers' accident insurance company, and persons contemplating a long trip should secure a policy.

County Attorney Grady left last evening for Minneapolis where he will attend to some business matters and visit a few days with his family, who are visiting in that city.

The many Red Lake Falls friends of Charlie Ackerland will be pleased to learn that he has been advanced to the position of regular carrier in the postal service at Crookston.

A bright baby girl came to gladden the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Raney Tuesday. Mother and child are doing nicely and the genial Bob wears a happy smile at all times.

Rev. Father Cleary of the Metropolitan Wednesday evening, February 4. Don't miss this opportunity to hear one of America's most talented and entertaining speakers.

A pleasant young folks' party was held at the Beautrow home last evening, cards and dancing being indulged in. A large crowd was present and all had a pleasant time.

S. A. Swanson and wife returned Saturday from their trip to Roseau. They made the entire trip overland, and a drive of 160 miles at this season isn't a pleasure trip by a long ways.

Wiley Tindolph writes us that he wants to exchange city property in Thief River Falls for a good road team and pig. Anyone interested in this proposition should write Mr. Tindolph at Thief River Falls.

William Vague, the Poplar River farmer who was badly injured in a railroad wreck at Holland, Pipestone county, a few weeks ago, is reported to be about well, and will soon be able to return home.

Wm. Beautrow leaves Friday with his stock and furniture for North Yakima, Washington, where he recently purchased a farm. The family will follow as soon as Mr. Beautrow gets things in shape.

The last chance to get clothing at 20 per cent. discount at the Surprise store is advertised this week. These unprecedented bargains cannot last long and now is the accepted time to take advantage of them.

Judge Knight returned Saturday from St. Paul, where he has been taking electrical treatment for several weeks. The Judge looks much improved in health, and THE COURIER trusts he will continue to grow hale and hearty.

Mrs. William Schwalen and William Scons left today for their home near Hudson, Wis. Mrs. Schwalen expects to visit with her parents for about a month, while Mr. Scons does not expect to return to Red Lake Falls to live.

Vic. Knight left the latter part of last week with his household goods for his claim in Itasca county. The family will follow as soon as their son, who is just recovering from a serious illness, is strong enough to stand the journey.

A. E. Engrum, vice-president of the Wilfred Main company, of Minneapolis, spent last week in consultation with the officials of the Red Lake Falls Milling company, with a view to remodeling and enlarging the capacity of the mill.

Geo. Cheadle will hold an auction sale at his farm Friday, at which time he will sell his personal property. Mr. and Mrs. Cheadle will leave shortly for Cleveland, this state, near which place they will make their future home.

A basket social will be held at the village of Garnes on Saturday evening, February 7, at 7 o'clock p. m., the proceeds of which will be given to Elling Halvorsen, who recently had the misfortune to lose one of his arms. Everybody is invited.

Gov. Van Sant has appointed A. Grindeland, of Warren; Dr. N. M. Watson, of Red Lake Falls, and L. H. Bailey, of Bemidji, to appraise the value of public buildings in Polk county for the porpose of the organization of Columbia county.

The next monthly entertainment of the Red Lake Falls band will occur sometime between the 15th and 20th of February. Prof. Smith assures us that the program will be one of much merit, and the people will all anxiously await its rendition.

Representative Simons sent word yesterday that Governor Van Sant had signed the bill changing the time of holding the winter term of the district court in Red Lake county from February to March. Under this act court will convene March 23.

The Knights of Pythias report a revival of enthusiasm. At the meeting Monday evening two applications for membership were received and several more are in prospect for next week. The first degree will be conferred Monday night, and the lodge expects to be kept busy during the remainder of the winter.

Representative Simons has introduced a bill in the house allowing towns to maintain a representative at Washington to lobby in their interest. The bill is the result of the effort at Thief River Falls to prevent the city from paying Mayor Kratka's expenses while in Washington lobbying for the Red Lake bill.

The band concert at the Metropolitan last Friday night was liberally patronized, and from every standpoint excelled all previous efforts by the band. Every number was encored, and the audience seemed to be particularly delighted with the bass solo. Another concert is planned for the latter part of February.

Frank Johnson will arrive from Rippey, Iowa, within a short time to farm the southeast of section 6, Lake Pleasant, which he has rented from the owner, Rev. Gillis, of Marshall. Mr. Johnson will bring considerable live stock and farm machinery with him and will make a valuable acquisition to the farming interests of Lake Pleasant.

J. M. Bray returned Saturday from Blackduck, where he visited his brothers for several days. One of the brothers, Zotique, had his hands badly burned about two weeks ago while filling a lighted gasoline lamp, and J. M. brought him to St. Vincent's hospital at Crookston, where he will remain until he is able to return to work.

The lecture by Rev. Father Cleary at the Metropolitan opera house next Wednesday evening, February 4, should bring out every citizen within a radius of twenty-five miles or more. There is not a more brilliant orator on the lecture platform today. This will be a rare intellectual treat, and you will get your money's worth many times over. Tell your friends about it.

Chas. Elvidge and wife will arrive from Marshall, this state, about the first of the month and will take up their residence on the west half of section 34, Louisville, which they recently purchased from the Healy Land company. In the early spring Mr. Elvidge will erect a fine set of buildings on the place and in other ways improve it, making it second to none in the Red River Valley.

The Red Lake Falls band will give a concert in the Imperial opera house at St. Hilaire on the evening of February 10. The program will probably be the same as the one rendered at the promenade concert here last Friday evening, with some additions and changes, and Tom Cotton can assure the people of St. Hilaire that they will never have an opportunity of listening to better music.

The Columbia county quo warranto case came up in the supreme court yesterday. The different parties were all represented by a formidable array of legal talent. The answer of the Columbia county people was filed and the case put over until the April term. It is understood that the court has intimated that the case is too complex a one to decide on short notice, and that the members of the court desire to make a thorough investigation. Hence the postponement.

An exchange notes that a boy can sit on a sled six inches square and can set on an inch board and talk politics for three hours, but put him in a church pew for forty minutes and he gets nervous, twists and goes to sleep. A man can pouch his cheeks with tobacco and the juice running down his cheek feels good, but a hair in the butter simply knocks him out completely.

Join the big new class in bookkeeping, short hand and type-writing the first week in February at Button's Business College and get a discount of 50 per cent. from regular tuition fee. There will be a tremendous demand for stenographers and book-keepers the coming spring and that is why we make this liberal offer. We now have eighty-eight pupils and have fitted up another room for the new class. Send for circular and enroll at once. Address J. A. Button, Principal, Crookston, Minnesota.

J. D. Gallagher arrived from Iowa Falls, Tuesday, and will commence preparations for the erection of a fine set of buildings on the 242 acres in section 14, north of the Red Lake river, known as the McClathie land. This farm was sold to L. E. Jones, the Iowa Falls capitalist, by the Healy agency, last spring, and Mr. Gallagher has come to take charge of the work of improving and cultivating it. He will move his family here as soon as things are in shape and become a permanent resident of the banner county of Minnesota.

The Windom Citizen is responsible for this paragraph: Our reporter was in one of our butcher shops the other day and was somewhat startled by one of the proprietors addressing a customer boy in these words: "Now, boy, look lively. Break the bones in Mr. Pfeffer's chops, and put Mr. Smith's ribs in your basket; and, by jove, here's Mrs. Re—'s liver that she left on the counter yesterday, and take Mr. Miller's feet out of pickle and deliver right off." "All right, sir," replied the boy, "just as quick as I saw Miss Johnson's leg off."

Rev. Father Payolle was the recipient last Sunday of a handsome fur-lined overcoat, presented by members of the church and other friends. The presentation was made at the close of the morning service, and came as a complete surprise to the genial pastor. An amusing circumstance in connection therewith was the apparent difficulty of Father Payolle in buying a coat last week. He decided some days ago that a new overcoat was a necessity, but as the merchants were all aware of the intended gift, he was unable to find a store that would sell him the much-desired article. This unwillingness to part with goods to a cash customer puzzled Father Payolle, but later developments explained the mystery.

An exchange knows what it was writing about when it published the following: The trade territory of a town is not all dependent upon the distance to neighboring trading points. The territory depends upon the enterprise of the merchants and the residents of the town. If a town does not reach out after the trade it will only camo as far as it has to and the town will only grow as it is forced to. But if the merchants go after the business in the surrounding country, advertising in every possible way, and make good every word of their advertising, the trade will come from every increasing radia and the town will gain a reputation for being awake and it will force to the front. It is the men in the town and not altogether the number living within a certain number of miles from it that makes the town good or good for nothing."

The Use of Arm. Heart Trouble. Could Not Eat, Sleep or Walk.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure Cured Entirely.

"If it hadn't been for Dr. Miles' Remedies I would not be here to write this letter. Two years ago last June I lost the use of my left arm, could not use it and could only move it with the help of my right hand. My heart was so weak I could not sleep nights for smothering spells. I was out at carts all over and could not walking. I grew to want that I could not walk without staggering like a drunken man. I was under the care of a doctor all the while, but was getting so much pain I was almost wild. I could not take morphine nor opium as they made me worse. So I got to thinking about Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine and the more I thought about it the more I wanted to try them. I wrote to the Dr. Miles' Medical Co. for advice which I followed to the letter. I can now say that I am a well man. I can use my arm as well as ever and can walk two or three miles and not mind it. I can also use my arm again as well as ever. You do not know how thankful I am for those grand medicines Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and Nervine. I think Dr. Miles' Remedies are the best in the world, and if I should get sick again I should take the same medicine. That terrible pain in my heart and laughter Ville no wonderfully that I should have written you a letter of thanks. I would say to any one that is sick or run down, Write Dr. Miles' Medical Co. Elkhart, Ind., and they will give you advice free. Yours truly, Samuel Adams, Minn."

FORTUNE TELLING.

When on the grain was summer's gold,
And blue was summer's sky,
We went to have our fortunes told,
A witching maid and I.
The Gypsy sibyl seemed uncouth
And weird to look upon,
And yet for each of us, in sooth,
A merry tale she spun.

Mine was a kindly horoscope;
I heard my birth above
Had hung the happy star of hope,
The lambent star of love.
The star of love that bringeth bliss,
I learned, still sped its glow,
Much more the sibyl said, but this
Was all I cared to know.

Then into Sylvia's slender hand
I saw the Gypsy pour,
And words I longed to understand
Were whispered in her ear;
While on each cheek the rosy bud birth
Grew deeper as she read,
As when the winter-darkened earth
Feels spring's divine desire.

We left behind the Gypsy old,
And 'neath a dusky pine
Again was that fair story told
That I could tell by heart;
Then Sylvia, with a merry peal
Laughed in her winning way,
"That's what," triumphantly she cried,
"The Gypsy said you'd say."
—Clinton Scollard, in Harper's Bazar.

THE THEATER HAT.

"WHAT have you got to do this evening?" asked Cynthe.

"Nothing whatever," I replied.

"Well," said he, "I have a couple of seats for the California. Don't you want to come?"

"I should be delighted, my dear boy." And in a few minutes we were in a cab, rolling toward the theater.

Scarcely had we settled ourselves in our seats when I saw, entering the row in front of us, a tall, thin blond, who seated herself in the chair immediately in front of mine. And then I saw with stupefaction that she wore upon her head a curious sort of hat, cocked down in front and cocked up behind, garnished with flowers, with vegetables, with shrubs—in fact, a veritable garden. As she had cocked her cocked hat over her eyes, it resulted that the rear of this vegetable garden towered above the top of her blond chignon, so that I could see no more of the stage than if I had been in far Cathay.

The bell rang; the curtain rose; I heard voices—presumably of actors—but it was impossible for me to tell. As the risk of acquiring a telescopic neck, I leaned to the right, then to the left. But I had not counted on the balloon sleeves of the blond, which were perfect monsters of swollen silk, and which masked completely both wings of the stage as her hat did the middle.

"Holy smoke!" said I to my friend. "That hat is going to be rather a nuisance."

The blond lady heard me; she turned slightly, put up her lorgnon, and surveyed me with the utmost haughtiness. Then, shrugging her shoulders, she pulled up her sleeves, so that it was impossible for me to see even the proscenium arch. Then she braced up her feet against the chair in front, and hoisted herself up a few inches, so that by this gymnastic feat she succeeded in elevating her vegetable garden even more than before.

In a melancholy tone I said to Cynthe: "It seems to me I would have been better if I had stayed at the club and toasted my toes in the cafe in front of the fire. I would not have been incommoded or discommoded, and I would have seen fully as much of this piece as I am seeing now."

Hearing this, the blond lady turned around once more, and favored me with the most sneering smile that I have ever seen. It provoked me, and I determined to give her a lesson if I could. For I might as well have been in a phonetic phone listening at a telephone. I could hear, but I could see nothing. Voices —female voices, male voices—were distinctly come to my ear. You know how perplexing it is when you cannot see the personages upon the stage, when you cannot note their gestures nor the play of their faces. But the first act terminated in the midst of roars of applause. Aman I knew, three seats to my right, was shaking with laughter. Everybody in the theater seemed to be intensely amused at the play except myself. And the blond lady would still turn from time to time and favor me again with her sneering smile.

Seated immediately in front of the blond lady was a very little man who looked like a hunchback, his head was an sunken between his shoulders. I looked at him carefully. He had the appearance of being a dead-head, owing to his rather shabby attire. I tapped him on the shoulder, and asked him if he would go out with me between the acts for a few minutes. When we were outside, I said to him:

"My dear sir, I have a particular interest in occupying your chair, No. 48. If you will pardon the liberty I have taken, I would like to give you this trifle." (I slipped a five-dollar piece into his hand), "and, in exchange, I would like to have your seat and you may have mine, No. 92."

The little man's face lighted up with pleasure. He slipped my five-dollar piece into his waistcoat pocket, and said: "Certainly, my dear sir. You are very good. I will take your seat with pleasure."

Thus was I placed in possession of seat 48. Now I could see the stage, but still I was not revenged. My first idea was to install myself there, wearing my own high hat, and I reflected that this manifestation might not be understood, would seem disrespectful to the actors, and that I would be forced to take it off. Suddenly an idea flashed across my mind—an inspiration. I left the theater and walked a block or two until I came to a milliner's shop, entered and demanded of the mlleswoman to sell me a hat—the most gigantic the most arborifereous, the most pyramidal hat she had. She opened a drawer and exhibited to me a monument in black felt, with an enormous knob of black velvet upon its top, and on top of the black felt knob a puff of black flowers, extremely high. Without haggling, I paid her the price, and swiftly returned to the theater.

To the stupefaction of Cynthe, who was still seated in his chair, No. 92, I thrust out my No. 48, immediately before the blonde lady with the big hat, and then, with a perfectly serious countenance, I placed upon my head the black velvet monument. I do not know what sort of a figure I cut with my long mustaches under the velvet hat, but if would had been in the orchestra it would not have produced a greater effect. Exhaustions came from every direction. People climbed up on their seats to see me, omid roars of laughter.

The men—poor wretches, they do stand together once in awhile—understood the motive of my protest, and cried: "Bravo! Bravo! He is right!" while the agitated Cynthe screamed to me across the blonde lady's helpless sleeves: "Why, old man, you are going crazy." None she less, I remained impassive in the midst of the tempest which I had let loose. But the usual reverse came. Two ushers, after consultation, came to me and politely begged me to take off my hat. "Certainly," said I, "if you will make the lady take off hers." This response provoked the utmost enthusiasm from the men. But the ushers would not listen to reason, and they made me leave my seat.

The lady with the vegetable garden triumphed, but not for long.

Looking up toward the family circle, I saw a colored damsel wearing a small turban. I mounted to the circle. I went to the colored girl. "Pardon me," said I, "but I have just purchased a hat which cost me very nearly a quarter of an hour ago." I exhibited the black velvet monument, and the colored lady's eyes bulged out in amazement and admiration.

"And what about it?" said she.

"Nothing but this: is it yours if you will do me the favor to occupy my seat in the orchestra, No. 48, until the play is over."

In a second she swept off the little turban which she wore, placed the black velvet monument upon her head, gave it two or three taps before the mirror in the lobby, shook out her skirts, and then, taking my arm, I conducted her to orchestra chair No. 48.

Oh, if you had only seen the convulsive joy among the men in the orchestra when they saw my monument in her respectable if not feminine head. This time the ushers had nothing to say. The lady with the vegetable garden was vanquished. She could see nothing during the rest of the piece, and served as a focus from opera-glasses from all over the house.

Revenge! Revenge! At last I was revenged. Ha, ha!—San Francisco Argonaut.

He Didn't Know.

Magistrate Peter Hughes, who loves a good joke, tells of a recent personal experience with great glee. In a certain case the other day a big colored woman was a witness. She testified that she had whipped her little boy very severely, and she went on with the story of the exceedingly stiff beating she had administered the judge's dear. Then grew a little darker, and he interrupted her to ask if it had been necessary to chastise the boy so severely. The witness opened her eyes widely at the question. Seeing intently at the court, she inquired: "Judge, was you ever de father of a wuthless mulatter boy?" "No, no," responded Magistrate Hughes, hastily. "Then, judge, you don't know nuffin' about de case."—Philadelphia Record.

In a Restaurant.

Guest (to waiter)—This beefsteak that you brought me isn't fit to eat; it must be three weeks old.

Waiter—I beg your pardon, sir, I made a mistake; I brought you antelope steak instead.

Guest (tries it again)—Why that tastes delicious; why didn't you tell me before that it was antelope steak!"—Texas Siftings.

CHEW TONS OF GUM.

Cleveland First and Chicago Second in the Consumption.

Cleveland claims to be the headquarters of chewing and chewing gum. It is asserted that more gum is manufactured and consumed in that city than in any other, difference to population not being considered, and the two greatest manufacturers of chewing gum are numbered among its merchant princes. They find it difficult to spend their incomes. But Chicago comes in for the second place, and the best judges estimate that our people use about a ton of gum a day—that is, 2,000 chewing sessions, 730,000 pieces and costing $2,000. That is a very small expenditure for the amount of pleasure and good that is derived from the habit; for, while gum chewing may not be reduced or elegant, it is considered very healthful. It aids digestion, prevents dyspepsia, cures insomnia, concentrates the mind and promotes meditation.—Chicago Record-Herald.

FEMALE NATURE NOT CHANGED

Women of Biblical Times Fond of Paint and Powder.

Prof. Hilprecht, the Babylonian explorer, lecturing upon his discoveries at Nippur, tells of one which shows that the women of that famous city and those of the present day are "sisters under their skin." He says: "Beside the coffee, in which it was found, were jars containing jewels, trinkets and belongings of the dead. There were paints in those jars, too, for the dead women. For these ancients believed that the departed one would need toilet articles to enable her to make an appearance on her spiritual journey."

Landmark of the Golden Gate.

Near the lower entrance to the Golden Gate park, the upper end system of Yellowstone National Park, stands a vertical proxy of rock, a sort of rough monolith, with slightly elliptical cross section, perhaps seven or eight feet thick, in larger dimension at the base, and tapering gently to a height of twelve or fifteen feet. This seems to be a familiar landmark, and when a year or two ago it was planned to reconstruct this portion of the road, preparatory to building a beautiful concrete viaduct and reviving the grade, the higher localities at this point threatened a sacrifice of the old stone. But so many and earnest were the protests that it was decided to preserve it.

Respected the Law.

Respected the Law.

"Gentlemen!" cries the Texas sheriff to the mob as it surged about the jail. "Gentlemen, I beg of, you to have proper respect for the officers of the law. At least wait until the judge and the coroner can be summoned. They felt pretty had last week because you went ahead and had the lynching without letting them in on the game."

Appreciating the fact that the servants of the people were entitled to a hearing, the mob courteously sat down and waited for the sheoot officers.

Parker Has Aroused Jealousy.

Now that Sir Gilbert Parker has established a reputation as a novelist in so many directions—novelist, playwright, writer of short stories, parliamentarian, generous entertainer and so on—he has aroused some jealousy. A story in point is related of a noted literary man who is credited with saying that he frequently wakes up in the middle of the night, when he is still "I raise myself in my elbow," says this jealous literary person, "and I can distinctly hear Parker stumbling, stumbling, stumbling."

Wrote Wrong Obituary.

A London newspaper man, said to be capable, was suddenly called upon to write an obituary of Irene Harkin. With a mind full of something else—we are not told what—he wrote a column and a half, and sent it to the printer. When it come back in proof he was horrified to find that he had written a lengthy article about Merle Teale. It was too late to rewrite the obituary and he was obliged to change the name and the titles of the books and let the article go to.

Stag and Eagle.

In India, Admiral Kennedy had the following adventure: "I was out alone for a stroll one day with my rifle, when I saw a splendid stag. I crawled toward him, but when passing an open glade in the forest there was a sound as of a mighty wind directly overhead. Looking up I saw a splendid white-tailed eagle beating the wind within ten yards of me. I raised the rifle and covered it, but did not fire. The action lost me my stag, for when I looked again it had gone."

Engineering Device of Value.

Artificial freezing is a device much resorted to for sinking pit shafts through quicksands, holding the earth in a compress of ice to ward off the inrushing of water. The system was first applied in 1883 by a mining engineer named Mcaes, and after a long struggle against difficulties and imperfections is only just beginning to approach security and certitude.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

IT is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

WANT A WILD EAST SHOW

Possibilities Suggested in Visit of King of Siam.

Hamilton King, United States minister to Siam, has hinted that King Chulalongkorn would like very much to visit this country as a guest of the nation. It is further said that his imperial majesty has set apart 1,000,000 ticals ($650,000) to pay the expenses of such a visit. Secretary Hay computes the cost of entertaining his royal visitor at $10,000. If for this outlay the king will leave behind him the large sum above named and give a free show all along the route, the visit will not be a bad investment. A real king, traveling with full retinue, will be something new. Foreign princes are no longer novelties, but an oriental monarch traversing the country in full regalia would be worth while. Let the invitation sought be extended by all means, even if its acceptance puts "Buffalo Bill" out of business for the time being.—Portland Oregonian.

EMERSON FIRM IN HIS IDEAS

Why Philosopher Was Opposed to Use of Shoe Blacking.

Frank B. Sanborn of Concord, in troduced by Dr. Curry as the last of the Concord school of philosophers, says the Boston Transcript, proceeded without preamble to a very personal and intimate presentation of Emerson as he knew him during thirty years. His two most lasting impressions were of Emerson's way of looking from his companion's face as he talked, and of the philosopher's shoes, which were innocent of any blacking. This latter circumstance was the result of a decision arrived at by Emerson and his friends that if he insisted in tanning some out a certain color they would not change it by artificial pigments.

A Great Loss to Science.

A story is told of the late Prof Snell of Amherst College, which relates how he once asked for a definition of the solar corona from a member of his class in astronomy. The young man, after a good deal of hesitation and a dread consciousness of impending failure, plunged desperately into the statement that he did know what the corona was but had forgotten. The professor turned to his class with a tragic gesture. "What an inestimable loss to science," he exclaimed, with emotion, "that the only man who ever knew what the sun's corona is has forgotten!"

Astor's Gift to the Public.

In a published letter Col. John Jacob Astor surrenders to the public all his rights, title and interest in patent No. 690,821, for a turbine engine. As the inventor his hope is "that the due development of the ideal turbine may be hastened thereby." The engine is a novel design and Col. Astor thinks that the advantages derivable from it will be reduced weight, higher steam efficiency and "higher machinery efficiency, by reason of the reduced size, enabling the parts to be fitted more perfectly, permitting the diminution of friction and also the reduction of the leakage loss."

Expedient of Reduced Nobility.

An American who was spending the winter in Naples had taken a flat in a palazzo, the first floor of which was occupied by a noble family in somewhat reduced circumstances. He soon found, to his surprise, that every day he met a servant going up or down the stairs carrying a pair of carriage doors. At last the mystery was explained. The noble family shared a carriage with some other families, but each had its own doors, with the family coat of arms, to make their friends believe that they all had carriages.

The French Sugar Harvest.

The Journal Official publishes the results of the French sugar harvest ended Sept. 1, 1902. The number of factories was 332, and they used 56,414,587,261 pounds of beet roots, against 19,218,466,496 pounds for 334 factories in 1901. The total output of refined sugar has been 7,449,564,760 pounds, which is greater by 29,537,083 pounds than that of the immediately preceding harvest. The yield of refined sugar is 11.83 per cent of beet root, against 12.52 per cent in 1901.

Photographs on Canvas.

A Frenchman has successfully worked a scheme for photographing paintings on canvas and afterward filling in the colors, a method by which a masterpiece may be reproduced perfect in outline, and as bear the original in coloring as the eye of the connoisseur can make it, in not over one-fourth the time it takes a painter to copy a picture free hand. It looks as if even art were not going to be long much longer.—Indianapolis News.

Transmission of Electricity.

Electrical transmission of energy involves problems quite distinct from its development. A great waterpower, or a location where fuel is cheap, may offer opportunity to generate electrical energy at an exceptionally low rate of cost. This energy may be used so close to the point of its development that the cost of transmission is too small for separate consideration, says the Cassius Magazine.

A Letter-Writing Nation.

This is a nation of letter writers. Otherwise the estimate of the postmaster general of the entire appropriation for postmasters in the United States would not approach the total of $68,295,920 for the next fiscal year, nor the complete sum of mail expenditures exceed that amount by scores of millions, says the New York Tribune.

RICHES DISCLOSED BY DOGS.

Two Instances in Which They Unearthed Much Wealth.

In the latest Australian mining news, says the London Daily Chronicle, there is an account of the discovery of a valuable golden reef in a curious fashion. A dog out walking with his master, a farmer, chased and caught a kangaroo. In the struggle ground got torn up, and when the farmer arrived on the scene his eye detected some exposed specimens of golden quartz. Further search revealed a rich reef, and the farmer's bank balance has been considerably increased by his dog's fight with the kangaroo. Thirty years ago a long productive Australian gold field was discovered through a short-tempered settler seizing the nearest stone and throwing it at the dog. Returning good for evil, the dog brought the stone back to his master in its mouth. The man looked at it. It was a lump of quartz thickly studded with gold.

HOTEL UNDER THE SEA

French Watering Place Offers Visitors Unique Attraction.

Near Perdun, on the south coast of France, there is a submarine hotel, which attracts large numbers of visitors every summer. The building is sited on concrete foundations, and has been fitted with large plate glass windows, from which the guests may look upon the beauties of submarine life at a depth of six fathoms. Elaborate machinery at the surface pumps sea air to those immured below, and at the same time draws away the impure air through draught tubes. It was in this hotel that the famous novelist Richebourg penned some of his most thrilling romances when taking flight from the cares, the hauts and soins of the French capital.

Tale of a Shirt.

Hood's song of a shirt is outdone by the tale of a shirt which comes from Washington. A young man, an applicant for a civil service job, having passed in all but the weight examination was told to go away and fatten up. Thirty days after he appeared, removed his outer clothing and tipped the beam at the required 138 pounds. The medical examiner congratulated the young man and he was just about to step down off the scales when an iron weight fell from somewhere and rang on the scale platform. Attached to the weight was a string and from the string dangled a piece of linen from the tail of a shirt.

A Philosophical Suicide.

Dr. G. L. Cook, a throat specialist in New York, recently gave up practice because of his age. He lived comfortably with his sister and had nothing to do, but time hung heavy on his hands. A day or two ago he went home and calmly said: "I am getting old. I'm in the way and don't like to go on like this. I don't want to bother anyone and I don't want anyone to bother me. So it's better for me to die. I have taken three grains of morphine." A physician was on the spot in a very short time, but the old man was beyond recovery and died in an hour or so.

Cave Dwellers in England.

There are several remarkable cave dwellings at Knaresborough, in Yorkshire, England, the proprietor of one of which has altered the various levels of his hillside cave home with battlements, and calls it Fort Montague. At Arceley Kings, in Worcestershire; Sexton, near Exeter; Seaham, on the Durham coast; Staverton castle, Castle Hill, Dudley, and elsewhere are other homes of modern troglodytes; and at Lodsig, near Oban, a cave is fitted up and for a long time used as a place of worship.

A Good Balfour Story.

When Mr. Balfour was secretary for Ireland, says To-day, and, as somebody extravagantly expressed it, "half the nation were in prison and the other half were going to see them," he took occasion to ask the celebrated Father Healey the following question: "Do the Irish really hate me as much as their newspapers say?" "My dear sir," replied the priest, "if they only hated the devil half as much as they hate you my occupation would be gone."

Reanimates Heart From Corpse.

In a dispatch from Moscow the correspondent of the London Daily Mail says that a Dr. Koulatte has succeeded in his experiments in reanimating the heart of an infant which he had extracted from a child who had died twenty-four hours previously. The heart beat with normal regularity for one hour. Dr. Koulatte hopes that his discovery will assist in resuscitation in cases of death by drowning.

Train Hushed Through Torrent.

During a recent heavy rain the New York & Harlem railroad tracks at Brewster were suddenly flooded to an unusual depth and traffic was seriously impeded. A north-bound mail dashed down a grade and encountered the torrent, of which the crew had been given no warning. The momentum of the train carried it through the isolated section without damage.

How It Was Done.

Senator Hoar was showing some Massachusetts visitors about Washington one day and was pointing out a magnificent old residence built years ago by a famous and rather shady lawyer of his time. "Why," was asked, "was he able to build a house like that by his practice?" "Yes," replied the senator, "by his practice and his practices."

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE; but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, thus justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLER WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next five years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not test us well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $5.00 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

A MYSTERY.

A carriage passed this way to-day;
A stately carriage all in gray;
With polished panels and nodding plumes,
And in it lay a mystery.

A coffined form, with pallid face,
And hands crossed meekly on its breast;
With pale lips wearing still a smile
That tells a tale of peaceful rest.

Slow is the pace, but all too soon
The end is reached—the quiet grave,
Where we must leave our loved and lost,
Our God has taken what He gave.

O mystery of life and death!
How great the mystery of death!
We live, we move, we feel,
We're gone! 'Tis like a passing breath!

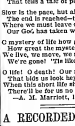
O life! O death! Our faith how great!
That life on both beyond is given,
When this short life shall fade away,
There'll be for us no mystery.

—A. M. Marriott, in Chicago Record.

A RECORDED PROPOSAL.

BY GEORGE ADE.

The persons concerned were Walter Humphries, James K. Willington and the Mrs. Willington who had been Miss Laura Babbitt before it happened.



Humphries was little better than an eavesdropper, and James K. Willington was the hero of it.

Willington was James K.* Willington, not "James" or "J. K.," for in this world of shoulder-sloppers he had never allowed anyone to reduce him to the position of a mere "Jim." Therefore he was a successful lawyer who rapidly would have gone a long way toward demanding respect and rent.

Miss Laura Babbitt was in mourning; only a few when she first came into the office. Her father, lately gone to the reward of all well-end lawyers, had been a power in the community. He had made speeches at mass meetings and more than once he had shaken the challenge of private debate at all who doubted the efficacy of infant baptism or believed there could be any virtue in a protective tariff.

He was sincerely beloved by a large household, to which he bequeathed a library and a tin box containing the proofs that he had given several mortgages. A few weeks after his death Laura Babbitt, turned 21, gave up her water colors and her painting on china and came to the office of James K. Willington to do typewriting.

James K. Willington and Laura Babbitt's father had always disagreed as to baptism and the tariff, and so they had been great friends. They would meet in the Babbitt library of a Sunday afternoon and pound back and forth with great earnestness, coming out at ten time both flushed, happy and thoroughly unconvinced.

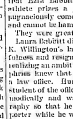
Ezra Babbitt had never taken to his lawyer any one who agreed with him on all the main propositions. In the presence of a man who assented willingly Ezra Babbitt's argument had no work to perform. It became a mere injury service. James K. Willington disputed sweet Ezra Babbitt's prized bon as an athletic prizes a punching bag that spontaneously comes back when struck, and cannot be hammered to a standstill.

They were great friends.

Laura Babbitt had been work at James K. Willington's law office with cheerfulness and resignation, as if she were sacrificing an ambition, but Walter Humphries knew that she didn't belong in a law office. Humphries was for law student of the office. He read law spasmodically and was hearing strong reply so that he could be a court reporter while he was waiting for practice.

He had got so far along in shorthand that he could "take" an ordinary conversation, and he found it a most convenient exercise to attempt on the lighter any talk that was going on in the office. Upon writing out his notes he came to an appreciation of the fact that most conversation is immensely trivial.

Humphries never suspected James K. Willington.



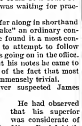
He had observed that his superior was considerate of Miss Babbitt's wishes and made her work light, but he was unprepared for what happened. It may be noted at this time that Laura Babbitt was and Mrs. James K. Willington is a very good-looking young woman. However, that is mere detail.

Humphries sat at his table just outside of James K. Willington's private office. Perhaps Willington had forgotten that Humphries was there. One would be a reasonable conclusion in the knowledge of what happened next.

Laura Babbitt came in from luncheon and seeing James K. Willington in his office went in to speak to him, nodding to Humphries as she passed him.

The law student was practicing his pot-hooks at the time. According to habit, he began taking the conversation in the room just behind him. He didn't realize that he was a guilty eavesdropper until it was too late, and then he went on taking notes because he knew that such a record might prove interesting.

This is the conversation. Mr. Willington began it:



"Hello, there."

"How do you do? I finished that, Mr. Willington."

"Is that so? How was the writing?"

"It wasn't as bad. One word there bothered me some."

"I don't believe it was written very well. Most lawyers are bad writers. Your father wrote an awful hand."

"Didn't he, though?"

"Sit down, Miss Babbitt. Say, I wanted to get up to see your mother some time this week about that Thomas matter. How is she?"

"She's well—that is, rather well."

"That . good. So she doesn't worry —that's the main thing: How does she like the notion of your working down here?"

"Well, you know she told me to do what I thought was best."

"Yes. Well, how do you like it by this time?"

"I don't mind it."

"Well, I don't know—I don't know. How about that new paper I had sent over—any better?"

"Yes, it writes first-rate."

"Does it? I didn't know. I told him to send something better than that last. You've kept Grace at school, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"That's right. I'd keep her there as long as I could. That's the way your mother would feel about a matter of that kind. She wants to get out and do something, too—is that it?"

"She thinks she might—might be able so do something."

"Yes. Let's see, I guess I'm not keeping you from any work, am I?"

"No, indeed, Mr. Willington, you haven't given me much work lately. I read all yesterday afternoon."

"Oh, pshaw, why didn't you go home? Nobody can make me believe that a girl likes to be around an office. I wouldn't have let you set foot in this office if you hadn't begged to come down here."

"I like that. Haven't I done the work as well as anyone could?"

"Oh, yes, I didn't mean it that way—not at all that way. By George, this is going to be a beautiful day after all."

"Isn't it, though? It's perfectly lovely out to-day."

"Yes, sir—er—that's so. This sets a man to thinking of his vacation. You'll think of your last. Isn't it a bad thing to wear a hat in the house?"

"That's a man for you. Take a hat doesn't weigh anything."

"Doesn't it? Is it—what is it, new?"

"Now? Gracious me, I had it all last summer."

"It looks new. Now—ah—I'm in a funny fix, Miss Babbitt."

"What's the matter?"

"I told you I'd rather not have you working in the office?"

"Why, Mr. Willington!"

"Come, hold on. When you asked me I couldn't very well refuse, but at the same time I didn't want to put you in a position that you would feel under the —well, say, under any obligations to me."

"Why didn't you want me to feel that way—under obligations?"

"Well, I'll tell you. If I were to ask you to do something and you consented and said 'yes'—I don't know—it might have the appearance of me having put you in a place where you couldn't be well, free to speak your mind."

"Why—I—what is it you might ask me that I wouldn't want to do?"

"Well, for one thing, I might ask you about getting—if you'd care to marry me."

"Me—shoot that?"

"Yes; I hadn't said anything about it before. Look out; don't let your hat slip off."

"I won't."

"I thought it was going to slip off of your head there. About that—maybe I oughtn't to have said it, but I thought I ought to. You want to ask yourself, though—a man ten or twelve years older than you are."

"I was just getting my breath back."

"I expect that did surprise you. You'd better speak to your mother, no matter what your judgment in the matter is. I wouldn't urge haste and I want you to be unprejudiced. I ought to have spoken to you about this before you came into the office at all, I said."

"No, you needn't have. You've been as nice as you could be about everything—helping us and all that. Tonight I'll speak to mother, but I think—I'm pretty sure—it's all right."

"Well, you're relieved me by taking that view of it. Just let it stand that way for the present. You're glad—by the way your mother says. I would if I were you. There's not a thing for you to do at this office this afternoon. Maybe it would be all right if I went out to the house with you."

"Of course it would. Come on."

"All right. Don't drop your hat."

Humphries tiptoed from the room, his heart at zero and the shorthand record of the wonderful proposal crumpled under his arm.—Chicago Record.

A Near Man's Gems.

"The meanest man I ever saw," the irrepressible Judge Murphy exclaimed to a crowd of admirers, "was never appeared in my court as a defendant, and it is lucky for him. As a matter of course he was a newspaper man—a blankety-blank rascal of a reporter. One day he was playing seven-up with a young lady, and guess what he did? He told her that whenever she had the luck of trumps it was a sure sign her lover was thinking of her. Then he weaded her, and whenever she blushed and looked pleased he would lead a high card and catch her pack. A man who would do that would steal a hot stove or write a libelous joke about me."—St. Louis Republic.

What Might Have Been.

Colonial Secretary Chamberlain's offer on the part of the government of Great Britain to favorably consider the representation of the colonies in one or the other of the two houses of the imperial parliament approaches a revolution of the colonial system. Had England made a proposition to the original American states, what a change would have been effected in the colonial history of America.

Has Attraction for Dogs.

A bulldog attacked Julius Sieger, near his home in West New York, N. J., and the savage brute sank its teeth in his arm. Sieger grabbed the dog by the throat and dashed out its brains against a telephone pole. The animal was the first dog that has attacked him within a month, and all of them he served in the same way.

How He Might Be Identified.

An American tourist was told in Paris of an Auvergnat coal merchant of that city, who was found intoxicated in the gutter, and when he was asked he didn't know, "but go and ask the coal merchant in the Rue des Feoles. If he is at home, I don't know who I am, if he's out, it's me."

Getting Rid of the Cause.

Doctor (indignantly) after sampling a bottle of whisky)—Here, my man, that will never do. That's the cause of all the trouble. Penelope Pelliet—Well, then, fill your glass, sir, for when you've found the cause, the sooner we get rid of it the better. —Glasgow Evening Times.

No Use as Fuel.

"As to the suggestion that the country's stock of unsold novels be used for fuel in this emergency," observed Mr. Noggin, literary editor of the Daily Bread, "all I have to say is that the idea is ridiculous. They will not burn. Most of them are too rotten."—Chicago Tribune.

The Picture of Coal.

Apropos of Lord Kelvin's assertion that in 400 years the coal of the world will be used up M. Carteux, chief engineer of the Northern Railway of France, says that in 50 years, between petroleum and alcohol, coal mining will stop.

How to Use for Rent?

For a storeroom 25 feet wide and 110 feet deep, a block distant from Herald square, New York city, beginning with May 1, 1903, a railroad will, for the ensuing three years, pay $17,000 as annual rental. Architects for the building are at work on plans to transform the room into what it is asserted will be the finest ticket office in the United States.

The Indian Chief Tammany.

Tammany arose in the seventeenth century. He was a native of Delaware Indians on the banks of the Ohio river. He was chief sachem of his tribe, and his reign was discreet and peaceful. His great maxim was: "Unite. In peace unite for mutual defense."

Eggs in Missouri.

A Boone County hen owned by Jack Lyons has produced a novelty in the form of an "eggless egg." The shell was perfect, but when broken open was found to have no contents. The production of such fruit is a species of enterprise which Missouri farmers will hardly approve in their hens.

Instinct of Birds.

The principal routes taken by migratory birds, as registered in books of natural history, show a wonderful geographical instinct on the part of the feathered kingdom. The bee race, for the most part, the seas and oceans at their narrowest and the river valleys at their longest.

Fine Portrait of McKinley.

R. J. Greenbut of New York has just bought what is considered the best life-size portrait of President McKinley ever painted. The president sat for this picture a short time before his assassination. Mr. Greenbut was a warm personal friend of Mr. McKinley.

Waltz of French Origin.

The controversy between continental papers as to the origin of the waltz was settled by the discovery that the waltz was first danced at the French court on Nov. 9, 1178, when it was announced as the composition of a French courtier who called it "Volta." Herefore it has been generally assumed that the waltz originated on the Blue Danube or thereabouts.

No Sleep For a Mortgage.

Ringwood, (Okla.) Leader: The mortgage is a self-supporting institution. It always holds its own. It calls for just as many dollars when grain is cheap as when grain is dear. It is not affected by drouth. It is not drowned out by the heavy rains. It never winter kills. Late springs and early frosts never trouble it. Potato bugs do not disturb it. Moth and rust do not destroy it. It grows nights, rainy days, Sundays and even holidays. It always brings a sure crop every year and sometimes twice a year. It produces cash every time. It does not have to wait for the market to advance. It is not subject to the speculations of the bulls and bears on the board of trade. It is a load that galls and frets and chafes.

It is a burden that the farmer cannot shake off. It is with him morning, noon and night. It eats with him at the table. It gets under his pillow when he sleeps. It rides upon his shoulders during the day. It consumes his grain crop. It devours his cattle; it selects the finest horses and the fattest steers. It lives upon the first fruit of the season. It stalks into the dairy where the busy housewife toils day after day and month after month and takes the nicest cheese and the choicest butter. It shares the children's bread and robs them of their clothes. It stoops the toiler's back with its remorseless burden of care. It hardens his hands, benumbs his intellect, prematurely whitens his locks and oftentime sends him and his aged wife over the hills to the poorhouse. It is an inexorable and exacting paymaster. Its whip is as merciless and as cruel as the lash of the slave driver. It is a menace to liberty, a hindrance to progress, a curse to the world.

THE BILL TO OPEN INDIAN RESERVATION

Land Will Be Sold at Public Auction to the Highest Bidder for Cash.

A great deal of interest has been manifested of late in the proposed opening to settlement of the eleven townships east of Thief River Falls, and considerable speculation has resulted as to the manner of opening this territory. It is the wish of many, perhaps a majority, that the territory be thrown open under the regular homestead law, but the interior department possesses ideas of its own, and to place this land at the disposal of the people, Minnesota's representatives at Washington have been compelled to coincide with the views of the department, and Senator Clapp's bill was drawn with a view of satisfying the "powers that be."

Recently Mr. H. Johnson, of Crookston, addressed a letter to Senator Nelson, making enquiry regarding the nature of Senator Clapp's bill, and has received the following reply:

Mr. H. Johnson, Crookston, Minn.:
Dear Sir—Your favor of the 29th, relative to the bill introduced by Senator Clapp to open to settlement the eleven townships east of Thief River Falls, is at hand. I enclose you herewith a copy for your information. In this connection I beg leave to say that the measure does not represent the wishes of the Minnesota delegation in the matter or the mode of disposing of the lands. Not at all. We wanted them opened under the regular homestead law, as lands have heretofore been opened, but the secretary of the interior insisted upon the plan set forth in Senator Clapp's bill, and the latter, realizing that if any action was to be secured at all, we must accept the plan of the secretary, introduced the bill. It is utterly impossible to secure any legislation upon public lands unless it meets with the approval of the interior department. You will notice that there is a provision in the bill which stipulates that title cannot be secured to land unless the purchaser resides upon and cultivates same for a period of five years. I think this will prevent speculators from buying much of the land. I wish you would explain to your friends, and those interested in the matter, how we are situated down here, and how utterly helpless we are in getting these townships opened to settlement in any other way than as the interior department desires. Yours truly,

—Knute Nelson.

Senator Clapp's bill was introduced in the senate on Jan. 20, and was reported to Mr. Clapp without amendment on Jan. 22. The principal stipulations of the bill are:

The lands will be sold to the highest bidder at public auction, in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to each individual.

The price per acre must not be less than $4, and the terms as follows: One-fifth of the purchase price cash, and the balance in five annual advance installments. Failing in payments, the land and money paid thereon shall be forfeited.

No title to said land shall inure to the purchaser until the purchaser shall have resided upon and improved said land for the full term of five years, without any commutation of time.

Indians who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States may become purchasers, but before proving upon it must take out full naturalization papers.

Two sections of each township are reserved for state school lands.

The bill provides for the payment of $25,000 to the Red Lake Indians for their improvements, and for the payment of $300,000, shared and share alike to each man, woman and child belonging to the Red Lake Indian reservation within ninety days after the sale, and the remainder in fifteen annual installments. The Indians shall have undisputed possession of their diminished reservation and will be entitled to allotments thereon of 160 acres of either pine or agricultural lands.

The lands will be opened after a ratification of the act by the Indians.

OLSON TO SOLONS.

Wants State Board of Education and More Money in Several Funds

State Superintendent J. W. Olson has issued his preliminary report to the legislature, containing his recommendations for future legislative enactments. He makes the following recommendations:

First—That the law of apportionment of the state school funds be so amended:

(a) That the minimum school year be extended from five to six or seven months.

(b) That an attendance of sixty instead of forty days be required as a basis for apportionment.

(b) That pupils enrolled in the model departments of state normal schools draw for those institutions apportionment under the same conditions as apply to other public schools.

Second—That the minimum age for securing a teacher's certificate be raised from 17 to 18 or 19 years.

Third—That authority to transport pupils to school houses, at public expense, be granted all school districts either within their own or adjoining districts.

Fourth—That laws limiting the area of school districts be repealed.

Fifth—That authority be granted county superintendents to condemn unsuitable school houses and to approve plans for improving old ones and constructing new ones.

Sixth—That school officers be paid for attending educational meetings annually, upon call of the county superintendent.

Seventh—More adequate pay for county superintendents.

Eighth—State inspectors for semi-graded and rural schools applying for special state aid.

Ninth—A state board of education.

Tenth—An appropriation for teachers' summer training schools in our state normal schools.

Eleventh—An enlarged appropriation to encourage school libraries.

Twelfth—A larger teachers' examination fund or authority to charge applicants a small examination fee.

Thirteenth—An increased contingent fund for the department of public instruction.

Fourteenth—Deficiency appropriations for special state aid.

Fifteenth—Careful consideration for the needs of our great university, normal schools and other educational institutions as clearly set forth in their special reports.

He asks that the library appropriation be increased from $12,500 to $20,000; the contingent fund of the department from $1,000 to $1,500 He also says:

"The needs of this department require that the state examination fund should be increased at least $2,000 annually, or that an examination fee of $1 to supplement the examination fund be charged every applicant for a certificate. This nominal fee will not impose a hardship upon anyone, but will probably prevent a considerable number of high school students and others from trying those examinations as in the past, with no thought of teaching, but simply as an experiment or to kill time."

Costly Advertising.

One of the most expensive advertising campaigns recently undertaken has for its object the advertising of Colorado. The medium to be used is a train of five magnificent vestibule cars which will cost $2,000,000 to equip. The train is to be a complete exposition of the products and natural advantages of Colorado. The fully explain the process of manufacture and advantages of golden grain belt beer to the entire country would take a train as large and would cost as much. We are only trying, in a modest way, to educate the people of the Northwest into realizing the desirability from a health standpoint, of using this beer regularly in their homes. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

Send-off for Simons.

The St. Paul Globe notes the distinguishing characteristics of some of the members of the legislature, and gives to Representative Simons the light-weight championship. The Globe says:

"Mr. Simons, of Red Lake Falls, holds the light-weight honors, tipping the scales at only 135 pounds. He is another proof of the legislative saw about the "goods" coming in small parcels. Mr. Simons is rather of a retiring disposition, but for a new member he knows how to go after bills and votes when he had a measure pending. He is plentifully endowed with good common sense, a strong factor in legislative success, and knows how to bide his time.

"He has shown the observers of the house that he is perfectly capable of taking care of himself in a pinch. He accepts defeat gracefully, but only as a temporary state. A set back for a bill is, taken ostensibly, as a matter of course, and the attack is renewed at the earliest possible moment with a vim which is almost sure to win."

Stick to the Creamery.

An attempt is being made by some large concerns calling themselves cold storage companies, to run out the creameries of the state and it looks very much as though the scheme is carefully planned and that it will be far reaching in its effects unless the farmers "take a tumble" and refuse to be bitten. The cold storage concerns offer as high as in two cents of New York quotations for Western extras for butter fat delivered at any railway station, in shape of cream.

They will pay the express charges and make you rich in about two weeks—more or less. The whole scheme seems to us to be aimed at the goose that laid the golden eggs—the creamery. If these fellows can get a sufficient number of farmers to ship their cream to the cold storage for a year or so they will succeed in closing up the creameries, and then where are you? The dairyman will be at the mercy of the cold storage trust which will dictate the price of both cream and butter and the farmers will go back to the hand churn and slavery. The man who ships his cream to the cold storage instead of sellnig it to the creamery drives a nail into his own coffin every time he goes to the depot. Stick to the creamery at all hazards; it is your only salvation.—Delano Eagle.

RED CLOUD IS DYING

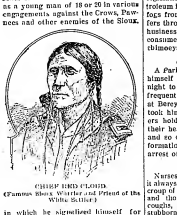
Was Conspicuous on the Frontier for Two Generations.

Famous Sioux Chief, Now Preparing for the Journey to the Happy Hunting Ground, Is Idolized by the White Race.

Red Cloud, the famous Indian chief who was second in command of the aborigines to Sitting Bull at the battle of the Little Big Horn, when Gen. Custer and all his men were massacred, is lying at the point of death, at Pine Ridge, S. D. His condition is regarded as hopeless and probably are many days he will have gone to the happy hunting grounds of his fathers.

For many years past Red Cloud has been accustomed among the "good Indians" of the nation. Since the peace that followed the final defeat of his tribe he has been the white man's friend and has received many attentions from the officials at Washington, which city he twice visited in the interests of those over whom he once ruled with an iron hand. Next to Tecumseh he has filled the largest place in American history of any Indian and, in many respects, he was that gallant warrior's superior. His compatriot, Sitting Bull, was more notorious, but his standing among the Sioux themselves was far below that of the truly great man who now lies at the very end of the great Ogeesha, Black Hawk, Geronimo, Joseph and others have been prominent in frontier annals in modern times. Red Cloud represents the best type, Geronimo the worst.

Maghe-Luta, Crimson Cloud, was born in 1822. Of his youth we know but little. He probably roamed over the country, exploring game, playing war and indulging in pastimes the feats of his fathers. We hear of him as a young man of 18 or 20 in various engagements against the Crows, Pawnees and other enemies of the Sioux.



CHIEF RED CLOUD

in which he signalized himself for bravery and was promoted by the elders of his tribe. He was present at various secret orders, passed through the fearful trials of the sun dance, a ceremony requiring more courage and fortitude than any other initiation known to men, either in ancient or modern times.

Shortly after 1865 the whites began to slowly push their way westward and northward. Buffalo hunters, miners and rough classes flocked in the frontier. Types of men who neither respected the rights of other nor feared God came in contact with various bands of Sioux upon their hunting grounds, and as a natural consequence robberies and other crimes were reported to both races. Washington should have restrained all immigration until the bands now embraced by the states of Kansas, Nebraska and North and South Dakota had been either taken away from the Indians and paid for or left in their undisputed possession and reservations of those lands had been summarily stopped. He further said that Indians and whites met, could not live peaceably together, their modes of life, habits, languages and inclinations being totally different.

Viewed in the light of subsequent, Red Cloud's position was somewhat correct. The white men who flocked to the frontier took no distinction between those which were hostile and those which were friendly. Moreover, a total disregard of the Indian manners and customs and of travel upon the plains brought about many conflicts and misunderstandings between well-meaning and responsible settlers en route to California and the Pacific seaboard and certainly should be published as a part of the history of the plains. It is not surprising, then, to find that from 1865 to 1867 continual war was waged upon the plains. These 20 years of conflict, looked at from a military standpoint, comprised a long series of petty skirmishes and massacres perpetrated by both white and red men alike. Viewed from the Indian standpoint, it was a sentimental struggle on the part of some 4,000 or 5,000 men against brutal and exterminating. The result, as we all know, was the almost total annihilation of the Indian.

of speculation, but rather that he should always observe sound business principles and methods. Investments in good-paying stocks are low they should be bought as an investment, but not for speculation.

"The speculative fever has been the ruin of thousands of young men and the wreck of many fortunes, and will continue to exist as long as there is a need for get-quickly-made fortunes continues."

Although Mr. Sage is far past the age at which most men are wholly inconcerned to discharge active business cares, he personally directs the management of his vast business, and every day spends not less than nine hours at his desk in the back room of his suite of offices in the Nassau street skyscraper.

Since the time that Norcross, the anarchist, tried to kill him, and exploded the bomb in his office, Mr. Sage has had iron gratings, surmounting a stout wooden partition, placed a few feet from the entrance to his front office.

Through a small wicket gate the cashier admits the visitors, one, etc, before he on gain admission to the aged financier. Once inside, he finds the possessor of $100,000,000, made by his own efforts, keen-eyed, quick, ready to dispose of any business question with celerity.

It is said of Mr. Sage's fortune that it is in the best shape of all the fabulous fortunes gathered together by New Yorkers. It is said that Mr. Sage can produce more millions in ready cash on short notice than any one man in Manhattan. His fortune is largely in the best securities, government, real estate, first class bonds, etc., all of which make high-class collateral quickly convertible into cash.

Many stories — apocryphal and founded on fact — are told of Mr. Sage, and his various ways of saving money and making it. He always rides in the street car fare and what not, but they have no effect upon the aged financier. I am

"I never lead money unless I get first-class security," said Mr. Sage. "I never pay more than I have to for articles I have to purchase, and I try always to get as nearly as possible full value for money expended. These are cardinal rules without which no man can hope to reach the goal of success in the business world.

In his office every business day Mr. Sage is waited on by hundreds anxious to lavish money in speculative gambles upon which he sells. When Jay Gould was alive he was the most skillful trader in "puts and calls" known either to Wall street or the world.

Since his death Mr. Sage has been recognized as the legitimate successor to his crown. To-day, at 85 years old, he is king of the "put and call" coups, and past masters of the intricacies of the "privilege" trade.

Shirts and Hats of Bark.

Shirts and hats that are ever in vogue in the forests are worn by the Indians of the interior of Bolivia. They are made of the bark of a tree, which is carefully stripped off the dried, softened, and then beaten with stones to make it pliable.

Saved Her Child's Life.

"In three weeks our chubby little boy was changed by pneumonia almost to a skeleton," writes Mrs. W. Watkins, of Pleasant City, O. "A terrible cough set in, that, in spite of a good doctor's treatment for several weeks, grew worse every day. We used Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, and our darling was soon sound and well. We are sure this grand medicine saved his life." Guaranteed to be the only sure cure for coughs, colds and all lung diseases. W. A. Schreiber guarantees satisfaction. 50c and $1.00. All druggists free.

LOVES HIS COUNTRY.

Illinois Statesman Who Stands for Honor in Politics.

Robert R. Hitt, Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Relations — Wants Consular Service Improved.

Robert R. Hitt, who has just been renominated for congress, and who has been mentioned by his personal friends for United States senator, is now serving his tenth full term as representative of the Ninth Illinois district.

He was born in Urbana, O., in 1834, but when he was three years of age he removed with his parents to Illinois, where he received his early education at Rock River seminary, now called Mount Morris college. Later he attended De Pauw university, where he made a brilliant record as a student.

While still a young man Mr. Hitt decided that the field of politics, with its opportunity for high renown and strenuous action, should be his life work. The famous debates between Lincoln and Douglas, which he attended and reported, are said to have also strongly influenced his decision.

Believing that thorough preparation is an essential for success, Mr. Hitt made a close study of political science, and that he did so to some purpose was evidenced in his appointment during Grant's second administration as secretary of the American legation at Paris, which position he held for seven years, part of the time acting as charge d'affaires. Returning to America, he became assistant secretary of state, and the following year he was elected a representative from Illinois in the Forty-seventh congress, and has been returned at every succeeding election.

In the recent sectorial discussion in Illinois an admirer of Mr. Hitt, who affectionately termed him "Little

HON. ROBERT R. HITT.
(Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.)

Bob," that title bestowed by Tom Q. Aikins on Fish Marshal Robert, sent the press a modification of Kipling's well-known verse, which was widely copied. The closing lines read:

"O's a little, but 's a wise,
'S's a letter for 's Sam,
An' 's's bound to get the prize.
Ain't you, Bobs?"

During his career as a representative in the Forty-first Angeles Herald, a democratic paper, Mr. Hitt has constantly urged improvement in the consular and diplomatic service, and has been strongly opposed anti-Chinese legislation which violated treaties. He has warmly advocated reciprocity and friendship with all the American republics, and it was owing to his influence that warlike resolutions were not adopted against Mexico, as a result of the Cutting case. It was also in consequence of his individual efforts that the house adopted the resolution providing for a commercial union with Canada.

Mr. Hitt has always been publicspirited. In the widest meaning of the term, and his labors as a member of the world's fair committee added much to the success of the fair for Chicago.

His long residence in France in the foreign relations committee of congress he has held with such marked ability.

Mr. Hitt is a recent speech said that the self-made man is the one who has the genius to make the most of limited opportunities, and he credits whatever of success has been his to natural aptitude for grasp and unwisely "fleeting opportunity."

A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An eminent authority says the harm done comes not so much from the excessive use of alcohol. Eat all the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. This rest and the wholesome juices Kodol contains soon restore health. Dieting unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fulness and bloating from which some people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

"Now tell me quickly," I said, "where is Bertha?"

"She's a bit o' ill," said Mary Phillips—I shall never think of her by any other name. "She down again, Mr. Rockwell, and eat three tea eggs. When you have done that I will talk to you about her. You needn't be in a hurry to go to see her, because in the state where she is the people are not up yet."

Slight as well sit down and eat," said the captain, laughing. "When you're under command of this shipper you will find that her orders are orders, and the quicker you step up and obey them the better. So I would advise you to eat your eggs."

I began to do so, and Captain Guy laughed a mighty laugh. "She's a little thing," he said, "but she does know how to make men stand about. I didn't believe there was a person in this world she could have kept people at and you when I saw you lugging my wife. But she did it, and I tell you, sir, I was never worse cut up in my whole life than I was when I saw you do that."

"Sir," said I, looking at him steadfastly, "if I have caused you any pain, any misery, any moment of the soul, any anguish of heart, any agony of jealousy, or mental torture of any kind, I am heartily glad of it, for all of these things you, and how she did long.

"Good!" cried Mary Phillips, "you must be feeling better, sir, and when you have entirely forgot breakfast we will go on and talk."

In a few minutes I pushed away the tray, and Mary, looking at it, declared herself satisfied and left me to my table.

"So you really supposed, sir," she said, sitting near me, "that Captain Chesters married Miss Nugent?"

"I certainly did," I answered.

"No doubt thinking," said Mary, with a smile, "that no man in his senses would marry anybody else when Miss Nugent was about, which was a very proper opinion, of course, considering your state of mind."

"And let me say, sir," said Captain Guy, "if I had married Miss Nugent more people than you would have been dissatisfied. I would have been one of them and I am sure Miss Nugent would have been another."

"Count me as one of that party," said Mary Phillips. "And now, Mr. Rockwell, you shall not be kept waiting a moment longer."

"Of course she is safe and well," I said, "or you would not be here, and before you say anything more about her please tell me what you meant by that terrible word 'but.'"

"But?" repeated Mary Phillips with a puzzled expression. And Captain Guy echoed: "But? What But?"

CHAPTER VI.

"It was the last word I heard from you," said I; "you shouted it to me, when your vessel was going away for the last time. It has stunned me a world of misery. It may have been followed by others words, but I did not catch them. I asked you if you had told her that, I loved her and you answered: 'Yes, but—'"

Captain Guy slapped his leg. "By George!" he said, "that was enough to put a man on the rack. Mary, you should have told him more than that."

Mary Phillips wrinkled her forehead and gazed meditatively before her. Suddenly she looked up.

"I remember it," she said, "I remember exactly what I answered or tried to answer. I said: 'Yes, but she knew it before.'"

I sprang to my feet. "What do you mean?" I cried.

"Of course she knew it," she cried; "you must both have been very stupid if we hadn't known that. We knew it before we left New York; and, for my part, I wondered why you didn't tell her. But, as you never mentioned it, of course it wasn't for us to bring it on the subject."

"Bertha knew I loved her?" I objected. "And what—and how—what did she say of it?" What did she think of it?"

"Well," said Mary Phillips, laughing, "if could never see that she objected much. I could never see that she objected much in fact, from what she said, and, being just as two, of course she had to say a good many things to me. I think she was very glad to find out that you were it as well as we did."

"Mary Phillips!" I cried, "where is she? Tell me this moment!"

"Look here," said Captain Guy, "you're leaving me out of this business altogether. This is Mrs. Mary Chesters."

"Mr. Rockwell will be all right when he gets over this flurry," said Mary to her husband.

I acknowledged the correction with a nod, for I had no time then for words on the subject.

"Does I get yourself flustered, sir," said Mary, "you can't go to her yet, it's too early. You must give the family time to come down and have breakfast. I am not going to be party to a scene before breakfast nor in the middle of a meal. I know the ways and manners of that house and I'll send you up quietly the right time."

I sank down. "Mary—Mrs.—"

"Don't be long about it, madam just now," she interrupted, "it's now who you're speaking to, sir."

"Mrs. Chesters," I said, "you are the most wonderful woman in the world. Will you tell me what this means?"

"Certainly not," she said, "I'm not going to tell you anything. You must find out for yourself. I'm not going to be mixed up in your affairs. I'm going to see that you have your breakfast, and then I'm going to bed. Captain Guy, you will please to come with me."

Mary Phillips wrinkled her forehead and good steadfastly for her lap. Suddenly she looked up.

"I remember it," she said, "I remember exactly what I answered or tried to answer, I said: 'Yes, but she knew it before.'"

I am not going to be party to a scene before breakfast nor in the middle of a meal. I know the ways and manners of that house and I'll send you out as early the right time."

I sat down. "Mary—Mrs.—"

"Don't bother about names just now," she interrupted, "I know who you're speaking to."

"I don't know," she added, "that it's quite right for me to tell you this information, but under the circumstances I take it on myself to say that she most certainly does. And I tell you, and you may tell her if you like, that I would not have said this to you if I hadn't believed that this thing ought to be clinched the minute there was a chance to do it. It's been hanging off and on long enough. Love you? Why, bless my soul, a girl that's been thinking of nothing else for the past two or three days but the coming of the postman, expecting a letter from you, not considering that you didn't know where to address her, or that it was rather scant time for a letter to come from La Guayra, where Captain Stearns would take you if he succeeded in picking you up."

"The whole affair had a scrappy air about it," said Captain Guy. "At least that's the way I looked at it."

"You've never said anything like that before," said Mary, rather sharply.

"Of course not," replied the captain. "I wanted to keep you so merry and cheerful as I could."

"Love you," continued Mary Phillips, "I should have brought her on deck to wave her handkerchief to you and kiss her hand in bags, when you blew the state of your feelings through a trumpet; but she wasn't strong enough. She was a pretty weak woman in body and mind about that time. But from the moment I told her, and she knew that you not only loved her, but were willing to say so, she began to mend. And how she did talk about you! I should say she did. I had that two ship ships might come together again. She kept talking me what I thought about the condition of your vessel and whether it would be likely to sink if stress came on. I couldn't help thinking that, as far as I knew any thing about ships, you'd be likely to float for weeks after we'd gone down, but I didn't say that to her. And then she began to wonder if you had understood that she would come to you in Sagao and was glad to get it. And I told her over and over again that you must have heard me, for I screamed my very loudest. I am very glad that I didn't know that you only caught those two words."

THE OCEAN HONEYMOON.

"Dear girl!" I ejaculated. "And did she send me a message on a life-preserver?"

"You mean to say that you got it?" cried Mary Phillips.

"No," said I, "it floated away from me. What was it?"

"I got up that little scheme," said Mary Phillips, "so quiet her. I told her that a letter might be floated to you that way, and that, any way, it would do no harm to try. I don't know what she wrote, but she must have said a good deal, for she took a long time about it. I wrapped it up perfectly water-tight. She made the flag herself out of her own handkerchiefs, with her initial in the corner. She said she thought you would think that."

"Oh, that it had come to me!" I cried. "I wish from the bottom of my soul that it had," said Mary, compassionately. "It would have done you a lot of good on that lonely raft."

"Instead of which," observed Captain Guy, "some shark probably swallowed it, and little good it did him."

"It was a lot of attention and consideration into him," said Mary, a little brusquely, "and there are other creatures connected with the sea who wouldn't be hurt by that sort of thing."

"There's a shot into me!" cried the captain. "Don't do it again. I cry quarter!"

"I must go," I said, rising. "I can watch a longer time."

"Why, bless my heart," said Mary, "it's only half-past 7. You've plenty of time. Besides, I haven't told you the whole story of the ocean honeymoon. I'm not going to have you rushing off in this way and not send me some letters to post. Why, I've got to tell you about Captain Stearns. He is a piece of work to send home."

"Ladies and gentlemen!" exclaimed Mary. "She sent you, a note; she sent you a dozen messages by Captain Stearns."

"And I'll wager a month's pay," said Captain Guy, "that he never delivered one of them."

"He gave me no note," I cried.

"I've in the pocket of his pea-jacket now," said Captain Chesters.

"He did deliver the messages," I said, "after I questioned him; but they were such as these: Keep up a good heart; every thing's bound to be right in the end; the last to get back to me will be heartiest welcome. Now, anybody could have said such words as those."

"Upon my word," cried Mary Phillips, "those were the messages I sent. I remember particularly as the one about the last to get back and the heartiest welcome."

"Confound that Stearns!" cried Captain Guy, "what a confounded old fog-ing old humbug he must have been not to see that he was sent for no other purpose."

"Good-bye, Mrs. Chesters," I said, taking her by the hand. "I can never thank you enough for what you have done for her and for me. But how you could leave her I really do not understand."

"Well," said Mary, coloring a little, "I can scarcely understand it myself; but then man would have it so and he's terribly obstinate. But I don't feel that I've left her. She's in the best of hands and I see her nearly every day. Here's her address, and when you see her, Mr. Rockwell, you'll find that in every way I've told you truth."

I took a hearty leave of Captain Guy, shook Mary by the hand once more, pushed down over my ears the sleeping cabby, and glancing at the card ordered him to go like to 2 Ravenden terrace, Parsley square.

I do not remember how I got into the house, when I said nor what I asked, nor whether the family had their breakfasts or not, but I remember my eyes fell upon my beloved Bertha. I knew that in every thing Mary Phillips had told me truly. She came into the room with her eyes cast down, her hands evidently full. With outstretched arms I rushed to meet her and, falling to my knees, clasped her waist, and, clasping me no one to object. For some moments we were speechless with joyful emotion, but there was no need of our saying any thing, no need of statements nor explanations. Mary Phillips had attended to all that.

When we had recovered from the pain of speech I was surprised to find that I had not expected, that Bertha knew I was coming. When Mary Phillips had left me that morning to prepare my breakfast she had sent a message to Bertha, and then she had detained me until the thought it best to have received and Bertha was prepared to meet me.

"I did not want any slips or misses," she said, when she explained the matter to me afterwards. "I don't want to say any thing about your proposal appearance, Mr. Rockwell, but there are plenty of servants in London who, if they hadn't had their orders, would shut the front door in the face of a much less solid-eyed person than you were, sir, that morning."

Bertha and I were married in London, and two weeks afterward we returned to America in the now ship Ghaness, commanded by Captain Guy Chesters and his wife.

Our marriage in England instead of American was largely due to the influence of Mary Phillips, who thought it would be much safer and more prudent for us to be married before we again undertook the risks of a sea voyage.

"Nobody knows what may happen on the ocean," she said, "but if you're once fairly married that much is accomplished, any way."

Our choice of a sailing vessel in which to make the passage was due in great part to our desire to keep company as long as possible with Captain Chesters and his wife, to whom we truly believed we owed such other.

When we reached New York and Bertha and I went to the store for the Catskill mountains, where we proposed to spend the rest of the summer, we took leave of Captain Guy and his wife with the warmest expressions of friendship, with plans for meeting again.

Every thing seemed to have turned out in the best possible way.

We had each other and Mary Phillips had some one to manage.

We shared and have been grieved if we had been obliged to leave her without occupation.

At the moment of parting I drew her aside. "Mary," I said, "we have had some strange experiences together and I shall never forget them."

"Nor shall I, sir," she answered. "Some of them were so harrowing and close-shaved, and such heart-breaking disappointments and so forth. The worst of all was when you threw that rope clean over our ship without holding on to your end of it. I had been better than that rope was going to bring us all together."

"That was a terrible mishap," I answered, "when did Bertha think of it?"

"Bless my soul!" ejaculated Mary Phillips, "she wasn't on deck and she never knew any thing about it. When I was nursing up a low watch I don't mention that sort of thing."

[THE END.]

THE MARINERS.

Weary, brother, and discouraged? Life is full of care and cross,
And you long to link another's—count it gold or count it dross
Ah you say, the total value of life's profit and life's loss.

If the sense of your horizon is shut in and the strong
Strong to-morrow you see not, toiling with the wind and tide.
Still life's mariners are legion on that ocean you abide.

Did the helmsman grow disheartened at the tempest and the sea,
Never would the ship another in the Heaven lights at last to welcome downward sailors each as we;
But he holds his vessel steady on her course, up to the wind,
And despite the wrathful billows leagues of space are left behind.

Oh, all peril past, he brings her into port, for so we shall find
If life's cares and if life's crosses serve to make us wiser and brave
Even harrioness will only hasten us across the wave—
All the buffetings of fortune fail to fright us or enslave;
And some time in the hereafter, bronzed and strong and pure and grave
Tenderly and hearty for their forebodies, we shall welcome home some dove.
Under crimson skies of evening, softly into haven run.
—Joseph W. Bulgher, in N. Y. Observer.

IS AN UPRIGHT JUDGE.

Justice Harlan of the Supreme Court Has Always Stood Up for the Rights of the People.

John M. Harlan, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, has come to be regarded as one of the bulwarks of American liberties. He was appointed to the bench in 1877 by President Hayes, but his attitude on many questions of the day has removed him from the category of partisanship. His decision in the Dow case, involving the constitutionality of plans in our island possessions, is the most recent and striking instance of Justice Harlan's construction of the law.

If a search were to be made of Justice Harlan's opinions during his long service on the supreme bench, the number of occasions upon which he is to be upheld in favor of "the undercurrent of society" would be found to be surprisingly large. It is recalled that in the case of the deserting sailors from the barkentine Argo he was the author of a dissenting opinion sustaining the appeal taken by the seamen, and in doing this he had made a very broad interpretation. Three sailors had, under private contract, agreed to service for a certain term, but when their vessel reached Asturia they deserted. They were arrested and given over to the shipmaster, but on the way to San Francisco they refused to work, for which they were brought to trial in that city. Mr. Harlan sustained their appeal for relief from the decision of the district court on the ground that slavery existed wherever the law recognized a right of property in a human being. "A condition of enforced service," he said, "even for a limited period in a private business of another is a condition of involuntary servitude." He said in conclusion that it seemed to him that the court read the thirteenth amendment as containing a clause excepting seamen engaged to serve on private vessels.

A BILL is before the legislature to reduce the maximum contract interest rate from 10 to 8 per cent.

THE senate has voted $1,500,000 for the new state capitol. This money will be raised by continuing the present state levy of 2mills.

SO LONG as John Lind is in good form the Republicans of Minnesota will not be anxious to secure the election of senators by popular vote.

THE Brainerd Arena editor says that the modern young man doesn't get down on his knees to propose because they are usually otherwise occupied.

THE sugar beet appropriation has bobbed up in the legislature. Will Governor VanSant be as courageous as his predecessor in refusing to endorse the steal?

J. H. MAYBURY, the popular Crookston attorney, has been appointed surveyor of logs for this district. This job was recently declined by August Falk.

THE Minnesota Editorial association will hold its winter meeting at St. Paul February 19 and 20. The Commercial club will entertain the editors and their ladies at their rooms.

EX GOVERNOR TAYLOR of Kentucky, who is at present safely tucked under the protecting arm of the governor of Indiana, is reported to be greatly incensed at the murder of the South Carolina editor.

A BILL has been introduced in the legislature providing that election returns may be sent by registered mail instead of by messenger when the voting place is more than twelve miles distant from the county seat.

GOVERNOR VAN SANT has issued a call for aid for the famine sufferers of Sweden and Finnland. P. O. Hagglund of St. Hilaire has been appointed chairman for Red Lake county to receive money to aid the starving.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER will donate $7,500,000 to the Chicago university to be used in discovering a means of curing consumption. This will probably raise the price of oil about two cents, but it doesn't seem to do any good to protest.

MAX O'RELL, the cynical French man says: "The Lord took from man a rib, with which he made a woman. As soon as this process was finished woman went back to man and took the rest of him, which she has kept ever since."

THE bill providing for an additional federal judge in Minnesota has passed both houses of congress and will go into effect on July 1st next. It is an assured fact that Judge Page Morris of Duluth will receive the appointment to the new judgeship.

THE Adrian Democrat thinks the coal combine did only what all will do if they have the power. A man getting rich by skinning the public does not care whether the public squirms. He will skin on. The public must know enough to take care of its own hide.

THIEF RIVER FALLS wants the third word of his name decapitated, and Mary McFadden suggests that they take away the second as well. Evidently the fair Duluth paragrapher is not as incredulous as Shakespeare when he asked: "What's in a name?"

THE re-election of Senators Platt and Penrose during the past week by the legislatures of their respective states is another argument for a popular vote on senators. It is fair to presume that neither of these political hangers-on would stand a ghost of a chance with the people.

AN Ohio man has dedicated the profits from a new brand of soap to the Democratic campaign fund for the next presidential election. As it is freely alleged that Democrats do not use much soap the Republican press will probably argue that there will not be much revenue from this source.

WHEN the new department of commerce is created it is said that Hon. Herbert J. Miller, editor of the Lowrence Herald, will be made first assistant to the secretary. This is a distinguished honor to be conferred upon a country newspaper man, and Mr. Miller, is entirely worthy of the place.

R. W. HITCHCOCK has resigned his editorial position with the Crookston Times to become deputy clerk of courts. Hitchcock developed into one of the brightest newspaper men in these parts, and the press boys will be sorry to hear that he has given up a work for which he was so admirably qualified.

CHAMP CLARK tells the story of a western hunter whose grave was marked by a stone upon which was engraved the line: "He whistled for the grizzly, and the grizzly came." Gentlemen who strenuously vociferate about shackling cunning as we have shackled force will not need a diagram, says the Commoner.

A LEADING Republican daily says: "There will always be capital available for the construction of iron furnaces and steel mills except in the contingency that a sufficient supply of ore cannot be obtained. If the steel corporation shall become the owner of all the ore lands it will have a natural monopoly and will occupy an impregnable position. The independent company which had to depend upon the inferior mines would find competition impossible."

SENATOR GEORGE G. VEST of Missouri who will retire from public life at the closed the present session of congress, is distinguished from all other senators as being one of the two living members of the Confederate senate. The other member is Judge August E. Maxwell of Florida, now in his 83rd year. Both are men of fineability and are the last of their generation. There are but few men now living who have had as varied and extensive experience in the affairs of their country as they. Judge Reagan of Texas was a member of the Confederate cabinet.

IN SYRACUSE, N. Y., there lives a wealthy widower named Howell. He is a unique character and the original "David Harum." For the past two years he has celebrated his birthdays by entertaining a few of the widows of his old friends, and no expense was spared on these occasions, either. This year, on his eighty-second birthday, which comes pretty soon, the celebration will be most extravagant and he is providing entertainment for one hundred and sixty widows who reside in Syracuse. He has engaged for the occasion an orchestra composed entirely of women, some of them widows—one composed entirely of widows could not be secured—who will furnish the music; the banquet will be served by waitresses, all widows, and the caterer will also be a widow. Mr. Howlett has sent his son to New York city to engage the highest concert talent available for the entertainment, and an effort will be made to secure only widows to take part in the entertainment. Surely this will be a feast for the Syracuse widows.

Good Story on Knute.

The New York World publishes the following good story on Senator Knute Nelson of this state, an occurrence during the delivery of his great speech:

"Senator Nelson had been struggling along with his speech in opposition to the omnibus statehood bill for a week.

"Monday at two o'clock Senator Quay, who is in charge of the bill, called for the regular order.

"'The chair has already recognized the senator from Minnesota,' said President Frye. 'He is the regular order.'

"Nelson began, and one by one the Senators left the chamber until there were but six present. One of these was Senator McCumber, of North Dakota, who moved over and sat in the chair next to Senator Nelson's desk. McCumber listened attentively for a few moments and then calmly went to sleep.

"Senator Nelson talked along and at one point grew emphatic. Mc. Cumber awoke with a start.

"'Excuse me,' said Senator Nelson, 'for disturbing your rest.'"

Buckley's Arnica Salve.

The best and most famous compound in the world to conquer aches and kill pains. Cures cuts, heals burns and bruises, subdues inflammation, masters piles. Millions of boxes sold yearly. Works wonders in boils, ulcers, felons, skin eruptions. It cures or no pay. 25c at Schreiber's drug store.

A Bunch of Trouble.

The Phillippine islands are a bunch of trouble, sure enough. During the last year 100,000 people have died there with the plague and $30, 000,000 worth of cattle have been killed by the rinderpest. At least these are the official figures. And yet we gave $20,000,000 for the combination, with several hundred million thrown in for good measurement to say nothing of the soldiers killed in war and by disease. Surely the national administration was not wise when it precipitated all this trouble and expense upon our already overburdened backs.—Joplin (Mo.) Globe.

"Baby sleeps and grows while mamma rests if Rocky Mountain Tea is given. It's the greatest baby medicine ever offered loving mothers, 35 cents. A. L. Reichert.

Bids for Wood.

Bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor in Red Lake Falls, Minn., until February 16, 1903, at 2 o'clock p. m., for 75 cords of green wood and 10 cords of dry wood to be delivered at Red Lake Falls, Minn. The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners:

JAMES E. FORD,
County Auditor.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Brady and Verne Healy.

The wonder of the school room now is whether or not there will be any school Thursday.

After the debate last Friday the members of the high school indulged in a few calls while they were awaiting the decision of the judges,

Friday, February 6, is the date of the Athenian program. We expect it to be good, and anyone that can be present we advise them to do so.

One of the high school girls was heard to say to one of the high school boys that she hoped that after Easter the lent of her umbrella would be over.

The Freshman class has taken up botany this week, and will study the text until spring. Then the interesting field excursions will commence.

A general cleaning up took place in the library this week, and now the books are all in the book case and not on the tables around the room.

There were three new members to be chosen last Friday. Henry Kellar and Jesse Luxemburg were chosen Athenians and Charley Dougherty Spartan.

One of the girls came to school the other day and clasping her tie was a little pin on which was written "Baby." The only conclusion we could reach was that she was so afraid that the people wouldn't know that she was a baby that she had to be tagged.

The chemistry class of the Red Lake Falls high school devote their spare moments to sketching the pictures of the Katzenjammer kids on glass with hydrofluoric acid. Thus does the press influence higher education.—Minneapolis Evening Tribune, February 2.

Wanted—

An arm to encircle the waist of time;
A baby to rock in the cradle of the deep;
A horse to feed in the trough of the sea;
A barber to shave the face of the earth.

The next question for debate is, "Resolved, that intercollegiate and interscholastic football promotes the best interest of the schools." The Spartan debaters are Marjorie Rodgers, Wm. Ittner and Walter Johnson. The Athenian debaters are Anton Sebsuser, Joseph Helm and Florence Dautremont. The Spartans have chosen the affirmative side of the question.

The debate last Friday was the best held this year. The loyalty of the members of each society was very evident. The Athenians, though badly defeated, showed that they could take defeat when it came to them. The debate was well worked up, and though the Athenians had n choice of sides they lost the debate by nearly six points. The points were, Spartans, 22.54; Athenians, 16.92. The Spartans sprung quite a surprise on the Athenians, who thought there was only one side to the question.

PSALM OF SCHOOL LIFE.

Toiling, rejoicing, sorrowing,
Onward through school we go;
Each morning brings new duties,
Each eve sees them close.
Labor earnestly, study faithfully,
Is our motto as we strive;
And when this you truly follow,
At the good you will arrive.
First a Freshman, young and bashful,
Then a Sophmore, oh! what pride;
Now a Junior, next a Senior,
Grand and noble, dignified.

—A. SPARTAN.

Sick Blood

Feed pale girls on Scott's Emulsion.

We do not need to give all the reasons why Scott's Emulsion restores the strength, and flesh and color of good health to those who suffer from sick blood.

The fact that it is the best preparation of Cod Liver Oil, rich in nutrition, full of healthy stimulation is a suggestion as to why it does what it does.

Scott's Emulsion presents Cod Liver Oil at its best, fullest in strength, least in taste.

Young women in their "teens" are permanently cured of the peculiar disease of the blood which shows itself in paleness, weaknessand nervousness, by regular treatment with Scott's Emulsion.

It is a true blood food and is naturally adapted to the cure of the blood sickness from which so many young women suffer.

We will be glad to send a sample to any sufferer.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

The Red Lake Falls band will go to St. Hilaire next Tuesday evening, where they will give a concert in the Imperial opera house. The program is one of extraordinary merit, and St. Hilaire people should not fail to hear it.

M. Skala, the north side merchant, is planning to erect a two-story brick on his present site in the spring. Mr. Skala enjoys an extensive patronage, and the new building will give him commodious quarters for his large stock.

A party of friends pleasantly surprised Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Perras last Friday evening, the occasion being Mr. Perras' birthday anniversary. The evening was spent in dancing and other amusement and an enjoyable time was held.

The fifth game in the bowling series between Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire was played at the latter place last night, and Thief River Falls won two games out of the three. In total points St. Hilaire shows up with 2237 to 2209 for Thief River.

Hon. Albert G. Leick and wife, of Owatonna, were in the wrecked "Sunset Limited" in Arizona, but fortunately they escaped injury. Mr. Leick was the Democratic candidate for state auditor last year, and is known to quite a few of the Red Lake Falls people.

Geo. W. Bailey, who has frequently lectured in the Red River valley towns under the pseudonym of "Tank Ike," died at Omaha last week. Bailey was addicted to the use of chloral and other powerful drugs, and it is commonly believed that his death resulted therefrom.

The measuring seeial given by the Ladies' Aid society at the home of Mas. Hennings last Friday evening, drew a large crowd, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The Freund orchestra furnished music, and several recitations and vocal selections were rendered. A neat sum was realized for the church.

The cream separator agent is abroad in the land. His machine is alleged to be so cas fulness in separating the purchaser from his money. In buying goods of this character it is wise to have the guarantee of a responsible local business man. You have no recourse in buying of a peddler if the wares should prove defective or of no value.

Rev. Wales exchanged pulpits with Rev. Colvin G. Butler, of St. Hilaire, last Sunday. While this was the first time Rev. Butler has preached here, he is not an entire stranger to our people, he having been a member of last year's Fergus Falls high school debating team, which won the Ninth district championship by defeating the Red Lake Falls debaters.

According to the ground hog tradition we are to have six weeks more of winter, as the foxy old animal with barometric instinct had no trouble in seeing his shadow as he crawled out long enough to take a look at himself. The prospect is not alarming, however. If we could be assured that gentle Anna and her buds and flowers would be here in six weeks there would be no cause for complaint.

A little chap wrote the following composition an "Heads." There are lots of heds, red heds, bawled heds, and so 4th. Pa he's got one—it's bowled. Mn she's longheaded. Pa he's bull headed and I'm red headed an bewl too. The smart end of a boy is his hed except when he's spanked, but the smart end of a hed is not there—oh no. Pa says if a fellow has a hed he can get a hed in this world, but I don't want a hed like he gets out with, she boys.

A reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Sam S. Haisley was tendered by the Knights of Pythias at their hall Tuesday evening, and about fifty were in attendance. Dancing and cards were the features of the evening. Felicitous remarks were made by Chancellor Gass and Knights McIntyre, Germo, Watson, King, Whiteley and Johnson, and everyone apparently had a good time. Prof. Freund's orchestra furnished music, and Misses Myrtle Armstrong and Rebecca Hunt presided gracefully at the frappe table.

Rev. Father J. M. Cleary, the popular priest and noted lecturer, of Minneapolis, delivered his famous lecture on "The Passion Play at Oberammergau" at the Metropolitan opera house last evening. A large audience was present, and the wrapt attention with which his hearers were held is a tribute to Father Cleary's eloquence and his remarkable descriptive powers. The story of Christ and the events leading up to the crucifixion never grows old, and the speaker's depiction of Christ and His contemporaries gives new charm and added interest to the early history of christianity and civilization.

The case of Joseph Benoit vs. Victor Delage occupied the attention of Judge Swanson's court Tuesday afternoon and evening. Last year the defendant rented the plaintiff's farm in Poplar River township for two years and after tilling the land one season moved off the place. Benoit levied on the grain and chattels of his renter to cover the amount due him for advances of seed and money. However, the defense proved that the lease had never been signed by the plaintiff, and hence was void and of no effect. A verdict in favor of defendant was returned, and costs of theaction taxed to the plaintiff. F. A. Grady was attorney for Benoit and Chas. E. Boughton for Delage.

The Free Seed Farce.

This is the time of the year when the congressmen will commence to send out packages of seeds to the constituents of their respective districts. Referring to the expensive and foolish practice, and which it characterizes as "the annual farce," the St. Paul Dispatch says:

"The annual farce put on the boards by congress at a cost of $250,000 is being staged now by Manager Wilson, otherwise known as secretary of agriculture. Like most congressional farces it had a laudable beginning and purpose, but speedily degenerated from drama to comedy and from comedy to farce. We are not at this time referring to protection, but to seed distribution. There was plausibility if not legitimacy in its inception, when it only proposed to spend public money introducing 'new and rare' seeds and plants to diversify agriculture, but of course that field was soon exhausted, though the declared purpose of the law was retained in all subsequent appropriation acts. That is, until a secretary came in who believed it was a farce to be stopped, and spent only a fraction of the appropriation in buying seeds and plants really 'new and rare' and letting the balance lapse into the treasury, greatly to the indignation of congressmen who doted on this—to them—cheap method of letting their constituents know that they had not forgotten them in the exaltation of their position.

"So now our correspondent in Washington tells Dispatch readers at length how the secretary has bought and put up 7,314,118 packages of vegetable seeds and 200,113 packages of flower seeds and a lot of other seeds. The senators and representatives gave the contractor who supplied all this mass of seeds with the addresses of those of their constituents whom they wished to especially reward for loyalty, and the contractor, as a part of his job, mailed the packages. Meantime several hundred firms are engaged in supplying seeds as a private enterprise, and are wondering why the federal government should go into competition with them with its gratuitous distribution."

Doctor

Pronounced My Case Incurable, Said I Would Die Of Heart Disease.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure Brought Good Health.

"I have every reason to recommend the Dr. Miles Remedies at the Heart Cure saved my life. I am a large man, considerably over six feet in height, weigh nearly three hundred pounds. Some years ago my heart was so seriously affected that I never expected to get well. Doctors pronounced my case incurable. I enclosed several letters in some paper, and bought six bottles of the Heart Cure. The first bottle greatly relieved me; I continued until I had taken twelve bottles. My trouble was organic and I never expected to be permanently cured, but thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, I have kept in good health and have been able to follow my profession continually since first taking the remedies eight years ago. I am a physician, teacher of instrumental and vocal music, and have traveled and lectured in all over the state of Michigan and have recommended Dr. Miles' Heart Cure to thousands in almost all parts of the state and have heard nothing but good reports of it. I have induced dozens of persons in my own county to take Dr. Miles' Heart Cure as my word is never doubted by those who know me."—C. H. Smith, Flint, Mich.

"I am a druggist and have sold and recommended Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, but I know more about it now than ever before, as my entire family has been restored to health and I am enjoying joy. Your Restorative Nervine gives excellent satisfaction."—Geo. Dr. T. H. Watts, Druggist, Hot Springs, S. D.

PEANUT CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

Sufferer Adopts They Give Sure and Prompt Relief.

Peanuts as a cure for consumption are widely known and believed in, says the Philadelphia Record. Now a Roxborough man comes forward with a peanut cure for insomnia. He says of it: "I had been a poor sleeper for five years. Violent exercise, drugs and other remedies had given me no relief. Finally, at the suggestion of a vegetarian, I tried the peanut. I put beside by bed a bag of peanuts newly roasted, shelled and salted, and on my first attack of insomnia I ate fifty, masticating them very thoroughly—giving in fact twenty-five chews to each nut. While taking this large dose, I felt a gradual drowsiness stealing over me, and as soon as the dose was ended I fell asleep. Since that time I have always kept fresh peanuts by me at night. They have never failed."

WHAT WAS SHE THINKING OF?

Actress, in Fear of Death, Regretted She Had No Fun.

Mr. Anderson tells a good story of Miss Ellsworthy during one of his Australian tours. In the midst of something approaching the wreck of the ship in which the company was traveling from a northern port to New Orleans, Anderson, rushing to the saloon to help the ladies, found Miss Ellsworthy with her maid, both in an agony of fear which had cured their seasickness. The perspiration was rolling down their faces. I assured them there was no danger. "No danger! No danger!" cried the actress hysterically. "Why, I can see the ship and sea through the ship's side. We are going down; the heat is suffocating—oh, dear, oh, dear; we are going down, I tell you, and—and (looking everywhere around her)—my God! I have no fan!"

Engine Instead of Farmhand.

The farm hand and the farm horse are rapidly being supplanted on the level tracts of the west by the traction engine. The farms are large, comprising several hundred acres, sometimes 1,000, and usually without trees or stones. Under these conditions the engine can do any kind of work. It is a compact little machine to run by gasoline, and not at all like the ordinary attachment to a threshing machine. It runs a "gang plow" with five in a row, three or four harrows at a time, is coupled when desired to a separator for thrashing grain, runs the mill for grinding cattle feed, and hauls farm wagons to market laden with grain. In fact, there is scarcely a thing about farm work that the little traction engine will not do.

The Mean Things.

The editor of the Glengow Echo avers he is not inclined to be much of a sport, but he says, when "we meet a cinch in the road we recognize it." This habit led him to accept a proposition made by a friend the other day, and every time a passing woman felt to learn if her shirt was gaping or tucked in under her belt the friend was to give the editor a nickel, while for each woman who did not do one of these things in walking a block the editor was to give a dime. "We got 62 nickels," the molder of opinion concludes, "and paid him one dime—a lady with both arms full of parcels came along."—Kansas City Journal.

Growth of Postoffices.

Few things afford a better index of the progress of this country in population, and also of the character of the increase, than statistics of the Postoffice Department showing the number of new postoffices created during the year. Thus it appears that in the year ended July 1, 1902, there was a gain of 924 postoffices in this country, involving an increase in the salary accounts of $541,300. Accepting the view of the venerable Edward Everett Hale that every postoffice is equivalent to a public school as an educational agency, these figures have a still larger meaning and significance.

"Deacon" White's Career.

S. V. ("Deacon") White, the veteran of Wall street, who has just sold his seat on the New York Stock Exchange, says that when he began trading there over thirty years ago the transactions of a day seldom reached 200,000 shares, as against an average of 2,000,000 now. "Mr. White," said one of his old friends a day or two ago, "you have accomplished many big things on 'the street,' but your greatest achievement has been that in spite of your many victimizings you have always paid your debts."

Possibilities of the Trolley.

The ramifications of the trolley system of this country are a source of never-ending wonder. Routes fifty and seventy-five miles long from the different large cities are common. So rapid has been the growth of the trolley throughout New England and the Middle States that within five years, it is predicted, one will be able to travel from Augusta, Me., to Chicago, and even much further west. The network of lines comprising this system will represent 7,000 miles.

That's What.

An editor works 365½ days per year to get out his paper—that's labor. Once in a while somebody pays him a year's subscription—that's capital; and once in a while some dead head takes the paper a year or two without paying for it—that's anarchy. But take on, finally will overtake the last named creature, for there is a place where he will get his pay; that place where he will get his pay; that place is hell.—Victoria Advocate.

DID NOT STICK LONG ENOUGH.

Varnish on Chair Gave Way at Inopportune Moment.

A delegation of young people from the First Presbyterian church of Brooklyn, led by the assistant minister, went down one evening to the Flanting chapel to hold a reception meeting with the editors. The seats of the place had been newly varnished and when one of the young men attempted to rise to speak he discovered he was stuck fast to his chair. Three times he tried to free himself, and each attempt, though more vigorous than the last, was unsuccessful. Pausing for a moment, as the audience looked at him, he exclaimed with emphasis:

"If I stick to the Lord as hard as I stick to this chair I'll be all right."

And with these words still soliciting the air he gave another pull—and freed himself.

HARD TO STIR NEW YORKERS.

Incident That Illustrates Their Indifference to the Tragic.

At 30 o'clock on Sunday night a prominent restaurant in Madison Square was packed with people, drinking, talking, laughing, singing, to keep with the blasts of the orchestra, one had to yell to his neighbors to be heard. Suddenly a frightful, big-voiced roar, of ominous sound helched forth. It was as big as the first even above the din it told unmistakably of some death. One woman's face stiffened, a few heads turned interrogatively, and that was all. There was not an instant's cessation in the hahel of resonant gayety. Yet an appalling catastrophe had occurred that had scattered death and physical disaster among scores of the holiday throng. It was New York's fatalistic lly to the tragic.—New York Times.

A Safe Hiding Place.

When Patrolman George Pepperhing of the First District drew his salary the other day he picked out a strip tender bill, and, folding it into a small a wad as possible, rammed it into the bottom of his revolver, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. Other policemen who had been watching him were puzzled at this act and asked for an explanation. When he ended, but finally, under pressure, replied that his wife had a deadly fear of a pistol. This explanation seemed to be satisfactory, but in view of the fact that he has not been married many months his friends are wondering how he managed to catch on so quickly.

Long-Deferred Reward.

Michael Crean of Detroit, Mich., was forty years late in receiving a deserved reward. Crean was a young man when he served under Col. (now Field Marshal) Lord Roberts in the Ghuzlee campaign of 1862. Through some flaw in the distributions years ago Crean was overlooked. When his whereabouts was ascertained the British government struck for him the medal and clasp for the possession of which many men risked their lives. A registered letter containing the medal from London reached him last week.

Queer Life of French Author.

Henri Murger, author of "La Vie de Bohème," whose name is inseparably associated with traditions of the Quartier Latin is said to have scrupulously led his life month by month on a plan characteristic of that happy-go-lucky region. He chose to have three days of enjoyment at $50 a day, twenty-seven days of dreaming and planning at the rate of $1 a day, and if the month happened to have thirty-one days the extra day was provided for with the help of a dollar borrowed from a friend.

School Teachers Threaten to Quit.

The little principality of Birkenfeld in the grand duchy of Oldenburg, is threatened with the strange spectacle of a general st'k" school teachers. The population 43,000 all told, but the pa teachers is so low that, after efforts to obtain redress, the drawn up an ultimatum in form, declaring that unless a new scale of emoluments be granted within a specified time the entire body of school teachers will resign.

Person as a Student.

Rob was conspicuous at Ha ore than twenty ye as the portrait of J. Handsome Bob Bagg him at Cambridge Hi ard's football captain in '79 never was a finer physical on Harvard's eleven. More than six feet tall, broad shouldered and powerful, he was the idol of the students as a football player in those days.

For International Stamp.

The Denmark general postoffice has suggested to the international postal authorities the adoption of an international stamp. This stamp, it is said, would allow of stamps being forwarded for reply, a difficulty that is often met with under the present conditions. The stamp would be marked "Reply," and certain precautions would have to be adopted to prevent fraud between the countries.

For Uplifting of Jewish Race.

A new agricultural colony for Jewish boys is being established near Grojec, in the government of Warsaw, Russian Poland. The aim is the idea of improving the physical welfare of the race, which is in danger of degeneration, as it is said, by the unnatural life, destructive influence of overcrowded ghettos.

DID GOOD WITH STOLEN MONEY

Proceeds of Swindles Given Over to Helpless Children.

Gustave Rossili was the greatest swindler Italy has ever known, though his many crimes were perpetrated purely in the interests of children's charities. He was a cripple, and from his earliest days displayed unwonted talent in those of tender age and similarly afflicted. When only 23 he set in motion a scheme of fraud on a gigantic scale which enlisted the wealthy of thousands in fifteen years.

With the proceeds of his crime he founded and endowed a cripples' home in Rome, cleared off the d. ts of three children's hospitals, and instituted homes for waifs in any of the principal Italian cities, though he lived in a dilapidated cottage and almost denied himself the bare necessaries of life. He was eventually the humble hirrel he was sentenced to lifelong imprisonment, but so popular had he become with the masses that frantic crowds cheered him as he was led from the courts. After fifteen years spent in a dungeon he was pardoned.

RELIC DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Tavern at Weston, Mass., Which Antedated the Revolution.

The fire at Weston, Mass., recently destroyed the famous John Flagg tavern, which antedated the revolution many years. It was one of the favorite Washington passed a night on his journey to Cambridge in the year 1789, and in 1798 President John Adams occupied the chamber previously that of Washington. On the following day he received an address from the townspeople, which was read and preserved in the Weston town library. Washington's visit was the most memorable tavern the more to be regretted is the loss by this fire of the old Colonial flag of thirteen stars, which for many years floated over this tavern from the date of Washington's visit.

Robbed Senator Gorman.

Senator Gorman of Maryland will not keep house in Washington the coming winter, having decided to close his mansion at Laurel because of a recent experience with dishonest servants. Some half dozen persons in his employ joined in a conspiracy to steal money, silverware, bedclothes and other articles, the agreement among them being that the plunder should be stored in the building a house for one of the number. One of the servants became alarmed when $400 in cash, some silver and a quantity of other things had been purloined. Complaint was made to the senator, who refused to prosecute. Instead he closed his home and took rooms in an apartment house.

The Most Precious Fur.

The most precious of all furs, that of the silver fox, is of a dark sooty black, with tips of white of a metallic sheen. The silver fox is found only in Siberia and Alaska. The pelt of the sea otter, which is now nearly extinct, is of a soft dark velvety brown. The animal survives only in Kamchatka and Alaska. Last year $1,700 was paid for a single silver fox, and a sea otter pelt brought $760. Sea otter furs are sunk through a hole cut in the ice. A belt suspended above and connected by a string with the net gives the trapper notice of a capture.

Revolting Spectacle on Scaffold.

A revolting spectacle was witnessed at the execution of a peasant for murder in Wiidin Citadel, Vienna, recently. As he was about to mount the fatal scaffold the condemned man, Zeco Kamenkovic, suddenly drew a pistol which he had concealed and wounded three of the executioner's soldier. He was overpowered, dragged to the scaffold and three successive attempts were made to hang him. In the first the rope gave way, in the second he was dragged down soon, and the wretched criminal's head was again put in the noose and held there till life was finally extinct.

Fierce Ants of Australia.

The biggest and fiercest ants in the world are to be found on the far northern coast of Australia. They build hills as big as houses and fight in the most ferocious fashion. Recently a man named Jamieson 1,200 was plodding to the ground by a falling tree from a gum-tree. When he was immediately attacked by hese and huge ants. When rescued his body was covered with. He was so and stung that he died ores after reaching the nearest al.

Discarded War Material.

Some idea of the vast quantities of discarded war material that are upon the general market by the successive changes in armament adopted by the various great powers may be gathered from the list of arms now offered for sale by the Austrian government. THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $3.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:

"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:

"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

HER MOTHER-IN-LAW.

NED CHATTERTON was a good deal of a mother's boy—that is to say, such a warm affection existed between mother and son that it was remarkable in this day of filial laxity.

So when it became known that Adelaide Westcott was engaged to him her many friends grew solicitous in warning her as to the course she should pursue in regard to her future mother-in-law.

"When a mother had always had such complete ascendency over a son it was always a hard matter to make her recognize a wife's right, and if this was to be done positive measures must be employed from the first." So her friends said, and her own mother gave her some good advice in the same line, while her sister Nell deplored the necessity of having a mother-in-law and reviewed all the traditions in regard to those very undesirable personages.

With so much instruction Adelaide became also imbued with very positive notions on the subject. Of course he was an only son and his mother a widow, but she could not consent to live in the same house with the elder woman. If all was to go well she must begin right. Of course Ned loved his mother, but matrimony would put him under new obligations. At her first opportunity she explained it all to him and insisted that they should keep a separate establishment.

Ned looked pained. But he said:

"I shall do as you say in the matter, Adelaide, though I had looked forward to a very happy companionship between you and my little mother. She is not hard to get along with, I know, and she would have helped you so much with her advice and counsel in the household affairs."

But Adelaide shorted him how a mother-in-law, by her very love and preference for her son, might cause dissension between husband and wife.

Perhaps he was not convinced, but he yielded the point and they were married. All of Adelaide's friends congratulated her upon her good sense, and behind his back praised Ned for his consideration in sparing his wife the presence of a mother-in-law. But he gave himself the satisfaction of setting up housekeeping within a block of the mother he loved.

Sometimes at night, when he and Adelaide sat alone by the fire, he thought of his mother and wished that she might be with them, but on the whole they were happy and as morbid thoughts entered his brain, for he believed that in time Adelaide's own good sense would triumph over the prejudices aroused by officious friends. But this was his mother wisdom.

There were times when the elder Mrs. Chatterton wept a little that she was denied the daily rapture of her son's joy; but she said nothing and kept her tears to herself. Ned was very faithful and dutiful, but she did not go often to his house, because her presence always seemed to put Adelaide in a mood of defense, almost border'ing on aggression. The young woman meant it to be understood, and plainly understood, that she would tolerate the interference in her affairs of no mother-in-law.

In the first glow of connubial joy Ned had neglected his club, but as time went on and the household begun to move in the accustomed routine he began occasionally to drop in and spend a social hour with his man friends. At first it was but once in two or three weeks and only an hour or two then. Then he went more frequently and stayed later.

Some evenings Adelaide was very lonesome, and after awhile when he stayed late she would cry to herself, but she always tried to welcome his return with an unclouded face. She believed that it was only thoughtlessness and that after awhile, when he came to realize how very lonely she became, he would not stay away from her so long.

Once, when she was very lonesome, Mrs. Chatterton came in and sat with her. They talked together and busied themselves with some needlework, and the hours did not seem so long. And when Ned came that night they walked home with his mother and all were light-hearted and happy.

But other evenings passed when nobody came in, or when her mother or Nell dropped in to find her alone and hinted that Ned was neglecting her. They would look at her strangely, as if they pitied her and wondered if she were happy. Somehow this pained her. Ned was good. She loved him and knew that he loved her; he was only thoughtless. She said this over and over to herself, and she could not bear to see in the eyes of her relatives the look that smeared him.

One night, when he had been later than usual, and which they knew was overfull, she tried to tell him how he was paining her, but broke down and burst into tears.

His face was flushed and he answered her impatiently:

"Goodness, Addy; don't act like a baby; you must remember that you are a woman. You oughtn't to expect a man to stick in the house all the time."

It wasn't so much what he said, but the tone in which he said it, that hurt her and made her sob silently until she fell asleep.

There was something restrained and shame-faced in his manner as he kissed her good-bye the next morning and went down-town, but in the evening he returned early and after dinner he did not go out. He was restless and nervous, and didn't seem to be reading the paper which he held up before him. Between husband and wife there was an embarrassing silence. There seemed to be no common theme for them to talk about. They retired early, and again Adelaide's pillow was wet with tears.

Her heart was overfull and she wanted sympathy and counsel. To whom should she turn? Would not her father tell her that she was foolish? Would not her mother be angry and blame Ned? Would not Nell pity her? No, she could go to none of these. Then suddenly she thought of Mrs. Chatterton. She understood Ned. She loved him. Would she not also understand the situation and be able to advise her? When she had gained courage enough she went down to her mother-in-law's and sobbed out the whole story to her. The old lady took her in her arms as she would have taken a tired child.

"You poor little girl," said she, "Ned has been very bad to you and you didn't know how to manage him; how should you? But be patient; we shall bring the young man around all right." Mrs. Chatterton was quite accustomed to the girl, who lay sobbing in her arms, and hope sprung up in the young wife's heart.

It was a matter of some doubt whether Ned was most pleased or surprised when, on the following night, Adelaide said to him:

"Would you mind going to the club to-night, Ned? Mother and I are going for a little while and I am afraid you will be lonesome."

"Certainly not," he replied, "but I thought that your mother was out of the city."

"YOU POOR LITTLE THING," SHE SAID.

"I mean Mother Chatterton—your mother," she said, faltering and blushing.

"Oh," he said tenderly, and he was slow in getting his hat, and he kissed her twice before going out.

He came home early that evening and his mother was just about to leave as he entered. She paused only long enough to say: "I'll be over to-morrow evening. Mr. and Mrs. Delaney are coming with the hope of beating you and Addy a few games of cards. I'll have to come and make a Welsh rarebit for you, I suppose."

"That will be just the thing," said Ned. "I'll show Tom Delaney whether he can beat us at cards or not. Do come, mother. Wait a minute and Addy and I will walk home with you. Won't we, dear?" But his wife was already throwing on her cape.

Next night Mr. and Mrs. Delaney came and Ned and Adelaide were beaten, but Mrs. Chatterton made the Welsh rarebit—she had never made a better one—and there were jokes and stories and bright conversation all through the short evening.

Delaney proposed that the three Chattertons come over to his house the next evening and get their revenge, and they went. There were more jokes and bright talk, and, best of all, this time Ned won.

"How pleasant these evenings are," he said to Adelaide, as with her on one arm and his mother on the other he wended his homeward way, "and how foolish I have been to have been away them at the club; we must keep this up, eh, little girl?" They were just at Mrs. Chatterton's gate, but Adelaide put her hand on the old lady's arm. "You are going home with us to spend the night," she said.

"And there is to be no demur, little mother," added Ned, sweeping her on past the gate. She seemed not but consent.

Per late in the night, after Mrs. Chatterton had gone to bed, Ned and Adelaide talked. They made plans for future pleasures, and their gayety but seemed the revival of the honeymoon enthusiasm.

"We shall have such glorious times," said Ned. "Mother is right here near us."

"She must be nearer, Ned," said Adelaide. "I want her to live right here with us."

"But, Adelaide—"

"Ned, I desire it. Don't say no. I've got over some foolish notions of mine and I just begin to find how much I need a mother-in-law."

Her friends say: "It is strange that after starting out so well she would let him bring that mother-in-law in on her, but I suppose he compelled her; that's the way with men."—Chicago News.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, thus justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next five years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each purchaser.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $3,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A fine investor can make a 6 to thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

The loss caused to the Catholic church and contents by the fire of January 18 was adjusted Tuesday. The damages were agreed upon at $771, and this amount will be forthcoming immediately. The total loss will exceed this sum by nearly or quite $200, but on the whole the pastor and congregation feel well satisfied with the adjustment. The insurance on the building itself was paid in full, but the contents were not covered to their full value, and it is on those that the loss occurs. Work on the rebuilding of the destroyed portion of the church will begin as soon as possible.

THE NIGHT BELL

(Copyright, 1902, by C. B. Lewis.)

I was on my way home at midnight and having a toothache routed out a drug clerk for a remedy. The door was opened a few inches and a pale face looked out.

"You look as if you expected an enemy," I said.

"Yes; I expected an enemy—a dead man."

"Nonsense! You never murdered any one, and even if you had the dead don't walk about pulling night bells. You've been sticking too close and got your nerves out of whack, or perhaps you use a drug of some kind to bring sleep. If you've got any real trouble on your mind, let's hear about it."

The footsteps of some belated pedestrian approached and died away. After listening intently and nervously the clerk motioned me to sit down and then whisperingly said:

"I'll—I'll tell you about it. One night at midnight long ago a man roused me up as you have done and bought cyanide acid. He lied to me as to its purpose. I had scarcely passed the bottle over to him when he removed the cork and swallowed the contents. He stood right over there, and he cursed and cursed and fought me all when I wanted to save him. I ran for help, and when I came back he was writhing and rolling on the floor. How he did suffer! But before they took him away to die he turned on me. He cursed me for having given him the poison, and he swore he'd have revenge.

"But you were not to blame," I said. "You didn't suspect that he was going to commit suicide."

"No; but how he raved at me! His curses have sounded in my ears ever since."

"Have you told your boss of your fears?"

"No."

"Well, don't say a word to any one. You are simply off your nerve. The suicide may have cursed, but he was in agony and didn't know what he said. If you were for a dead man to pull your bell, you'll die a very old man. Get yourself a brandy and brace up."

He drank a stiff dose and was the better for it, but before I went away he made a singular request. My trick at the office was up at 12 o'clock. The drugstore always closed at that hour. He wanted me to be with him over the midnight hour. I tried to laugh him out of his idea, but when I found him earnest and even apprehensive I let it with it.

Every night for several weeks I reached the store at about 12:20 and remained for an hour. Now and then the bell rang, but after I got there, but it was seldom we were interrupted. We never talked of the suicide after the first night. I realized that it was a disagreeable subject and one to be avoided. In fact, we had very little to say on any subject. My friend was nervous and preoccupied, and some nights he walked the floor and hadn't a word to say, while I sat reading a family almanac or brushed up on my Latin. It was a mystery at first—a mystery and a mercy.

As time passed, however, it got to be a bore, and I determined to drive out of it. My first move was to be fifteen minutes late. I found the clerk pale with fear that I would not put in an appearance at all. I made excuses about extra work at the office, and after four or five nights I skipped the store entirely. Dropping in next day, I found the man so upset that he would not trust himself to fill a prescription. "You did not come last night," he whispered to me, "but he did. Yes, he came and rang the bell at midnight, and I answered it he would have taken my life."

I laughed at him, and I think he felt a bit braver when I went away. I had to give him my solemn promise that I would be on hand that night, however, and I really meant to keep it. I was free to go after the office when I was detained by the nonappearance of the man who was to relieve me, and it was half past 12 when I reached the drugstore. I rang the bell in a peculiar way, as had long been understood, but there was no answer. I rang again and again, but with no better success. Then I happened to notice that the store door was slightly ajar. I pushed it open and entered. No one answered. Then I felt for a match and struck a light and stepped in and turned up a gas burner. At my feet, lying on the floor on his back, with his knees drawn up, his fingers out and his eyes open, was my clerk. After a glance about the store to see if any one was hiding I run out for a policeman.

"Dead," he said as he bent over the man on the floor.

"He may be in a fit," I replied.

"It's no fit. He's been flung down here and choked to death. Look at the mark on his throat."

"Some one rang the bell and got him up and then attacked him. He wasn't hit, but the murderer clutched him by the throat and choked the life out of him. See the look of terror on his face, the terror in his eyes! Why, you'd say he was looking into the face and feeling the clutch of a dead man!"

"At the hands of some person unknown" was the verdict of the coroner's jury, and I kept silence. Of what use for me to say that the assassin was the suicide who had sworn revenge; that he had come down the silent and deserted street with noiseless footsteps and pulled the bell—given my own signal, perhaps—and as the door was opened he had flung himself upon his victim and held his clutch until life went out? They would have sneered and ridiculed and jeered me.

THE SEWING MACHINE.

Successful Inventions That Preceded Howe's Patent in 1846.

The technical beginning of the sewing machine industry in this country was Sept. 10, 1846, when Elias Howe, Jr., obtained a patent for what grew into the first really practical sewing machine. Only three of the first Howe machines were made, however, and one of these was deposited in the patent office in Washington as a model. It was not until after 1850 that a factory for the making of sewing machines was built, so the enormous business of today has grown up in a short half century.

While Howe's invention marked the beginning of a successful industry, he was by no means the pioneer in efforts to substitute mechanical for hand sewing. As far back as 1770 Thomas Alsop patented in England a machine for embroidering. Another machine for embroidering in a loom was invented by John Duncan in 1804, and twenty-five years later another Englishman named Heilman patented still another embroidering machine.

The first recorded attempt at mechanical sewing was the invention of Thomas Saint, who took out a patent in England in 1790 for a machine which executed the old crochet stitch. It was not a success, but some of the features of the Saint machine appear in the perfected machine of today.

Barthelemy Thimonnier patented in France in 1830 the first sewing machine put to practical use. Eighty of his machines were in use for sewing army clothing in 1841, when a mob destroyed them because convinced they would drive seamstresses out of employment. Thimonnier built new and better machines, but all his work was again destroyed by angry artisans in 1848.

John J. Greenough took out the first patent for a sewing machine issued in the United States in 1842. It was intended to sew leather, but was of no practical use.

Walter Hunt of New York built a sewing machine in 1834, but failed to protect it by a patent. After Howe's machine appeared Hunt declared it embodied the ideas of his machine of 1834, but he was unable to establish his claim.

Care in Choosing Glasses.

A dealer in optical instruments declared that it gave him real pain to note the careless manner in which half the persons in New York wear glasses. "It is a matter to me," he said, "that they don't bring on blindness. In the first place, the frames should always be fitted to individual faces instead of being picked up indiscriminately without regard for facial peculiarities. The size of the lenses is another important consideration. Most of the glasses I see on the street are too small. They should be as large as the face of the wearer will permit, for a lens of good size not only affords better protection to the eye, but is more becoming than a smaller one. Another tribulation of the weak eyed is due to the reflection from the edges of untrained glasses. The eyeglasses should be attended to by an optician to get the best results from a pair of spectacles. Many lashes are worn so long that they brush against the lenses. This is decidedly injurious.—New York Times.

A Lesson in Hospitality.

A curious instance of provincial hospitality in a small Tuscan town is recorded by Lulgi Villari in "Italian Life in Town and Country."

A lady of very noble birth and of considerable wealth was giving a tea-fight party—it was the first time she had invited friends to her house that season. The entertainment began at 2 p. m. and lasted till 7. No refreshments were provided for the guests, but at half past 4 a servant appeared and solemnly presented a cup of chocolate to the hostess and one to her mother. This, of course, would only be possible in a very provincial town. In the more civilized spots excellent refreshments are always offered to the guests.

Year for Northern Lights.

This is the year for the displays of the aurora borealis, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press. This auroras are more plentiful some years than others, so certain years seem to be more favored in the way of displays of the aurora borealis or "northern lights." There is no accurate method of computing the year when the auroras appear, and they are liable to appear at any time, but it has been observed that they appear most frequently in periods of eleven years. It is remembered that they were frequent during 1893. The phenomenon exhibits a double annual period, being more common in March and October and less common in January and June.

Scientists have not supplied a satisfactory theory for the displays of the northern lights, although it has been observed that in years of numerous sun spots there are numerous aurorus, and they correspond closely to strong disturbances of the magnetic needle. It is believed, therefore, that they are produced by electrical processes. They are more commonly associated with clear skies. Between now and spring, if the theory holds, there should be plenty of opportunity to study and admire what is regarded as one of the most beautiful sights in the natural world.

Abstractors Object to Torrens Law.

The state abstractors are agreed that the Torreas law providing that certificates be issued in lieu of deeds is inadequate, but even with this condition, the law is not being pressed as far as its enforcement is concerned. This decision was reached at the annual meeting in St. Paul, at which time new officers were elected.

W. A. CASE GONE.

The Well-known Woodman Organizer Dies at St. Hilaire.

The death of W. A. Case, deputy organizer for the Modern Woodmen of this district, occurred at his home at St. Hilaire at 7 o'clock Saturday morning. Deceased was 52 years and is known all over the valley where he has worked in the interests of the popular fraternal organization for which he has been district deputy. While at Ulen three weeks agoadding to the interests in the order, he was taken ill and spent a week in bed. He recovered sufficiently to travel, but on reaching St. Hilaire he became worse and the physicians pronounced it a case of typhoid fever combined with pneumonia. Mr. Case's wife, his son Fred, a resident of Bemidji, and his daughter, Mrs. Sinclair, of Ware, were with him when the end came.

Piano Lamp for a Gift.

A promising young man of Eagle Grove, recently presented his better half with a bandsome piano lamp on her birthday. He was flattered when she told him she intended giving it his name, until he asked her reasons for so peculiar a proceeding. "Well," she answered, "you know, dear, it is handsome to look at, requires a good deal of attention, is remarkably brilliant, is sometimes unsteady on its legs, liable to explode when only half full, flares up occasionally, it is always out at bedtime and is bound to smoke."

The Easy Pill.

DeWitt's Little Early Risers do not gripe nor weaken the system. They cure biliousness, jaundice, constipation and inactive livers, by arousing the secretions, moving the bowels gently, yet effectually, and giving such tone and strength to the glands of the stomach, liver and bowels that the cause of the trouble is removed entirely. These famous little pills exert a decided tonic effect upon the organs involved, and if their use is continued for a few days there will be no return of the trouble. A. L. Reichert.

THE IRRESISTIBLE ADVANCE OF SOCIALISM IN AMERICA

By Rev. Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT of New York

SOCIALISM in this country I believe to be irresistible, and I believe that it ought not to be resisted. Herbert Spencer wrote fifty years ago that socialism could be prevented by nothing but civil war, bloodshed and despotism. I do not agree with this. I believe that this, like every great question, will be debated by the American public and settled without bloodshed.

You may rightly think that it is easier to settle this question on the platform than in the factory. THE REAL SOLUTION HAS TO BE MADE IN THE FACTORY.

THE ORGANIZATION OF LABOR IS JUST AS NECESSARY AS THE ORGANIZATION OF CAPITAL. THE QUESTION IS, SHALL IT BE ORGANIZED BY PLUTOCRACY OR DEMOCRACY?

The peril to America is not in the greatness of the organization, but in the direction which it will take. WE AS A PEOPLE MUST CONTROL BOTH ORGANIZED CAPITAL AND ORGANIZED LABOR. A government of the people must control the necessities of life. It is just as necessary to prevent crime in corporations as it is in labor unions. Men are of more value than money, and we must find a way to prove it.

THERE ARE 19,000 STOCKHOLDERS IN THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY; THERE ARE 19,000 EMPLOYEES OF THE ROAD. THE OWNERS ARE ORGANIZED. WHY SHOULD NOT THE EMPLOYEES BE ORGANIZED?

The man of great business ability and much money puts his money into the stock of a company, and the widow with no business knowledge and little money puts her money into the same company, and all is managed by a board of directors, which both the rich business man with the money and the widow with money trust to do their business honestly.

So, too, the workingmen—one a good one, able to earn large wages, the poorer one able to earn loss wages—believing that it will be better for both and all, pool their abilities and issues and form a union and place its direction in the hands of their most competent men, just as the rich man and the poor widow pool their money and place it in charge of directors.

Government of the people must prevent monopoly in the life necessaries by law and regulation and must prevent crime in corporation or in labor unions. Law must be alike enforced for the rich and the poor, the employer and the employee.

CHURCH TO BE MOVED.

Presbyterian People Let Contract to a Litchfield Contractor.

The trustees of the Presbyterian church have let the contract for moving the church building to the side of the river to Mr. Eastman, of Litchfield, who was here last week and after inspecting the building and surroundings offered to do the job for $475. Work will be commenced as soon as Mr. Eastman can get his tools here.

The exact location for the new church has not been decided upon as yet, but it will be on aorth Main street or in the immediate vicinity thereof.

For some time the question of either moving the church or building a new edifice has been agitated, and last summer enough money was pledged to erect a new building. However a buyer for the old building was not found and there was delay in getting title to the lots selected. The present plan is much cheaper and nearly as satisfactory.

STOLE NEARLY $7,000.

St. Hilaire Company's Agent at Grafton Under Arrest.

Elmer D. Evans, who was last week arrested at Grafton, N. D., on the charge of appropriating $1,000 of the funds belonging to his employer, the St. Hilaire Retail Lumber company, and who was admitted to bail in a nominal amount pending his preliminary hearing, has been rearrested on three separate charges —embezzlement, perjury and forgery —and is confined in the Walsh county jail. Bail was fixed at $5,000 which he was unable to furnish.

A closer investigation of the books has disclosed a shortage of $6,700 instead of $1,000 as originally reported, and it has also discovered that several notes held as security by the company had never been given by the persons whose names were signed thereto, but were forgeries perpetrated by Evans to cover up his defieiency.

Mr. Evans was formerly a resident of St. Hilaire and has many acquaintances in Red Lake county.

STANDARD OIL METHODS.

Settles for Ten Thousand Dollars and Makes People Pay for It.

The Standard Oil company has just given the people of St. Paul a practical illustration in which it tilts the prize of oil when verdicts averse to its interests are rendered in court.

In January Michael Meritz instituted a suit for big damages, which was subsequently dismissed from the court house on the oil company compromised for $10,000 damages. Moritz was injured and lost two children in a fire caused by the sale of improper kerosene.

Two days after the suit was compromised the price of gasoline went up from 13 to 18 cents per gallon. It remained at 18 cents for nine days and then dropped to 15 cents.

For the also days 8,400 gallons of gasoline were used in St. Paul and 45,000 gallons in the St. Paul division. At a profit of 3 cents over the usual profit this would have netted the company $2,530 in St. Paul and $14,500 in the St. Paul division.

Mare State Ditches.

The committees ondralaage of the house and the senate held a joint meeting last week and decided to ask for an appropriation of $150,000 for the ensuing two years, to be expended by the state drainage commission in the construction of ditches to drain state lands in the Red River valley. Senators Cole and Brower, and Representatives Hinds and Ekman were appointed to draft a bill making the appropriation, $75,000 of it to be available in 1903 and $75,000 in 1904.

The state drainage commission, composed of the governor, the state auditor and the secretary of state, was established by the legislature in 1901, to supervise the construction of ditches to drain state swamp lands, and $50,000 was appropriated for two years.

I. O. O. F. Election.

Returns received by A. L. Bolton, grand secretary of the Minnesota Odd Fellows, show that S. A. Farnsworth is now fourteen votes ahead of Wm. Powers in the contest for grand master. Balloting is over throughout the state, but all the returns have yet been received, and Mr. Powers claims to be in possession of unofficial reports which give him a lead of two votes over his opponents. The result will probably be known next Tuesday, when the votes of subordinate lodges will be canvassed by the present grand master. The figures at present are Farnsworth 884, Powers 870.

PROFESSIONAL BRETHREN

CHAPTER I.

HAVE a partiality for old houses and reckoning and inveriably try to locate it a residence to be in the vicinity when one is to be in a prosperous. There are always so many people coming and going that a stranger on the premises seldom attracts attention. It is an excellent time for inspecting basement windows, cellar doors and outbuildings.

In a general way servants are more, or less, such sights about locking the lookout and her general appearance, for people always look much more roomily after a ball than ordinarily. They are a longer time in retiring, but when everything is finally quiet about the house it would take nothing less than a pistol shot to rouse them. I suppose they are completely exhausted and after the excitement of the evening do not dream of burglars.

One March night I waited until after 2 o'clock for one of these festivities to draw to a close. It was cold and raw outside in the shrubbery, and I grew impatient at the lateness of the guests in taking their departure. The night was a large, old fashioned mansion just outside of the city limits, and from its general air and appearance I knew that considerable wealth in the shape of solid silverware and family heirlooms was contained in it. Following the custom of the day, the best dresses would, I thought, bring all these relics from their hiding places and show them to her guests.

It was anticipation of a rich haul that kept me from giving up the job in disgust, for I was tired and exhausted with several previous unlucky ventures, and my patience seemed sorely tried.

When the lights finally went out, I breathed easier and felt my courage returning. Everything promised to run smoothly. I had succeeded in disposing of the watchdog earlier in the evening and had discovered an unfastened window opening into the coal-room in the cellar, which I believed the servants would not think to look so late at night.

I waited a good hour after the last flickering light had disappeared. Then I crept softly up to the house, and, concealed in its shadow, listened for sounds. There was none, except those strange, almost inexpressible voices which seem to come from nowhere in the dead of night. I did not hear that anybody had ever noticed them, but I have always fancied that they were the breathing of the earth—if such a thing were possible—for they come in regular, rhythmic pulsations.

I crept down the side of the house until I reached the basement window, and, finding it unlocked, as I expected, I softly opened it and looked in. I was not positive that the window opened into the coalroom, but from the personal appearance of things I felt reasonably sure I was right. Not to make any mistake or stumble in the darkness, I lowered my bag of tools until it struck something which gave forth a metallic sound. Securing the bag back and forth, I succeeded in identifying the object as a tin pan.

As I was about to use my dark lantern outside, I lowered myself cautiously into the basement. Instead of the coal bin I found myself in the dairy room of the house. The odor from newly made butter, fresh milk and cream should be quite such an overpowering as to tell that I had to satisfy it before I could go any further. By groping around in the shelves I succeeded in getting a pretty fair supply of food—milk and cream in abundance, good cheese, several mince pies, some cake and cold meat.

The night was pretty wet for my work, and I did not regret the time I spent in eating of that cold tempting repast. I would have felt better had I discovered a bottle of good wine, but in its absence the fresh milk was a fair substitute.

The door leading from the dairy room to the basement laundry was not locked, and I quietly entered the latter place. I now ventured to open a little the side of my dark lantern, and by means of it I found the stairs leading to the second floor. The servants' were above me, and to avoid any one I removed my shoes. I was speakless and roomy, to take note of my surroundings. I proceeded, so that I might lay my hand again without hesitating. It is a poor general, I have always thought, who harns his bridges behind him. More than once this careful habit of mine has saved me from unpleasant complications.

When I passed from the kitchen into the dining room, I was greatly surprised to find my solid pieces of silver. Even many of the expensive pieces of brie-a-brac that are usual to the modern mansion. It looked as if the hostess had anticipated robbery and had stripped the tables and mantelpieces of every small article of special value.

Although disappointed, I made my way spotless, hoping to find some loose jewelry at least on the bureaus. There were signs of the feast and entertainment all about the hall and rooms, but I was unable to find anything that appealed to my tastes. I passed from one bedroom to another, with about the same result. I could hear the regular breathing of the occupants of the house, and a distant noise in the rear told me that one man was a good sneaker. So long as that rhythmic sound continued I felt that I was safe from all alarms.

After making a detour of the rooms I finally entered a small chamber that was used for storing linen and trunks. It occurred to me that possibly the missing things were perched away in this room. I closed the door gently behind me and turned on the slide from my lantern.

As I did so I was suddenly startled by the bright ray of some light shooting out of the darkness. Instantly I grasped my revolver and pointed my light toward the spot. The result of this movement was to produce a queer combination.

I saw that I was looking into the muzzle of a revolver held in the hands of a man who was inspecting me by the aid of a dark lantern similar to my own. My own revolver was covering the place where his heart should be.

The discovery must have been simultaneous, for we both flashed the light of our lanterns into each other's face and gone long and silently. Neither wore a mask, and in the unreserved eyes there was cool, deadly resolution. We must have been fools to foolhardy for either to shoot, for the life of the other would have been instantly sacrificed. I waited a full minute or two for the man to speak.

"Hello!" I said finally, unwilling to bear the strain of silence longer. "You seem to be ahead of me tonight, and I must congratulate you upon the neatness of your work. I haven't found a thing behind you."

The man was not inclined to answer at first, but I continued in a reassuring voice:

"We may as well call a truce. It would be folly for either of us to shoot. I don't want to get you in trouble any more than myself."

I had been struck by the fine, handsome features of the man, but when he spoke in a well modulated, musical voice I was further puzzled. He did not look like one of my set.

"What kind of a truce do you want?" he asked. "I also see I have you covered with my revolver and could kill you in an instant."

"But you fail to notice mine," I answered. "A very slight pressure of the trigger would send a bullet through your heart."

I thought he turned a trifle paler, but his voice was steady and unquivering.

"I admit that and accept the situation. But tell me what terms you propose for your truce."

"Simply these: We should go into partnership in the matter, and I have had no much trouble in getting into the house as you, and I have not fast as much risk, but you got ahead of me and made a complete job. I admire the way you have done the work. Even I couldn't do it better, and I don't think you belong to the class I—"

"Never mind that," he interrupted impatiently. "Stick to your terms and be quiken. Or."

"Well, to come straight to the point," I added, a little nettled at his abrupt ways, "I propose that we divide the plunder you have collected. For your extra trouble you take two-thirds and I one-third. Is that fair?"

He remained silent a moment and then said:

"I'll agree to such a bargain, believing further will ever be said of to night's work?"

"Not a word."

"And you will never recognize me if you should happen to meet me on the street or anywhere else?"

I did not like this part of the bargain, for I believe that every one should be placed on the same level in such a business and that one man should not set himself up to being better than another, but I finally assented, with the exception of one slight qualification:

"Not unless we happen to meet under similar circumstances again. Then I might recall to you this meeting."

"I don't think that is likely to occur," he replied firmly.

Then in a firm, measured voice he added:

"Well, I'll trust you. I will give you one-third of all I have collected. I believe that you will keep your part of the agreement if I keep mine."

There was honesty written in his face, and I would have trusted him to the extent of pocketing my revolver, but again he got ahead of me. I stood there covering him with my weapon half a minute after he had put his pistol in his pocket, a temptation to make him give everything to me under penalty of death seized me for an instant when I realized that he had placed himself in my power. But that some rich, medieval voice suddenly recalled me to my bargain.

"There, take this bag outside with you, and we will divide the thing where there is less chance of detection."

"Have you been all over the house?" I asked in a little confusion.

"Yes, all over. There is nothing worth taking left."

He moved toward the door and started to open it. He turned an instant and asked:

"How did you come in?"

"Through a cellar window," I replied, "and you?"

"A clumsy way, when you could have entered by the front door."

"Do you mean to say"—I began.

"S-s-s-h, don't spank now. I'm opening the door. Follow me."

I never felt the power of a man so strongly before. I attributed it to the fact that I was in the presence of a master who got my feeble accomplishments entirely into the background, and yet I had prided myself upon my successes.

We walked stealthily down the stairs and out of the front door to the lawn. He carried a pack larger than mine. When we reached the shelter of a clump of trees, we held a conference.

"It is getting late, and it will be light soon," my strange companion said. "You must make our division hurriedly."

In the same quick, mosterful and, if I say it, insult way he made a division of the spoils, giving me more than one-third.

"Now, if you are satisfied, we will part," he said. "I think we have no further need of each other."

I made a motion as if to follow him, but he waved me back again.

"Good night. I must be going."

He turned and walked rapidly through the trees, leaving me standing there as nonplussed as any man engaged in such a hazardous business as mine could ever afford to be.

CHAPTER II.

GENERALLY I do not turry long in the vicinity of a house that I have looted, for the police, as a rule, are a pleasant way of arresting suspicious characters simply to cover up their inability to find a clew otherwise. I give the impression that they are really doing something to capture the burglar. Then my previous conduct, too, that people imagine they are working diligently on the track and the newspaper correspondents form a part of their deeply laid plan.

But in this case I overruled my better sense and decided to long around the scene of my last engagement just to satisfy a feeling that I was a good way to meet again the man who had so generously shared his spoils with me. True, he had found himself in such a position that something had to be done to buy me off; but I had thought afterward, he could easily have outwitted me and escaped with all the plunder.

On the following afternoon I dressed myself in a spare suit of clothes which I always keep for an emergency and walked out of the car line turned toward the old fashioned mansion. As I approached it I caught a glimpse of an active little man who seemed to be inspecting the premises with great concern. Without hesitating I put him down as a detective, one of those half policemen whom ambitious servants are chiefly in following a trail that is as clear as daylight.

I felt no fear of him, for I knew that he was not the kind of man to engage a professional. I knew that a bold front would disarm him of all suspicion other than anything else. If he caught me sneaking about the neighborhood, he would very likely arrest me.

Passing near the front of the house where he seemed busily engaged in studying the broken shrubbery, I accosted him.

"Is this the house that was robbed last night?" I asked innocently, looking with interest over the place.

"Is it? Why, who said any house was robbed?"

He gave me a hard stare, which I returned without seeming bold.

"The papers are full of it," I replied, "And, being out this way, I thought I'd look around a bit and see the house."

"Oh, you did, eh? Well, it isn't a show place, and you can't get in."

"Why not? There are no burglars here now, I hope. If there are, I'd like to get a shot at 'em."

He seemed to smile inwardly at my ignorance.

"Well, nobody is allowed on the place," he answered more brusquely. "And so, if you haven't any business here, you can march on."

"But there is a man looking at the house from the street, is there?"

"No, but the people don't want to be stared at by every Tom, Dick and Harry in the country, so please move on."

I hardly noticed his last words as his rudeness was by the appearance of two people on the piazza. One was a beautiful young woman with a figure and face that would attract attention anywhere. She walked down the front steps and toward an instant to speak to her companion.

But handsome as she was, the man was followed her attention at once, and for an instant I felt myself growing dizzy. Fortunately for me at that instant I had turned to greet the young people, and he did not see my sudden consternation.

I never forgot faces that I have once particularly noticed. It is a part of my discipline to remember them. This one I had every reason to remember very well. Although I had only seen it by the aid of my dark lantern at night, I knew instantly that it belonged to my companion in crime.

He was handsomely dressed, and his clear cut features gave him an aristocratic appearance that must have been born in him. A slight pallor of the face suggested the possibility of some inherited disease that he was unable to control. As he walked alongside the beautiful woman I had to think what a noble couple they made. Each seemed made for the other.

CHAPTER III.

THAT night I spent on the place of Charles Goddard and made myself as familiar with his family history as systematic compiling of the cosh-man would permit.

"An easy man he is to get along with," my informant volunteered. "There ain't the likes of him anywhere else in the country. An' the sweet miss as I set as good. She's an angel, my wife says, if there ever was one."

"You mean the lady he's engaged to," I replied, "the one who lives over in the mansion that was robbed the other night?"

"Exactly! Miss Belle Stetson, the only lady that's worthy such a man as my master."

"How long have they been engaged and when are they to be married?"

"Now you're going too fast. I didn't say they was engaged, did I? And if they ain't engaged I couldn't say when they're going to be married, could I? Some say they're engaged, an' others say they ain't. How do I know who's right?"

The man was only waiting to reveal more of the relationship between the two young people, and I entered to his natural weakness by encouraging him to proceed.

"I must be a stranger around these parts because I've don't know what ye ask me," he continued, with a shrug of the shoulder in reply to my questions.

"I wouldn't be a telling' it to every one, but seein' you're goin' to be one of the family I don't mind speakin' plain like to you."

He puffed noisily upon his black pipe, sending the smoke upward in dense clouds. He must view John, and he claimed to be an Irish-American; but, with all his fund of humor and brogue, he still retained all the loquacity of his first ancestors.

"Mr. Goddard comes from one of the oldest families of this country, an' old Virginia blood, too. He's got a coat of arms in his den as long as his arm, an' a coat as big as his dog—wasn't a bit bentat the occasions. I've often seen the old Colin regalia out at the horse exercises. The doctor always said he came over in the Mayflower, I don't know much about the Mayflower, except what I've heard the old doctor say, but she must have been a pretty large ship. She brought the doctor over—no, the doctor's father, or some great-grandfather, I don't just remember which—an' he always said that was enough glory for any one man. But old Mr. Goddard would rile the doctor by saying that he thought he'd a grander man of France under King Louis was a greater honor an' that his ancestors descended direct from kings an' emperors. They couldn't agree noway, an' they just made up long enough to pick a new quarrel. I've heard tell how they'd talk peacefullie about the politics of the country till they got to goin' about ancestors, an' then in five minutes they'd be shakin' their sticks in each other's faces an' callin' me names.

"But this didn't seem to make no difference with their children. They just played together like brothers an' sisters. When they was no bigger'n up to my knee they'd talk about lovin' one another an' about gettin' married. The old doctor and Mr. Goddard scorched at this an' forgot to quarrel sometimes about their ancestors just to see the little ones laugh.

"They seemed to be keen for each other, an' everybody said they'd get married some day. But when Miss Belle grew up she'd somebody said his son had inherited his disease an' that he wasn't long for this world. Nobody seemed to know just what the disease was, but they said it was incurable an' some thing not to be spoken lightly of.

"But what that disease was of Mr. Charles Goddard I ain't so sure. Old Dr. Stetson was quite riled about it, for he said he wouldn't let his daughter marry any man that had it in his family. Mr. Goddard got angry an' went away. He was gone for five years, an' folks heerabouts said the engagement was broke off, which was one way for a time.

"But when the doctor died Mr. Charles turned up again an' lived in the old house just as if nothin' had ever happened. He made up with the doctor's daughter, an' they've been comin' an' goin' together ever since. They was hopes for a time that they'd make a match after all. But there ain't no tellin' just what may happen. He never seemed to be quite the same after his illness. He was pale an' quiet-like, just as if that disease won a-dogging him an' takin' hold of him.

"He brought a doctor back with him to look after his health. He'd met the man somewhere in Europe, an' he lives —in Paris, I think—an' this fellow he watches Mr. Charles all the time. He lives over there in that old brown house, an' sprints once an' sometimes twice a week to see how the doctor's daughter, an' they've been comin' an' goin' together ever since. There

A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by overeating. An eminent authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. But although the good food you want but don't overload the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food without the stomach's aid. This rest and the wholesome tonics Kodol contains soon restore health. Dieting unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fulness and bloating from which most people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

Editorial

truth,even i had taken a strong liking to him and wished to be near him.

Promptly at 10 o'clock I rattled up to the house with the team and waited for my master (I did not consider it lowering to call him that), who soon appeared on the piazza dressed with immaculate taste. His face was a treple paler than I had ever seen it before, but otherwise he was unchanged.

I filled the new duties assigned to me and looked forward with considerable interest to the outcome of the ride. I would at least have an opportunity to study the man together.

He dismounted at the front door at the Stetson house and lightly ran up the steps, taking two at a time. He was gone about fifteen minutes, during which time I studied the house and the various windows which opened upon rooms in which I must have been.

Miss Stetson appeared more beautiful than ever that morning, confirming my first impression. She noticed me with a slight inclination of the head. Then the two took their seats, and I drove them down the old country road to the opposite direction from the city.

For a time they remained silent, but after we had covered a mile they began to converse in monosyllables. This in time yielded to more animated conversation, conducted in an undertone that made hearing very difficult. I have always prided myself upon my good hearing, and it is due to the acuteness of this sense that I caught any of the conversation. As they became wrapped up in their talk they unconsciously raised their voices a trifle. As near as I could hear the important part of their conversation was as follows:

"I wish Dr. Squires would leave that old hundred house," Miss Stetson was saying. "It makes me feel cold and clammy every time I pass it, and what must it be to live in it all the time?"

"Probably very disagreeable, especially to one of your temperament," Mr. Goddard replied quietly.

"Or to one of your nature," she answered, with a slight tremble of her voice.

"But Dr. Squires does not seem to mind it," he added, unmoved. "I have offered to let him have a room in my house, but he prefers to stay where he is. He says he cannot pursue his investigations so well any where else."

"What are his studies and investigations? He is so mysterious about them that my curiosity is excited."

"Ask him, and he will probably tell you."

"I have, but he always puts me off—tells me to wait until some day when he is ready to announce his discovery to the world. Then he will tell me the first one."

"A great honor to you, I am sure, but I should demand to be let into the secret now."

There was a little irony in his voice which no one could mistake.

"Why do you not aspire to the same honor?" she asked in sharp, piqued tones. "I understand that you are just as ignorant of his secrets as I am."

"Yes, I am. I know nothing about his studies. He never lets me go beyond the office, which is on the ground floor in front, but then there is no special reason why he should take me into his secrets."

"Isn't he a friend of yours, and didn't you bring him here?"

"I brought him here, but not as a friend. I understood that he was skilled in certain lines, and I brought him here as a medical adviser. I am responsible for nothing more' than that."

"You talk very differently from what you did six months ago. There was nothing too good for you to say about him."

"I'm saying nothing against him now. I merely disclaim responsibility for him except as a medical adviser."

"I do not think he needs any one to sponsor for his character," was the sharp rejoinder.

"Probably not."

The quietness of the reply added fuel to the fire, and the silence which followed was an bulletion of their feelings. I dropped the whip purposely on the seat back of me, and in turning to pick it up I caught a momentary glimpse of their faces. They were both pale, and they were gazing intently at the scenery on opposite sides of the carriage.

During the rest of the ride very little conversation was carried on between them, and I had ample time to think and reflect. The result of my cogitations was that I determined to pay Dr. Squires a visit and see what I could discover of the secret of his scientific investigations. Following the natural bent of my mind, I of course decided to make the visit in the dead of night and, unannounced. Something more than glamor and spirits would be required to keep me off the premises where there was any chance of making a good haul or of discovering any secrets that might be turned to good account later.

CHAPTER V.

IT was nearly a week after this ride before I could decide upon a night favorable for a visit to Dr. Squires. It is a poor burglar who fails to make careful preparations before attempting to enter a house, and long experience in my business has made me extremely cautious. I never undertake a job without the consideration of all details, and sneak thief may go around from house to house in an aimless sort of manner and enter the first one that is not properly barred, but not so with a professional.

John always sent me off to exercise the horses on the few days when Mr. Goddard did not use them, and I employed these spare moments to acquaint myself with the surrounding country. I passed Dr. Squires' house several times in the course of the next few days, examining the premises with a critical eye.

I found that the house was located some distance back from the main highway and that it was nearly concealed from view by shade and fruit trees. A small grove of woods backed up to it on one side and an open pasture field bordered it on two other sides. The easiest and safest approach to it, I conceived, was from the west side.

The house itself was an old fashioned flat roofed mansion sadly in need of paint and general repairs. It was enough to drive almost any one's body away from it after dusk, and I did not wonder that strange stories of ghosts and spirits had been gossiped around by the country people. If I had been a superstitious person, I should have selected the house as the last one to risk. It was probably this idea that had influenced the doctor in taking it for his workshop. It was pretty safe in assuming that nobody would disturb him in that lonely retreat.

I asked leave to go in to the city on Friday afternoon, and I told John not to worry if I did not appear until the following morning. I had friends in the city who might detain me over night.

About 4 o'clock I left the barn and started reasonably to walk to the city. John offered to drive me half way down the road, but I would rather walk the entire distance, as the exercise was so fine I preferred the walk.

Two miles down the road I found that I was perfectly concealed from view of every house, and I quietly slipped over the fence into the woods. This piece of woods I knew inclined up to Dr. Squires' house. I concealed the bundle, which I pretended that I wanted to leave in the city with me, and enough tools from it first to answer all my present purposes.

As I approached the edge of the woods I moved with great caution. I did not know how many servants the doctor had, although John had assured me that he had only a man named Oscar Lindan who was more feeign looking than his master. This servant never associated with anybody else and was either deaf and dumb or unable to speak English.

He was a sort of faithful watchdog, I thought, and the doctor had no friended and who would in consequence give up his life for him if necessary. I had met such natives before—servants before, and my experience had always been that they are exceedingly troublesome. I therefore used extra precautions.

While yet some distance from the house I climbed up into the leafy branches of one of the large trees and, pulling the foliage to one side, scanned the house intently through a pair of strong fieldglasses. By their aid I could note everything that was going on inside the house and could almost see objects inside the windows.

The only advantage I derived from this was a clearer idea of the most vulnerable points of the house and also the way to escape from the premises in the event of an alarm. I saw the servant go about his duties, and later I secured my first glimpse of the doctor. He was a tall, bearded, thickset, well proportioned man, and one who would prove a bold and powerful antagonist. More than this I could see my self I found myself at closer quarters with him.

I remained in my treetop position until well after dark, watching everything that occurred around the house. Then I descended to the ground, ate a few pieces of cold meat and bread, drank a little wine and threw myself on the dry leaves to sleep. There was no danger of being discovered in the woods, and I needed the rest and sleep to prepare me for the night's work.

It was shortly after midnight when I opened my eyes again. Habit had made it a second nature with me to awaken at the hour, and I had no fear of oversleeping myself when I first closed my eyes. I crawled through the undergrowth toward the fence which divided the doctor's land from the grove, and then waited and listened. The house was perfectly dark, and everything was calm and peaceful.

I thought of resting, but had failed to see any ground to the afternoon through my glasses. However, to make [illegible] and a cat—a noise that always brings watchdogs away from their post at once. If the dogs were inside the house, I would find that out later. But I really saw no reason why dogs should be kept on the place.

Satisfied that the coast was clear, I made my way quietly to the house, keeping well in the shadow of the trees. Then I made a close examination of the windows and doors. They were locked and fastened, the latches and re-enforced with iron. I selected the doctor's study as the place most likely to be occupied.

With a diamond cutter I took a piece of the glass pane out, making an opening large enough to insert the hand. I worked as carefully that the diamond pane scarcely made any of the grating noise so common when one operates with cheap cutters. This one had been made specially for me, and it was perfect in every detail.

As I took the piece of glass out and deposited it on the floor of the piazza I listened intently for a few seconds to see if my operations had disturbed anybody. Then I applied my ear to the hole in the pane to catch the breathing of any watchdog.

Nothing could be heard of an alarming character, and as I proceeded to moisten the window and to open it.

Now, if I had been in the city or the house had been a modern one, I should have been thought of opening that window without searching for a burglar alarm, but as in the country, miles away from any assistance, and in such an antique house, I did not see the value of a burglar alarm and consequently never once gave it consideration.

I discovered my mistake in an instant, however. I had not raised the window half an inch when there were a tingling of bells and an electric burglar alarm sounded from the room I me turn pale. An amateur might have thought that all the ghosts and spirits of the dead had suddenly come to life again, but I was familiar with that sound to be deceived.

I was off the piazza in half a minute. Quick as I was, however, a flash of light in the windows of the house beat me. The alarm had lighted every electric light in the rooms, and the all nearest was in a brilliant blaze.

Even at this moment, however, when all my faculties should have been alert, I made another mistake. Instead of seeking safety in the woods as fast as my legs would carry me I waited to see further developments. Would the doctor and his servant come out and search for me? I laughed softly to myself at the idea. Certainly they could not expect assistance from another house inside of half an hour. Then what was the burglar alarm for? To frighten robbers away; that was all I concluded.

But I changed my mind a moment later when I heard the quick patter of steps that I knew did not belong to human beings. Two black objects were rushing down the lawn from the barn, and in the semidarkness I made out two enormous Dane hounds. The object of their visit was almost immediately. But in that instant I had found out exactly where I was and the only place of safety. Could I reach the woods and climb a tree before they caught up to me?

This question flashed through my mind, but I could not answer it. I already heard their feet behind me, striking the ground with heavy pattern as they loped rapidly across the intervening space.

The blood seemed to rush to my head, and for an instant I thought of death. I had never been accused quite so completely before. I gathered up my strength for a final effort and cleared the fence with a bound, but as I leaped upward the foremost Dane made a tremendous lope and cleared the top rail of the fence in fine style.

We both landed on the other side, but the force of the hound's leap carried him several feet over my head. Before he could turn upon me I had cocked my revolver, and as he made a savage dive toward me I exploded it full in his face. The range was so short that the explosion must have partly stunned him, for he rolled over and kicked a few times and then lay quite still.

He sprang upon me with a snark.

At his dead mate he sprang upon me with a snarl that I can remember to this day. The great red, fiend-like jaws were close to my face, and I drew back with a helpless shudder as I could have pulled in fear then if professional pride had not tied my tongue. I lowered before my fate, determined, however, to sell my life dearly.

But before the white teeth could close upon me I saw a flash of something in the hound's mouth as it sprang to my dazed mind like a fork of lightning. It made a curve downward and then disappeared. It had left its mark behind. I felt great spurts of warm liquid spatter my face, heard a throat on my hands and face, while the brute rolled over with an angry growl.

I jumped to my feet and saw facing me, with the bloody knife in his hand, Dr. Godard. He was standing the attitude of the doctor and his faithful dog protector. I opened the words of my master-and hurried from the spot, but when I turned to look for my deliverer I found that he had disappeared too!

CHAPTER VI.

I went to my shagbreak before I recovered from my fright. I changed my clothes of the blood and dirt and returned to my quarters in the barn. John was not up yet, and when he finally came down to the stable I was busily engaged in grooming the horses. The experience of the night had left me a trifle pale and agitated, far in all my experience I had never been quite so near death's door. But John's was an unsuspecting nature, and I had nothing to fear from him.

"You're an early bird to get back so soon in the morning," he said, "an' your work half done, too, before breakfast."

"I got a lift most of the way out," I answered. "I caught a milk wagon coming this way."

"You're always lucky. Now, if that had been me I'd tramped all the way back—never met a soul unless it was somebody to hold me up."

"Hold you up!" I said disdainfully. "A man of your size and age afraid of being held up by highwaymen!"

"I never have been, but there are so many burglaries goin' on roun' here that it makes me feel energitize when I'm out on the road after dark."

"I hadn't heard of many robberies," I replied; "none except that of the Stetson mansion the day before Mr. Goddard engaged me."

"Well, you haven't heard everything then. That was the fifth or sixth in four weeks, an' they have had four more houses entered since then."

This was genuine news to me, and I was interested. John continued:

"They are slick ones, too, for they never leave any trace behind them. Them detectives from the city don't seem to be able to do anything. They must come from the city over night an' get back again afore mornin'. But they can't find any of the stolen goods—not in any of the pawnshops. It's a fine mystery to be a-hangin' over the place. You can't tell which house will be robbed next. The servants are all talkin' about lovin', an' nobody feels safe. I don't sayin' that I'm not glad that I'm livin' out here over the barn instead of in the house. They never bother the barn, an' I suppose night?" I said.

"I ain't employed for that," John replied evasively, shifting his eyes from object to object. "I've got a wife an' child to look after, an' them ain't no reason why I should get killed to save my master a few dollars."

"No? Well, I'd go as soon as I found he was in trouble."

"Well, you haven't anybody dependent upon you," he answered.

"That's true," I added: "you say most of the houses around here have been entered in the last month or two. Has Mr. Goddard's been robbed?"

"No; his an' Dr. Squires' are 'bout the only ones that haven't been robbed."

"That's curious," I reflected aloud.

"Not at all. We expect the robbers any night now, an' that's why the servants all threaten to leave. The robbers wouldn't take the trouble to break into Dr. Squires', for there ain't nothin' in that old place to take. He's too poor to have anything valuable aroun'."

Breakfast at this juncture interrupted John's talk, and I had no chance to resume it that morning. But I shook over the subject and was recalled to me rather forcibly by the appearance of Mr. Goddard. He looked troubled and disturbed. He came into the barn dressed in his ordinary morning suit and called:

"John, I've got to make some change here," he said. "My butler has become frightened over the recent robberies and won't stay, and the rest of the servants are up in arms too. They all talk of leaving. I must have some unmercenary help, and you are afraid of every little sound and ready to jump at his own shadow. Now the question is, Who shall I install there?"

He looked significantly from John to me.

"I have a family to look after," John began to stammer, and as he spoke a look of unmistakable scorn came into Goddard's face.

I did not let him finish, for I knew that he would only get himself into deeper trouble by disgracing his servant-ice. As a good, faithful coachman and kindly husband John was a success, but as a man of courage he was a total failure.

"If you have no objections, sir, I would like to offer myself as one willing to live in the house and look after the things," I said modestly. "I don't think you will find me afraid of anything or anybody that may attempt to enter your house."

I could not help noticing a pleased expression on his face, although at first I expected he would resent my interference. He looked me over sometimes erroneous, saying that "there's honor even among thieves." Or in spite of what he knew about me he was willing to trust me. There was certainly a very peculiar relationship springing up between us.

"Thank you, William," he answered. "The change will be agreeable to me. You will have quite a responsible position, and I will trust you much to your honesty and trust until this terrible scare passes away. It seems strange that the gang of thieves can not be caught. If there are a few could enable myself as a reward just to break them up, for they are making the life of our neighbors miserable out here."

"Do you think that there is a gang of them?" I asked boldly.

The matter of feed is of tremendous importance to the farmer. Wrong feeding is loss. Right feeding is profit.

THERE seems to a general demand for Frank Day as president of the editorial association. If Frank wants it there is notapt to be serious objection from any quarter. No country editor in the state is more popular or deserving.

IT seems to be a hopeless task to reconcile Grover Clevalandand William J. Bryan to each other. The latest barrier to a reconciliation is the refusal of the latter to attend a Democratic banquet to which the former has accepted an invitation.

ANOTHER municipal scandal has been unearthed at Minneapolis. It is alleged that $500,000 has mysteriously disappeared from the treasury. It is generally believed that there is something wrong with the present system of governing cities.

A BILL to extend the Torrens system of land transfers to the entire state is before the legislature and will probably pass. This plan is much more economical than the present system, and has already been adopted in many of the eastern states.

PROFESSOR KOCH, the noted bacteriologist, declares that typhoid fever can be stamped out through proper treatment of each case. He urges that every case of typhoid fever be as strictly isolated as a case of cholera, and by such isolation the disease could be wholly exterminated.

THE local Republican organ is just now publishing column-long editorials in defense of Wall Street. And, yet, it is only a few brief moons since the same editor was charging all of the nation's woes to the baneful influence of the money power. How quickly a little Republican leaven leavens the whole loaf!

"GAS" ANNEKIS has withdrawn from the senatorial contest in Delaware, but the opponents of the millionaire continue to look upon his actions with suspicion. Addicks is said to have sent half a million in the six-year effort to break into the senate, and so far he has had poor returns from the investment.

SUPERINTENDENT OLSON recommends the employment of older teachers in the state. Mr. Olson should remember that the school ma'ams have the privilege of returning their own age statements, and who ever heard of a school ma'am being more than twenty-five, even though she may have taught for twenty years?

THE Warren Register insists that removal of the tariff does not decrease the price of commodities and cites the duty on coal to prove it. Without entering into a discussion of the question we would like to ask Bro. Stevens what the tariff is for if not to increase the price? If the tariff law is of no force or effect why not repeal it?

IT is claimed that the reciprocity treaty between Cuba and the United States will raise a serious difference of opinion between this country and Great Britian as regards the sugar bounties. England fears that the abolition of these duties will be nullified by the reciprocity treaty and all the advantages it has secured in this way be sacrificed.

THE members of the Indiana coal trust seem to be firmly in the clutches of the law, and people generally will be interested in the process of making them pay the penalty for conspiracy against helpless consumers. The example of severe punishment, if the Hoosier coal dealers are found guilty, would be beneficialall over the United States.

As Senator Clapp has succeeded in getting the Red Lake Indian bill tacked on the appropriations bill it is considered a certainty that this measure will pass both houses of congress before adjournment March 4. While the provisions of the bill are not as liberal to homeseekers as they might be, still it is an excellent opportunity for good farmers to get hold of a choice quarter at a low price and on easy payments, and ought to bring a large colony of actual settlers into the northern and eastern portions of Red Lake county.

THE editor of the Gazette is still very much alarmed lest his reputation as "an original Steenerson man" suffer by reason of misrepresentation on the part of THE COURIER. Since acknowledgment of the Gazette's herculean efforts in Hallor's behalf seems to be wanted in order to keep the record straight, we are pleased to state that since the morning of September 17 to all outward appearances the Gazette has supported Mr. Steenerson with an unswerving loyalty that would do credit to a true Republican. On the previous day the Gazette editor was perniciously active in behalf of Andrew Grindeland's illstarred candidacy, and still earlier in the campaign he was busily engaged in picking the winner—which he didn't do. We trust this explanation will clarify the atmosphere and satisfy the skeptical of our brother's disinterested service in behalf of Congressman Steenerson.

A Grasshopper Exterminator.

The department of agriculture claims to have discovered something that is warranted to exterminate a plague of locusts or grass hoppers. The discovery is not in the experimental stage, but is the result of several years of patient investigation. The next time a grasshopper plague prevails in any section of the United States, tubes of gelantine containing the germs will be sent to the farmers in the afflicted districts and by the inoculation of a few insects, the entire swarm will be destroyed.

Suggestive Names.

The Cockscomb mountains of British Honduras, to some extent an unknown part of the famous Mahogany coast, are undergoing a process of christening which will identify them for all times with the begining of the twentieth century. One range has just been named the Queen Alexandra mountains, another range takes the name of the Prince of Wales, and a 4,000 foot peak has been named Mount Joseph Chamberlain.

Meats Cured.

Persons wishing hams and bacon cured for summer use, or pork salted should call on the undersigned. I guarantee my work. A. Picbe, the butcher, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Some Words.

According to the late Richard A. Proctor, says the London Chronicle, the phrase "I guess," to English ears so ridiculous, is really identical with the old expression, "I wis," meaning "I know." The word "guess" has changed its meaning entirely in England, but has partly preserved it in America, where of course the native says "I guess" when he is more or less in a state of certainty. There are many other examples of words that have played fast and loose with "g" and "w," such as "guardian" and "ward," "guard" and "ward," "gulcher" and "wicker."

A Conscience Jar.

"Did you ever stop to think, my love," said Mr. Meawber, gazing at his plate of lobster salad, "that the things we love most in this life are the very things that never agree with us?"

"Pray you be so kind, Meawber," said Mrs. Meawber, straightening up, "as to tell me whether you are speaking of the salad or of me, sir?"

Want Children Taught Irish.

Some of the Sruta Dublin guardians are anxious that the children under their care should be taught Irish.

A Building for the Smiths.

Representatives of the Smith family have applied for space for a building at the World's Fair at St. Louis, to be the headquarters of the members of that great family when visiting the exposition. Some genius has calculated that there are 14,000,000 Smiths in the world.

New British Coaling Station.

Sierra Leone is to be a British coaling station, and it is intended permanently to attach a gunboat and a cruiser to it. The fortress at Sierra Leone has for some time past been strengthened by the erection of some of the most modern guns of heavy caliber.

Justice in Congo Free State.

For causing a native to be executed before an appeal on his sentence had been heard the public prosecutor of the Congo Free State has been imprisoned. When the appeal was heard the sentence was reduced to one of ten years' hard labor.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Brady and Verne Healy.

Washington's birthday falls on Sunday this year.

Many of the high school pupils took the teachers' examination last Friday and Saturday.

The Juniors gavea social Wednesday evening and invited everyone to come and have a good time.

Today is Lincoln's birthday, and the high school pupils are again wondering if there is to be school.

Miss Lulu Fletcher taught Miss Martin's room last Friday while the latter took the teachers' examination.

We notice that nearly all of the high school pupils are affected with bad colds this week. We wonder if it is an outgrowth of the coal strike.

Next Friday occurs the final test in higher algebra. After the returns come in the Seniors will know if there is still a hope for graduation this year.

The Junior class has had a meeting and elected Grey de honor. It is bound to inspire higher ideals.

One of our foot ball cripples has of late been complaining of his sore leg. We do not understand it at first, but the fact of the case is that he is one of the debaters on the negative side of the coming foot ball debate.

The chemistry class had an experiment with NH3 this week. Theexperiment consisted of collecting some NH4 gas in a bottle and then exposing it on the surface of some red litmus. The litmus rose through the glass and turned blue.

One of the high school boys has just experieced a 812 lesson in careless snowballing. A poorly-directed missle hit a glass sign in front of one of the saloons. Little boys who cannot hit the mark should be advised not to throw snowballs on the street.

Some of the seniors seem to have a very good opinion of themselves. One of the boys worked at an example in higher algebra for about half an hour and not being able to get the required answer gravely informed his teacher that the problem could not be solved.

The Athenian program has been postponed until Friday, Feb. 13. It was to have been given last Friday, but on account of examinations there was no school. This gives them one more week to prepare, so we may expect a good program. Everybody is invited to attend.

A Problem in Cows.

According to the Harvey News a Marion county woman died recently and left an estate of seventeen cows. To the eldest son she bequeathed one-half, to her second son one-third, and to her youngest son one-ninthof the estate. The executors were sorely perplexed as to how todivide the cows. At last some one suggested that they borrow a cow from a neighbor. This was done and the estate was thus made 18 cows. The first son received his one-half, or nine, the second son one-third, or six, the third son one-ninth, or two, making seventeen cows in all. The neighbor's cow was then returned with thanks.

Bad Coughs

"I had a bad cough for six weeks and could find no relief until I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Only one-fourth of the bottle cured me."

L. Hawa, Newington, Ont.

Neglected colds always lead to something serious. They run into chronic bronchitis, pneumonia, asthma, or consumption.

Don't wait, but take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral just as soon as your cough begins. A few doses will cure you then.

Three sizes: 25c., 50c., $1. All druggists.

Consult your doctor. If he says take it, then do as he says. If he tells you not to take it, then don't take it. He knows, and we will be satisfied if you do.

SUCCESS AND HOW TO WIN IT IN LIFE'S GREAT BATTLE

By JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., Principal Heir to the Rockefeller Millions

IT is the ambition of every one to strive to succeed in some walk of life. Some seek wealth, others social prominence, and somo strive for it in the business or professional walks of life. We all have ambition, and it is well, but many who strike out to achieve the realization of their ambition are prone to forget others and proceed along selfish lines. GIVE SOMETHING TO OTHERS THAT WILL TEND TO MAKE THEM HAPPY. We should remember that in seeking our goal there is a duty we owe ourselves as well as others, and that is to make ourselves as well as others happy, so that our lives will not be failures. We can make ourselves happy by making others happy.

There is a general opinion that wealth produces happiness.

WEALTH ALONE CANNOT PRODUCE COMPLETE HAPPINESS.

I do not care who the man is or how much worldly success he has achieved, if he has secured his success along selfish lines he is not entirely happy. To secure genuine success one must make his life a useful one to others as well as to himself.

True success—and every man should appreciate it—is not wealth, but the influence for good one extends over others. The man who passes away leaving a good influence has won far greater success than the rich man who lives only to himself.

AS THE RIPPLES CAUSED BY A PASSING STEAMER ON A LAKE EXTEND FARTHER AND FARTHER UNTIL THEY REACH THE SHORES, SO SHOULD THE INFLUENCE OF EACH ONE'S LIFE OVER OTHERS EXTEND. THAT IS SUCCESS.

What a contrast there is in the view of success in life as defined by Christ and the world's estimation of success in the present time! OUR IDEA OF SUCCESS IS WRONG. The statesman who achieves glory, the lawyer who wins honors, the scientist who distinguishes himself by wondrous discoveries—all these deserve the unstinted praise of their fellow men and are indeed successful men. That is, however, the narrow view of success.

THE LESSON OF CHRIST SHOWS THAT THE HIGHER SUCCESS ON EARTH IS ESSENTIALLY LINKED WITH MARTYRDOM, SELF SACRIFICE, ALTRUISM.

The Modern Brotherhood lodge held a reception Monday evening in honor of Messrs. and Meshmes. I. Lemieux and M. Patnode. A large crowd was present and a most enjoyable time was had.

Mrs. Conrad Lajambe entertained a party of lady friends at an afternoon tea last Saturday. Progressive euchs was played and dainty refreshments were served. A most enjoyable time is reported.

The first installment of an interesting story entitled "Professional Brethren" appears in this issue. It is of absorbing interest, and if our readers will read the opening chapters they will want all of it.

D. E. Greeley, of Minneapolis, was here last Friday to adjust the loss on the harness stock of Remick & Brunelle in the fire of two weeks ago. The loss was placed at $700 and settlement made for that amount.

While at St. Paul this week William Schwalen will purchase the spring line of furniture for the Anderson & Schwalen emporium. During the coming year this firm expects to carry a larger line than ever before.

Scandinavian Lutheran services will be held at the city hall next Sunday morning at 10:30. Rev. I. Aastad, of Thief River Falls, will be in charge of the meeting. All Scandinavians are cordially invited to attend.

The Junior class of the high school gave an "eatable social" at the K. P. hall last evening. A good crowd was present and a pleasant time had. The proceeds will be used to defray the expenses of the Junior reception later in the season.

Joseph and Michael Parenteau arrived Saturday from Canada, and will make their home with relatives in Terrebonne. The former is an experienced cheese and buttermaker and will doubtless secure employment in this vicinity.

C. T. Kaukel, the Terrebonne miller, was in town Saturday and took the evening train for Fertile. Mr. Kaukel intends taking a trip to the coast in a short time, in hopes of benefiting his health, which has been very poorly of late.

There is talk of several new brick blocks in the spring. At present every business building in town is occupied, and quite a number of merchants need additional room to accommodate the larger stocks made necessary by an increased volume of business.

William Schwalen will go to Minneapolis next week to attend the state meeting of embalmers. He will be gone all of next week, spending part of the time with Mrs. Schwalen's people at Houlton, Wis. Mrs. Schwalen will return home with him.

Ernest Buse returned home Saturday from an extended visit at the home of his daughter in Vancouver, British Columbia. Mr. Buse traveled over a great amount of territory during his absence, having visited many of the important cities of the great west.

The Lady Foresters will give a basket social at the Forester hall on Wednesday evening, February 18. Music and speaking will constitute the literary program. Each lady is expected to bring a basket well filled for supper for two. Everybody cordially invited.

Jno. Ralph, who has been very sick the past two weeks with heart disease at the home of his brother-in-law, Chas. N. Bourdon, is considerably improved this week. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph were here from Nepawa, Canada, visiting when Mr. Ralph was taken sick.

H. N. Johnson left yesterday for Chanhassi, Minn., where he will visit for about two weeks with his parents and other relatives. Mr. Johnson denies the soft impeachment that Mrs. Johnson will accompany him home, but admits that there are hopes for the future.

V. E. Melberg and wife arrived last Thursday from Boswell, Ind., and will make their home in Red Lake Falls, Mr. Melberg having secured a position in S. A. Swanson's land and loan office. They expect to go to housekeeping as soon as rooms can be secured.

J. B. Armstrong expects to leave next Saturday for St. Paul and Minneapolis to make spring purchases for the Surprise store. This popular trading place will carry a larger stock than ever this season, and clothing buyers should not fail to investigate the bargains to be offered.

Nicholas Toban, of Rippey, Iowa, has rented the old Mikkelsen farm near town and will move his family here March 1. Mr. Toban recently purchased 200 acres of railroad land east of town through the Gonigum agency, and expects ultimately to make improvements and move on the same.

The Big Store is advertising a special cloak and suit sale for next Tuesday, February 17. On the same day—TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17—we will give a.....

FAMINE RELIEF SALE!

for the relief of the poor, famine-stricken people of Sweden and Finland. TEN PER CENT. of our cash sales will be sent to the State Relief Committee. Let all who sympathize with these poor unfortunates patronize this sale, and thereby add their little mite to a good cause.

Don't Forget the Date, Tuesday, Feb'y 17th.

THE BIG STORE, Theo. LaBissoniere, Proprietor.

The Garnes Woodmen will hold a dance at their hall on Friday evening, February 20. Music will be furnished by the Red Lake Falls orchestra and an oyster supper served at the home of H. C. Manders. All are cordially invited. The managers of the affair are G. G. Sall, F. E. Sullivan and C. D. Hall.

The concert and ball given by the Red Lake Falls band at St. Hilaire Tuesday evening, was largely attended and otherwise a success. The program was a good one and the people of the Salutly city were liberal with their applause and praise of the work of the band. The proceeds were about $38.

T. G. Brunello this week purchased the interest of his partner, J. E. Remick, in the harness business, and moved from the old quarters to the Boughton building. Mr. Brunelle will put in a complete new stock of goods and will have an up-to-date harness shop. Adam Schmitz will work for him for the present.

The G. N. and N. P. have promulgated an order which went into effect February 1, giving parties to whom goods are consigned forty-eight hours in which to unload the same, instead of twenty-four, and will reduce demurrage charges to one dollar for each twenty-four hours thereafter, instead of two, as before.

One of the largest sales of real estate ever made in northern Minnesota is reported from St. Hilaire this week, the Julius Pleth agency being the broker in a deal involving eighteen sections of land in Red Lake and Beltrami counties. The consideration is said to be $101,750 and the purchaser is Andrew Johnson, an Illinois capitalist.

The board of appraisers appointed by Governor Van Sant to appraise the value of the public buildings of Polk county met yesterday and agreed upon a valuation of $81,000. This will form a basis of settlement between Polk and Columbia counties. The board consisted of Dr. N. M. Watson of Red Lake Falls, L. H. Bailey of Bemidji and J. S. Eastman of Warren.

A meeting of teachers was held at Thief River Falls on Saturday last and the Red Lake and Eastern Marshall County Teachers' Association was organized and the officers elected as follows: President, Adolph Thompson, Wylie; vice-president, Geo. Johnson, Liner; 2nd vice-president, Miss Olga Thompson, Wylie; secretary and treasurer, Miss Helen McGrath, Thief River Falls.

Ed L. Healy has on exhibition at his office a bridle made by an inmate of the Montana penitentiary that is attracting considerable attention. It is made entirely of rawhide and horse hairs of variegated colors, and the ingenuity displayed in the workmanship is simply marvelous. The bridle is valued at $35, and Mr. Healy is thinking of sending it to President Roosevelt with his compliments.

The next band concert will be given at the Metropolitan on Monday evening, February 23. The concert will last until 10:30, after which the full orchestra will furnish music for dancing as long as the ticket-holders desire. As this will be the last dance before Lent it is expected that a large crowd will take advantage of the occasion. The program for the concert will be printed next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Thomas welcomed the arrival of a sweet little bunch of femininity at their home Friday morning. Mother and child are doing nicely, and Oscar—well, you ought to see him in order to grasp the full significance of the event. His usual placid smile is extended in all directions and the happiness of a boy with a pair of new red-topped boots isn't a patchin' alongside of Oscar's joy.

The adverse criticism of the Thief River Falls council on account of the proposition to pay Mayor Kratka's expenses at Washington by voting a salary for the mayor's assistant is been circumvented by a plan d ed by Wiley Tindolph, whereby the expense of maintaining the Washington lobby will be borne by private subscription. About $700 has already been pledged, and it is thought the amount can easily be increased to $1,200.

Warden Wolfer announces that the price of twine agreed upon by the board of control will be as follows during the coming year, being considerably below last year's prices and much less than the trust prices: Standard, 600 feet to the pound, 6½c; sisal, the same; standard mixed, 550 feet to the pound, 8½c; manila, 600 feet to the pound, 10½c; pure manila, 550 feet to the pound, 11½c. The output will be 7,000,000 pounds of twine from the Minnesota penitentiary.

State teachers' examinations were held at Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls last Friday and Saturday. County Superintendent Jeffers conducted the examinations at this place and Prof. J. A. Wilson was in charge at the Upper Falls. Altogether 63 applicants were on hand, three for first grade, 40 for second grade and the remainder for third grade certificates. The first and second grade papers must be sent to the state superintendent for marking and the result will not be known for several weeks.

A class of twenty of the best young men of the city met at the town hall last Thursday and perfected a band organization by electing Sam Hunt president and Ned Taylor secretary. Prof. Smith gave an instructive talk on the a b c's of music and also told them what would be necessary to do in order to make a good band. For the present they will use their instruments of the City band, but it is their intention to procure new ones within a short time. Under the proficient tutelage of Prof. Smith these "new recruits" may bootjoes ed to shortly occupy places of importance in our excellent band organization.

Notice!

We will have in Red Lake Falls the first week in February fifty head of good Montana Broncbos, ranging in price from $20 to $100.

SEIFF & GREEN, RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

Head

Hurt So Badly Was Nearly Crazy.

Had no Sleep—Could Hardly Lie Down.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Permanently Cured Me.

"A year ago I suffered from extreme nervous stomach trouble. I was afraid of everything, could not hear to hear singing or music and reading or hearing of a death nearly brought on my own. I could not sleep or hardly lie down, the back of my head hurt me so badly I nearly went crazy. My shoulders hurt and the least thing I did would bring on an attack of extreme nervousness. There were times when I could not bear to be in the house, was so nervous I was afraid I would lose my mind. I was in despair until I began to take Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. I have taken in all twelve bottles and consider myself permanently cured. My home doctor has since remarked on my healthy appearance and said he wished he could say his medicine helped me. He knows it was Dr. Miles' Nervine. We are never without the Anti-Pain Pills and consider them excellent for headache. I can recommend my medicine for Mrs. Nervine, because in addition to my own case my daughter, who was out of school for a long time because of St. Vitus' dance, was completely cured by eight bottles. She is now feeling fine and going to school every day. We thank you for your kindness and will never stop singing the praises of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine."—Mrs. E. Ring, Dallas, O.

THE NONUNION WORKER

"For every twenty union men there are eighty nonunion men. Laboring men may hate capitalists, but labor's hatred for labor burns like a flame, eats like nitric acid, is malignant beyond all description."

"The time has come for union men to throw away their guns and clubs and to use their noble ideas of union for mutual betterment, for unity of action, for the diffusion of intelligence."

By Rev. Dr. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS of Brooklyn

EVERY SENSIBLE MAN BELIEVES IN CAPITAL AND ITS HONEST COMBINATION, AND EVERY SENSIBLE MAN BELIEVES IN NOT SIMPLY THE RIGHT OF LABOR TO ORGANIZE, BUT ITS DUTY IN THE INTEREST OF SELF DEFENSE AGAINST OPPRESSIVE EMPLOYERS.

And the history of trades unionism, its gain in wages, the lessening of the hours of labor, its gains in intelligence and the character of many of its leaders have justified and vindicated the labor movement. But the nonunion men, who represent 80 per cent of the trades, whose sons are forbidden the right to become apprentices and whose wrongs are above all other wrongs whatsoever, justify a plea.

How it stirs wonder that it is necessary to justify the nonunion man's right to refuse to join a union. MEN DIFFER ON EVERYTHING ELSE. WHY MAY THEY NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO DIFFER AS TO ORGANIZED LABOR?

The union man has a right to decide how many hours he will work and at what wage he will work.

THE NONUNION MAN HAS A RIGHT TO DELIBERATELY CONSIDER THE REASONS FOR THE UNION AND ALSO TO REFUSE TO JOIN IT IN HIS OWN HAPPINESS AND WELFARE.

For every twenty union men and their families there are eighty nonunion men with their families. These laboring men may hate capitalists, BUT LABOR'S HATRED FOR LABOR BURNS LIKE A FLAME, EATS LIKE NITRIC ACID, is malignant beyond all description.

Pitiful is the condition of the nonunion men in the anthracite region. In that region there are 25,000 men who have been working, or trying to work. Now the rich operators have deserted them. Yet these nonunion men are chiefly American. They have families, they have homes. They have something at stake. They wanted to work; they may have been foolish and mistaken, but they had a right to live.

If the union men should say, "We do honest work, we ask an honest wage, we want our share of the products of our labor, and we appeal to the sense of justice and fair play in our fellows; we will not kill nor permit killing; we forswear the club and the firehrand and the boycott; we stand on the constitution and appeal to the laws of the land," from that hour all nonunion men would become union men as well as patriots and citizens. And public opinion would make labor invincible.

THE TIME HAS COME FOR UNION MEN TO THROW AWAY THEIR GUNS AND CLUBS ANO TO USE THEIR NOBLE IDEAS OF UNION FOR MUTUAL BETTERMENT, FOR UNITY OF ACTION, FOR THE DIFFUSION OF INTELLIGENCE.

RESTORE THE CANTEEN TO THE ARMY

By Major General HENRY CLARK CORBIN

THE restoration of the post exchange, or army canteen, as it existed prior to the passage of the act of Feb. 2, 1902, prohibiting tha sale of beer, is desired aad urged by a great majority of officers and man and hy nons more than those of pronounced temperance views. NUMEROUS REPORTS CONFIRM THE BELIEF HELD BY ARMY OFFICERS THAT THE OLD EXCHANGE CONTRIBUTED TO THE SOBRIETY, HEALTH AND CONTENTMENT OF THE MEN.

THE INCREASE IN DESERTIONS AND OF TRIALS FOR INFRACTIONS OF DISCIPLINE IS BY THE BEST INFORMED ATTRIBUTED TO THE ABOLITION OF THE FORMER PRIVILEGE OF THE EXCHANGE.

THE ENGLISH INVASION OF THE UNITED STATES

By MARTIN HARVEY, English Actor

WHY ARE SO MANY OF THE YOUNGER AND LESSER KNOWN ENGLISH ACTORS CROSSING THE WATER? Because conditions are more propitious than they have been is perhaps tha best answer. Methods of English actors and English plays are becoming better known and better appreciated. Then, too, American audiences are so much more responsive than English theater goers that it is a pleasure and an inspiration to act here.

I think, however, that ENGLAND IS GIVING NO MORE THAN SHE IS TAKING. Never before have there been so many American companies playing in London, and never before have they met the support and approval they are now receiving. The explanation of this, to my mind, is found in the growth of the theater going public of England and its rapidly increasing familiarity with American affairs and American people.

A FEW YEARS AGO ENGLISH NEWSPAPERS PAID LITTLE ATTENTION TO AMERICAN NEWS.

It was condensed into short paragraphs and all hut buried in the mass of European news. NOW EVEN THE PROVINCIAL PAPERS PRINT AN AMERICAN LETTER REGULARLY, with the result that interest in American matters has been greatly stimulated.

Therefore it might be said that the popularity of the American actor in England is owing largely to the evolution of the English newspaper. As a result of this evolution the English people have grown broader and more catholic.

THE QUEEN OF SPICES

CINNAMON, DELICIOUS AND SUGARY, AROMATIC AND PUNGENT.

The Discovery of Its Valuable Properties Antedates Recorded History. Something of Its Uses and the Way in Which It Is Produced.

Cinnamon is in itself unquestionably the most delicious of all spices, being sugary as well as aromatic and pungent. Many thousands of pounds are consumed annually in every civilized country, and it is also highly appreciated by even semicivilized and barbarous nations where culinary art and medicine have as yet made little progress.

Its uses in sweet cookery are innumerable. There are very few fruits which are not improved in preserves, pickles and pastries by the addition of more or less of this delicate bark. It is an essential favorite in all spice cakes and in many varieties of pies and puddings. In chocolate confectionery, candies, cordials and liqueurs cinnamon contributes an incomparable flavor.

Its medicinal value is well known as an antispasmodic and carminative and tonic. Its use is recommended as a preventive and remedy for cholera, and in seasons when stomach troubles prevail cinnamon drops are recommended as the most wholesome form of candy for children.

The discovery of the valuable properties of cinnamon antedates recorded history, as it is mentioned in the Bible, in the book of Exodus, as one of the spices of the sacred oil with which the priests were anointed. So highly was the sweet bark esteemed by the ancients that even a small piece was considered a fit gift for a king. It is always mentioned as an especially choice substance by Greek writers previous to the Christian era. It is said that the Arab traders, who first brought it to Egypt and western Asia, surrounded its history and production with special tales of mystery and magic.

The cinnamon-tree is a member of the laurel family, which in the tropics is represented by a large number of aromatic and medicinal trees and shrubs.

There are several closely allied cinnamon trees, but the finest bark is procured from a species native to the island of Ceylon, distinguished by botanists as Cinnamomum zeylanicum. In a state of nature this grows to be a tree from twenty to thirty feet in height, with rather large, oval, entire margined leaves and yellowish flowers succeeded by small, brown drupes resembling acorns in shape. The grayish brown bark is internally of an orange color, which changes upon drying to the characteristic brown which is the recognized name of a particular shade. Almost every part of the tree yields some choice substance and is especially rich in oil. The roots yield camphor and the leaves an oil resembling the oil of cloves and often substituted for it, while from the fruit a substance called cinnamon suet is manufactured, which is highly fragrant and from which in former times candles for the exclusive use of the king were made.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century, while England was for a time in possession of the spice islands, cinnamon plants were among the choice products that were imported into various other tropical regions, including the West Indies, where in Cuba and several other islands it has become a considerable article of commerce. Under cultivation it is not allowed to grow into a tree, as the richest bark is taken from shoots of from two to four years' growth. The young tree is, therefore, cut and shoots from the root are encouraged to grow. The majority of these are cut when about ten feet in height and the bark is detached in ten or twelve inch lengths. After lying in bundles for a few days the bark is scraped by hand, both outside and in, until reduced to a thin sheet. These sheets are then made up into compositions "quills" by placing the narrower and shorter pieces inside and rolling tightly, forming fragments, which after further drying are made into bundles weighing about eighty pounds and wrapped for shipping. Grocers divide, assort and very neatly combine portions of these quills into small packets for the convenience of their customers.

The oil of cinnamon is made by grinding the coarser pieces of the bark and soaking them for two or three days in sea water, followed by the process of distilling. Two oils, one lighter and the other heavier than water, are the product, both possessing similar properties. The color varies from cherry red to pale yellow, the latter being preferred by most purchasers.

The work of distilling is light, and an oil equal to the best Ceylonese is now produced in England and various other localities in Cuba and other West India islands.

As cinnamon commands a good price and its uses are continually multiplying, there is every inducement for extending the area of its cultivation, both in the eastern and western hemispheres.—St. Louis Republic.

A Crisis Not Half Way.

There were strict orders in the Pitt regiment regarding looting; and one day a lieutenant's suspicions were aroused by a private whom he saw peering eagerly under the piazza of a house on the outskirts of Maulin, writes Dixie Wolcott in Harper's Magazine.

"What are you doing there?" he demanded in his gruffest tones.

"Why, sir," said the soldier, sainting, "I'm only trying to catch a chicken which I've just bought."

Lieutenant K. stooped and caught sight of a fine pair of fowls.

"There are two chickens under there," he exclaimed excitedly. "I bought the other one. Catch 'em both."

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

IT is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of current magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

HIS BULGARIAN SETTER.

The Dog That Red Gallagher Sold to Zuckermeister.

The Williamsburg Hatter Would Like to Find Red and a Mr. Devere, Who Wanted to Buy a Bulgarian Setter.

HERR ZUCKERMEISTER, who has a hat store in Pickleville, Williamsburgh, is looking for a young man, by name Red Gallagher. The little German hatter is not inserting advertisements in the newspapers, nor has he asked the police to send out a general alarm for him, man, but should he ever meet him the grand jury will have a homicide complaint to answer.

Red Gallagher has an unenviable reputation in Pickleville. He is a husky, hatless young fellow, with a freckled face and a shock of red hair that looks like a door mat. His specialty is robbing the clothesline of back yards at night; but there is nothing he would stop at, even to scraping the paint sign from the window of a Chinese laundry bent for the sake of stealing something. Red was known to Herr Zuckermeister only in a general way, that is, the little German did not know that he had a record and picture in the rogues' gallery. The record ends something like this:

No. 1,573, James Gallagher, alias Red, 22 years old in 1899, is five feet nine inches tall, slim built, has gray eyes and red hair, freckled face, scar on chin and letters "J. G." tattooed on right forearm. Gallagher is an all-around sneak thief and record story man. He served two terms in the penitentiary for burglary, and was convicted in 1900 for assault and robbery and sentenced to three years in state prison.

Zuckermeister knew him only by sight, and from hearing his name mentioned in the saloons. On one fine spring day recently the little German hatter was sunning himself in the doorway of his store when Red sauntered along leading a dog almost as long and lanky as himself, and with hair of a similar color. He walked right into Zuckermeister's store, greatly to the latter's surprise, and, in a cheery tone, exclaimed:

"Hello, Zuck. I wanter git a hat do latest style, an' one of dee best yer got —see?"

Now, Zuckermeister had never spoken to Red, but overlooked the familiarity of this greeting in his excitement. He took several hats out and laid them on the counter.

"I got a hat here once before, an' it fit me face like a fiddle, but I bought this one at another Dutchman's, an' I don't like it for a cent—see?" said Red, tying his dog to a leg of the counter.

Zuckermeister only smiled and handed Red a derby. Red tried several, and finally decided on one which was marked $1.50, but which Zuckermeister let go at $1.25. Red pulled out a two-dollar bill, paid for the hat, and in the meanwhile conversed with the hatter.

"Say, what d'yer t'ink of dat dog, Zucker?" asked Red.

"Oh, he looks pooty good. Vat kind of a tog it is?"

"He's a new breed. Dey calls 'em Bulgarian setter, cross between a Gordon and Irish setter. Dis one took a first prize at de dog show, an' I'm takin' him down ter have him trimmed for another show. I wouldn't sell him for less than $25."

"He must be a good tog," remarked Zuckermeister.

"Yer kin betcher last colloper dat he is. Say, I'm goin' ter have him here for an hour or so while I goes down an' wets me new topper wid de gang. Will you take care of him?"

"Do be bite?" asked the latter, glancing at the lean chops of the brute.

"Bite!" exclaimed Red, in disgust. "Why, dat dog is a thoroughbred. Why, he's trained so fine that he wouldn't bite a spring broiler if yer shoved it at him, so don't be afraid of nuttin' like dat."

"Well, I keep him," said the hatter, resignedly.

"Take good care of him now, will yer?" was Red's parting remark, as he strolled out with a new derby.

The little hatter gazed curiously at the Bulgarian setter, and even ventured near enough to stroke him. He was engaged in doing this when a prosperous looking individual with plenty of jewelry dashed in.

"How are you," exclaimed the new customer, in a hearty tone, as he looked Zuckermeister from head to foot. Without waiting for a reply he continued: "I want to get a silk hat. Have you got any good ones?"

"Oh, yes. How much do you want to pay?"

"Hang the expense! Trot out the best you got."

The hatter, flustered somewhat by the brusqueness of his customer, went to the show window and handed out the best he had.

"I haven't got much time, but I suppose—why, hello! Say, that dog is a Bulgarian setter. I didn't notice him before. Where did you get him?"

"Oh, I had him here for a customer."

"You have? Well, he's a prize beauty. What do you want for him?"

"I am not selling him."

"Well, I thought you said you had him for a customer. I'll give you $50 for him."

"I didn't think he was so much vorth," said the hatter.

"You didn't?" vehemently exclaimed the customer; "why, just say the word and I'll strip a $50 wrapper from my roll and take the dog."

Herr Zuckermeister smiled, and, with a funny little twinkle in his eye, said:

"Vell, I hat to ask mein frau about it. If you come round in a hour or two maybe I sell him."

"All right. I'd like to get that dog very much. He's a valuable animal and a fine specimen of his breed," said the sporty customer.

Keeping up a running fire of comments about the dog's fine points the sporty customer turned his attention to the ostensible object of his visit, the purchase of a silk hat. He finally selected one for $6, and pulling out a roll of bills laid down $1 with a card bearing the name "Richard E. Devere." Then he said:

"Just keep that for deposit, and I'll come back at five o'clock for the hat and the dog. If you want to sell them."

Mr. Devere hastened out, and Zuckermeister stared after him. The sporty customer had made quite an impression on the little German hatter. Half an hour afterward Red Gallagher came sloping down the street with his new hat tilted over his right eye and a big cigar tilted up to match it.

"Halloo, Zucker! Say, I'm back for dat pup of mine. He's all right, isn't he?"

"Yes. I guess he's able to eat von square meal," laughed the hatter, as he gazed at the lanky dog.

"He don't need a meal. Dat's his nat-eral conduit. I just fed him before I took him out."

"Do you want to sell him?" asked the hatter, innocently.

"Vell, I'm not stuck on gettin' rid o' him. Vhy?"

"Oh, vell, I don't know. I chust asked you. Maybe I knows somebody who buys him."

"Buys him? Do you know how much he's worth?"

The hatter shrugged his shoulders.

"He's worth every cent of a cool hundred plunks if he's worth a cent."

"But you said you would sell him for $25."

"Well, what if I did?"

"I was thinking that I would like to hat a dog myself, and maybe I gif you $25 for him."

Red appeared to deliberate for some time, but after a few minutes of suspense, said:

"Well, nobody but you could have him for that money. He's dirt cheap at dat."

Zuckermeister hurried to his money drawer and, counting out the amount agreed upon in $1 bills, handed it over. Red tied the dog to the counter again, and with a sigh said:

"I hates ter part wid him. Be sure you'll good take care of him, won't yer?"

"Oh, yes," said the hatter as Red vanished with the $25.

That occurred two weeks ago, and Mr. Devere never turned up. Zuckermeister nearly lost his eyesight looking for him on the afternoon that Red sold the dog, the butcher, who is an expert on dogs, he kept his shop open until nearly midnight he saw no sign of Devere. The next day he called in Stutzenberg, the butcher who is an expert on dogs, to look his bargain over and give his opinion.

"What kind of a dog is it?" asked the hatter, anxiously, after Stutzenberg had examined the brute.

"I don't think it is a dog at all unless you call a 'sooner' a dog."

"What is a sooner?"

"Why, a beast that would sooner eat and sleep than do anything else."

"How much is he worth?" asked Zuckermeister.

"Well, I should say that anybody who paid more than 25 cents for him had bought a gold brick. How much did you give for him?"

Zuckermeister was speechless by this time, and the next moment he had an attack of what Stutzenberg called rabies. He has not been feeling well since, but he thinks he will improve if he catches a sight of Red Gallagher or the mysterious Mr. Devere.—N. Y. Sun.

Low Bridges in Queensland.

The Queensland rivers are subject to severe floods, and low, level bridges, therefore, have been found advisable. The cost of high level bridges is excessive and those of moderate height are very liable to be carried away. The low, level ones are submerged before the logs and driftwood are brought down in considerable quantities, and the dangerous debris passes harmlessly over.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, thus justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next few years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $5,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

A Legacy of the Grip.

Is often a run-down system. Weakness, nervousness, lack of appetite, energy and ambition, with disordered liver and kidneys often follow an attack of this wretched disease. The greatest need then is Electric Bitters, the splendid tonic, blood purifier and regulator of stomach, liver and kidneys. Thousands have proved that they wonderfully strengthen the nerves, build up the system, and restore to health and good spirits after an attack of grip. If suffering, try them. Only 50c. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter.

Saved Her Child's Life.

"In three weeks our chubby little boy was changed by pneumonia almost to a skeleton," writes Mrs. W. Watkins, of Pleasant City, O. "A terrible cough set in, that, in spite of a good doctor's treatment for several weeks, grew worse every day. We then used Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, and our darling was soon smiling and well. We are sure this grand medicine saved his life." Millions know it's the only sure cure for coughs, colds and all lung diseases. W. A. Schreiter guarantees satisfaction. 50c. $1.00. Trial bottles free.

LAMBERT.

Mr. LaBlanche, of Terrebonne, visited the Doucet family today.

Joseph Dault and his two sisters and cousin, Miss Rock, are visitors at Crookston this week.

Rumons have it that we are to have a telephone line between here and McIntosh. A good thing, push it along.

Mrs. Abell and daughter, of Crookston, were visitors at the home of their cousin, Michael Boisvert, last week.

N. Swanson and Abraham Pasquin drove out ten miles east of Winsor yesterday to make a contract to get the telephone poles in place between here and McIntosh before sleighing gets poor.

Alfonse Pasquin, who has been under medical treatment at Crookston for a long time, returned last week very much improved. He suffered the loss of a limb by amputation during his illness.

A Weak Stomach

causes a weak body and invites disease. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cures and strengthens the stomach, and wards off and overcomes disease. J. B. Taylor, a prominent merchant of Chriesman, Tex., says: "I could not eat because of a weak stomach. I lost all strength and run down in weight. All that money could do was done, but all hope of recovery vanished. Hearing of some wonderful cures effected by use of Kodol I concluded to try it. The first bottle benefited me, and after taking four bottles I am fully restored to my usual strength, weight and health." A. L. Reichert.

BADGER.

Eugene Charbonneau, of Crookston, called on friends here last Saturday.

Rodolph Ducharme drove to Red Lake Falls last Wednesday with a load of rock.

Miss Alma Robillard returned to her home at Red Lake Falls last Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Boisvert, of Lambert, called at Adolard Laurent's last Thursday.

Moses and Telesphore Ducharme did some shopping at the county seat last Monday.

Miss Fedora Laurent spent last Sunday at Terrebonne, the guest of Miss Alma Clement.

The ten-year-old son of Eugene Robillard died last Saturday after a two weeks' illness.

Regio Gagnon and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Louis St. Yves, returned last Tuesday from a six weeks visit in Canada.

Damos Lachance and Alfred Pontbriant and wives attended the Pontbriant dance at Red Lake Falls last Tuesday evening.

Francis H. Bole, Pachuca, Mexico, writes: "For years I have used Cole's Carbolisaap and have found nothing else so refreshing for the head. It's a good skin preservative and its perfume is most agreeable." It is purely vegetable and delightfully refreshing. Sold by all druggists.

Messrs. Adelard Laurent, Moses Ducharme, Evangelist and Michael Quesnell, accompanied by their families, visited at the home of J. B. Demarais last Sunday, and a good time is reported.

Mothers Rely On It

Nurses endorse it, children like it and it always cures. Cole's Cough Cure dries up croup of its terrors, conquers the grip and thousands of wonderful cures of coughs, bronchitis, consumption and stubborn lung and throat troubles attest to its merit. COUNTY DADS HOLD SHORT FEBRUARY MEET

Considerable Business of Importance Transacted at the Meeting Held the First of the Week.

The county commissioners met in special session at the auditor's office Monday and held a two days' meeting attending to matters of public import.

The petition of Geo. Bender et al. for a county road in Lambert and Garnes townships was presented, and as the improvement was thought to be needed a committee consisting of Messrs. Demaris, Sutton and Hanson was appointed to attend to the details. The petition asks for an eight-mile road running from the southwest quarter of 36, Lambert, to the northeast quarter of 26, Garnes. The road runs due north and will be of great benefit to the residents of that locality.

The financial statement as prepared by the auditor was approved and ordered published.

The bid of Adam Zeh to furnish seventy-five cords of green poplar wood at $3 per cord was accepted.

The reports of the various county officers were examined and approved.

The bonds of the treasurer in the sum of $75,000 and coroner in the sum of $1000 were approved.

The hearing on the ditch petition of Lambert No. 1 and Lambert and Garnes No. 1 was postponed until March 23.

The auditor was instructed to advertise for bids for ditch bonds in the sum of $75,000, the bids to be sealed and in the auditor's hands not later than March 23, at 2 p. m. One thousand dollars must accompany each bid.

The usual list of bills were allowed, and other matters of minor importance were looked after.

WEALTH OF THE STATE.

State Auditor Iverson Makes Report on State Taxes.

State Auditor Iverson today sent to the legislature an elaborate abstract of the tax lists of all the counties of the state for the year 1902. It is an interesting document, complete in every particular. It shows the assessed value of taxable property by counties, the full amount of money levied by direct taxation upon property in Minnesota for the support of the various public corporations from school district to state.

For the first time the county abstracts filed with the state auditor, show the precise tax rate in the different subdivisions of the county down to school districts. The figures are especially interesting following the work of the state board of equalization last September.

The total value of taxable property in 1902 was $761,760,274, of which $647,654,760 is real, and $114,105,514 personal property. The total taxes levied for all purposes was $18,520,-946.09, to raise which an average levy of 24.3 mills was made. The taxes raised in 1902 exceeded those of 1901 by $2,250,900, yet the levy for 1901 averaged 27.1 mills, nearly 3 mills higher than for 1902, owing to an increase in the taxable valuation of $161,000,000.

The taxes levied are distributed into five groups in the following amounts: State taxes, $2,236,683.22; county taxes, $3,643,923.71; city and village, $5,636,804.49; township, $1,494,655.93; school district, $5,494,-911.25.

The state taxes are apportioned as follows: State revenue fund $761,760; soldiers' relief, $76,179; funding tax, $163,356; state 1 mill school tax, $761,-760; general university, $176,019; interest and principal on loans from state, $351,018.

The total value of land, other than town lots, was $387,608,085, an average value per acre of $10.27. The highest average value, outside the Twin Cities, was in Blue Earth county, $15.71 per acre; the lowest in Cook county, $2.92 per acre.

Real property in Ramsey county shows a valuation of $75,174,223, and personal property a valuation of $16,-623,425.

This table shows how Minnesota has grown since 1870:

	Average Value of Land.	Taxes Levied.
1870	$4.39	$2,619,764
1880	7.80	4,191,811
1890	7.19	9,383,696
1893	7.36	12,707,563
1895	7.71	14,770,694
1900	7.25	14,903,501
1902	10.27	18,520,846

The 1902 rate of 24.3 is unusually low. It was higher than this in 1901, 1900, 1899, 1897 and 1870.

State Auditor Iverson makes the following interesting statement in connection with the report:

"It will be remembered that after the state board of equalization last September had made the large raise on the assessments of real property it was contended by some that it meant an increase in the amount of taxes. This is, of course, true as to tax levies where the rate is fixed by law, such as state and local one-mill school tax and other state taxes except state revenue. For this purpose the legislature makes a levy of a certain sum of money and provides that the rate shall not exceed a certain figure. But the exact rate is certified to county auditors by the state auditor.

"Nearly all the local taxes are certified up to the county auditor in specific amounts, and the county auditor spreads the tax at such a rate as will produce those amounts. Consequently, an increase in the assessment must of necessity bring a reduction in the tax levy and examination of the figures of the various counties make this very plain. The average rate over the state for the year 1902 (24.3) is nearly three mills less than for 1901 (27.1).

"Take Freeborn county for example, the average rate of the county for 1901 was 21 mills, and in the city of Albert Lea, 24.3 mills. The state board of equalization of last fall increased real property in the county 50 per cent. The rate for the county this year is 15.3 mills, and in Albert Lea 24.5 mills. And yet the amount of taxes levied for the county for 1902 is over $5,000 more than in 1901, and in the in the city of Albert Lea nearly $7,000 more.

"Redwood county the rate for 1901 was 21.2 mills, and in 1902 16.8 mills, notwithstanding the fact that in 1902 there was an increase of the amount of taxes levied of over $17,-000.

"The state board of equalization made no change in real estate in Ramsey county last year, and the valuation of the county is about the same as the year before. In 1901 it was $80,440,115, and in 1902 $83,328,970. The taxes levied in 1901 was $2,445,-385 and the average tax rate 27 mills. In 1902 the amount of taxes levied was $2,908,945, the average rate in the county 31 mills.

"It will be noticed that the average county rate runs from 15 mills to 42 mills."

State to Pay Bounties.

The house committee on towns and counties introduced a bill last week providing for a state bounty on wolves of $15 for the killing of the females and $10 for males.

This bounty, which will be paid entirely by the state, will apply to full grown wolves only, and it is proposed to allow counties to provide such bounties as they desire for the killing of cub wolves to be paid entirely from the county treasury.

There has been some discussion as to the division of the monetary burden of a wolf bounty between state and county. After thoroughly discussing the matter, the committee decided that the most satisfactory solution is to have the state pay the bounty for full grown wolves and the counties the bounty for cub wolves, should they so desire.

"Cole's Carbolisalve has been a favorite household remedy with us for years," writes Capt. J. W. Partridge, Belfast, Me. LAST CONCERT BEFORE THE LENTEN SEASON

Another Pleasant Evening's Entertainment by the Red Lake Falls Band Next Monday.

The band concert and ball next Monday evening should be given an unusually large patronage by our people for several reasons. First, it is the final concert and ball before the Lenten season, and the opportunity to make merry before the forty days period of sack cloth and ashes should be taken advantage of by everyone. There many other excellent reasons for a large turnout Monday evening, as by encouraging the boys in attending these entertainments you are helping build up an institution that will bring credit to the town and its people.

The concert will consist of seven numbers by the full band, and will be followed by a grand ball, music for which will be furnished by Freund's orchestra of six pieces. The following is the concert program:

1.—March . . . . "Zacatecas" . . . Niles
2.—Overture . . . . . H. Von Tilzer
"Harry Von Tilzer's New Hits"
3.—Baritone Solo . . . . . Durand
"The Brilliant Star Polka"
J. B. ANDERSON
4.—Fantasia on "Auld Lang Syne" . . . . . Dalbey
(Introducing solos by Baritone, L. B. Armstrong; Cornet, F. F. Freund; Clarinet, Thos. LaBissonniere; Piccolo, L. P. Reibold; Bass, Sam V. Gulack.)
5.—Waltz . . . "Rose Mousse" . . . Bosc
6.—Overture . . . . . Smith
"Mills' Merry Melodies."
7.—March Characteristic . R. B. Hall
"Creole Queen."

Honorary members will be admitted free, as usual, and the customary charge made for others. Everyone turn out and enjoy the evening with the band.

THE LENTEN SEASON.

Regulations of the Catholic Church for Its Observance.

Everyone is perhaps aware that there is a certain period in each year known as the Lenten season, during which in many localities there is a lull in social functions, but beyond this the subject is hazy to a goodly number of people. Lent which this year begins February 25 is observed to some extent by a number of churches, but more strictly by the Catholic church. It is a season set apart by that church for a kind of religious regeneration among the faithful. It is a time given over to a greater extent than any other of the year to fasting, prayer and religious devotions generally. Ash Wednesday, which falls always during the month of February or early in March, is the first day of Lent, which lasts until Easter Sunday, a period of forty days excluding Sundays. Lenten regulations require that flesh meat shall not be eaten on Wednesdays and Fridays of each week and certain special days in some of the weeks. Also that only full meal shall be eaten each day, but these rules have been to a great extent relaxed by papal authority in this country in favor of people engaged in "hard labor and exhausting duties," and since most Americans fall within this rule, fasting in this country is not very general or pronounced. The church, however, rigidly requires that nothing be lost by cessation of fasting and insists that it be made up in greater devotion and self denial in other ways, such as prayer and the giving up of amusements and pleasures. While no special amusements are prohibited Catholics generally abstain from dancing, card playing, etc. The favorite devotions are the Rosary, a prayer which is recited by the entire family in most Catholic families during the season of Lent. Friday evenings of each week are devoted to church services, always including the "Way of the Cross," a devotion calculated to recall the literal carrying of the cross by Christ on the day of crucifixion. The Lenten season reaches its climax on Good Friday, which is the Friday preceding Easter. This day represents the anniversary of the day of the crucifixion. On this day the church bells do not ring, and all pictures and statuary within the church are draped in mourning. The faces of the statues and pictures of Christ are covered. No marriages take place during Lent. The custom of observing Lent is almost, if not quite, as old as Christianity itself. We find the Greeks and Romans observing it during the first century of the Christian era and with a few minor changes in the forms of observance to meet changed conditions of the human race it has come down through the ages since unaltered.

Meet After Many Years.

Pipestone Star: Wm. Vague, the Red Lake county, Minn., cattle man who was injured in the Great Northern freight wreck just north of this city a few weeks ago, is now at Merrill, Iowa., his former home, and of an incident recently occuring there in which he was one of the principals the Merrill Record says: "Mrs. Vogue, of central Kansas, came up last evening on a surprise visit to his brother, Wm. Vague, who is now recuperating from his recent accident at the Frank Foss residence. The two brothers have not met for 21 years, since they played together on the old farm in Wisconsin. Through the course of circumstances and business interests, one drifted into Kansas and the other into Iowa. Each had planned many times to visit the other but circumstances interfered until last evening. The meeting of the two brothers was a pleasure to see; neither knew the other, but when their names were mentioned each one rejoiced as only near and dear relatives can after a long separation. Both have prospered well in the world's goods and are prominent and respected citizens of the locality in which they live."

SENATOR STEPHENS' PET.

Workings of Proposed State Hail Insurance Law.

Crookston Times: Before leaving for St. Paul last night Senator Stephens intimated that this would be a very busy week at the capitol, and quite a number of important matters would be taken up and passed. Speaking of the state hail insurance measure, the senator said:

"My bill provides for an amendment to the state constitution authorizing an annual tax on growing crops for an insurance fund against loss by cyclones, tornadoes and hail storms. The measure was introduced as a supplement to a bill presented recently prohibiting mutual hail and cyclone insurance companies.

"As plan is for the state to levy a tax of 1 to 5 cents an acre on all crops likely to be damaged by such disasters. This tax will be assessed by the town assessor, levied by the state auditor and collected by the treasurer, like regular taxes.

"Whenever a farmer suffers a loss he may apply to the state auditor for remuneration. The auditor will then instruct a special commission, consisting of the county surveyor, one of the county commissioners and the chairman of the town board, to estimate the loss. I would suggest that the insured pay the services of the commission, so that no extra expense may fall upon the state.

"The argument is that the regular state machinery for levying and collecting taxes can do the work without any considerable trouble. If the rate the second year proves to be too low, it can be raised the next and in a short time be adjusted to weather conditions."

Will Oppose Stephen's Hail Bill.

Luverne Journal: A. H. Osborn yesterday circulated a petition protesting against the passage of a bill now before the legislature. This bill has as its object the annihilation of farmers' mutual hail insurance companies. A mutual hail insurance company if rightly managed and conducted along the lines provided by the statutes, is a good thing, and affords protection to the farmer at a low rate. Many of them have been a God send to the farmers. Nearly everyone signed the petition, and it will be forwarded to Representative Jacobson.

Will Find Hard Sledding.

St. Paul Journal: Trustsorganized in the year 2903 are confronted by a dreary prospect if the legislation now being enacted against them is not repealed before that time.

PROFESSIONAL BRETHREN

By GEORGE E. WALSH.

"Certainly," he said, without hesitation. "How else could the robberies be committed with success? Why, have you any reason to believe otherwise?"

He looked sharply at me, and my eyes wandered from his as I answered:

"No, except that I believe a gang could not operate so successfully as one good skilled professional robber. Where there are too many men or more will get into trouble sooner or later, and they will squeal upon the others."

"That's very true, very true," he said reflectively. "I had never thought of that, and yet, you, believe, the detective, come to that conclusion some time now, but I asserted the idea. Maybe there is more in the idea than I thought. I will think about it, and if such a man is really terrorizing the neighborhood I should like to see him captured. I believe I will offer a reward myself for his capture."

"It would be a good idea," replied, "for you would probably never have to pay the reward."

"Why not?"

"Well, because a man sharp enough to evade detection all this time is not likely to be caught by somebody working to get a reward."

"That may be, but I shall offer the reward at once. I'll make it a thousand dollars for the man who will catch and anoter thousand for his conviction."

"That ought to be sufficient to tempt any confederate to squeal and turn state's evidence."

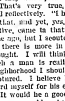
"It might be, but I should hate to see the money go to a confederate, for it is my private opinion that a man who tells of his comrade is crime for a reward is worse than the man who is captured. He is not only a criminal himself, but a coward and 'gailer.'"

Mr. Goddard's eyes flashed sharply as he spoke, but I turned away without further remark. I knew for whose benefit the words were spoken. Did he think for an instant that I would turn traitor and claim the reward which he had offered for his own capture and conviction? And yet how easily I could do it! He had placed himself in my power, and now seemed to challenge me upon my honor to betray him.

But, then, he had saved my life once, and he undoubtedly knew human nature well enough to satisfy himself that there was no danger of my betraying him. He had to really made a coup d'etat in rescuing me from the fangs of the savage Dane the night before. He could easily have stood aside and let the hound finish me, placing me beyond all possibility of ever afterward annoying him, but his interference, coupled with my sudden change of position which brought me face to face to closer contact with him, convinced me that he wanted to use me for some purpose. Either he had some object to attain through me or he wished to make me his confidante in order to dispose of the goods he must have collected, for I had no doubt that he was one of robberies in the neighborhood had been committed by him.

What his purpose was I felt curious to know, and I looked forward to future developments with considerable interest.

CHAPTER VII.



FOUND my new position much more to my taste than the one I had been serving in. I had complete command of all the silver and valuables of the house, and it was a satisfaction to look at all this wealth even though I had no share in any of it. The curious circumstance that I should ever be placed in a position over so much treasure amused me and increased the satisfaction in my mind about the uncertainties and inconsistencies of life. A term of my profession must of necessity be something of a mystery to others. How else could he accept the sentiment that of capture and conviction and imprisonment and death for one's conscience when engaged on delicate and dangerous business? These are ups and downs to every life, I suppose, but none more so than in that of the professional burglar.

The second day of my installation as butler in the house was marked by an interesting event. Dr. Squires and Miss Stetson both appeared at lunch.

This meeting was not unexpected by my master. It was apparently purely accidental.

About noon the two visitors appeared at the door in a hansom and, as I was under did not see them at first. He was smoking in his dressing room when the visitors at Squires' house was startled

WHY?

The reason Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills cure headache so much is because it acts first on the sensory membrane right where the cough tickles—in the throat or deep-seated in the lungs. Relieves the strained or rough parts and subdues the irritation. Relieves pain, induces sleep, and restores the system to a natural condition. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are a cure, but it takes strength and elasticity to the delicate membranes which protect the throat and lungs. Over-the-counter cough syrups undermine the system and destroy digestion. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores natural supply to nerves, thus stimulating the pulmonary organs with just enough vigor that the lungs and bronchial tubes throw off the cough. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a true tonic. Sold by druggists. Book on Coughs, Colds and Lungs and all Pulmonary Complaints that are curable are quickly cured by face at her reply.

"Any number of days beforehand you wish," he answered.

"Well, then, I wish to have it now," she replied scarcely, a quiver of self-enforcing her words.

"Woman's impatience," he muttered. "It has caused half the trouble in the world."

"That is untrue. I don't like such reflections upon my sex."

"Nothing personal was intended, Miss Belle. I was merely uttering my reflections aloud."

"Well, please don't do so any more."

The doctor watched the horses drinking for a few moments and then, leaning against the saddle of his bluish steed, he said:

"Can you keep the secret if I divulge it to you?"

"Can I? I don't think that question is necessary."

"No, probably not. But I want your promise that you will never reveal it to anybody," he persisted.

"Well, you have it. I will never mention it until you give me permission."

"All right, then. I will tell you all. When I was a young man, I went to India as a surgeon in the English army. There I met so many lepers that my attention was called particularly to this disease. At first they digested and alarmed me. Their cottiug fingers and toe joints, their running sores and their emaciated bodies were so horrible some that I could hardly stay in their presence, but in time I got used to them, as we do to everything. I even found myself picking them and wondering if something couldn't be done to alleviate their sufferings and even to cure and stamp out the horrible disease. This was the beginning of a career that I have studiously pursued ever since. I spent all my time in studying leprosy in its worst forms, and I determined to find some remedy for it. I was limited in funds, but managed to get along by living most frugally. I could not exist in the same house with them. The thought of it hardly settled me. But I could live near them and help them and in time perfect my discovery.

"My secret is already out. Miss Belle," he added after a pause, "I am devoting my time and life to the discovery of a positive cure for leprosy, that most dreaded of all diseases that ever scourged a wicked world. I am sure that I have studiously pursued ever since. I spent all my time in studying leprosy in its worst forms, and I determined to find some remedy for it. I was limited in funds, but managed to get along by living most frugally. I could not exist in the same house with them. The thought of it hardly settled me. But I could live near them and help them and in time perfect my discovery.

"My secret is already out. Miss Belle," he added after a pause, "I am devoting my time and life to the discovery of a positive cure for leprosy, that most dreaded of all diseases that ever scourged a wicked world. I am sure that I have studiously pursued about perfected it, so that I will be ready to announce the results to the world in a year. There is only one thing that bothers me. I am experimenting with this continually."

"Experimenting with whom?"

"With—why—my dear Miss Belle, have I divulged my family secret?" stammered the doctor. "Did you not know? I thought your father knew that you knew that—"

"That Charles had leprosy in his system—that he was a leper?" she said slowly.

"Your father knew it; his father knew it; Charles knew it when he met me. I understood that both families made no secret of it among themselves."

"No. I never knew what the disease was. Father never told me. Oh, can it be possible?"

She swayed in her saddle, and if the doctor had not caught her she would have fallen to the ground. I could hardly contain myself. The news nearly made me desperate. This accounted for everything. I was all wrong in my conclusions. The doctor was, after all, a good man, holding the secret of my master's life in his possession and trying lurd to help him.

"You must let me give you some water, Miss Belle," the doctor said as he stended her in the saddle. "Dismount a moment, and let me bathe your forehead."

"No, thank you, doctor. I will be all right in a moment. The suddenness of the news startled me."

"I know it, I know it, and I was a brute to tell you. I should have been more thoughtful. I shall never forgive myself. But, Miss Belle, believe me, I thought you knew it all. He should have told you."

"No, no; I am glad he didn't. How could I have been the same to him? How can I in the future?"

She shuddered and covered her face with her hands.

"Don't go on so, my dear Miss Belle," the doctor said in a low, winning voice. "There is hope for Charles yet. You forget that I am close upon the greatest discovery of the age. If it succeeds, Charles will be a new man, free from all taint of leprosy."

The two had been engaged in conversation.

"But you could not eradicate the germs of the disease from his body; they might not show themselves in him, but in future generations they

CHAPTER XII.

It is not often that conflicting emotions trouble us. But on that afternoon as I walked back to Mr. Goddard's house I experienced the strangest contradiction of feelings. One moment I thought I would pursue the tragedy no further, but destroy immediately and my self my master work on his own fate. After all, he was nothing to me, and he probably cared less for me than I did for him.

But the next moment I would have a revulsion of feelings. I would fall to pitying and sympathizing with both my master and Miss Stetson. Her love for him was genuine, and it must be a terrible blow to her upon her intelligence. Was she not to be pitied more than Mr. Goddard? Or the other hand he was conscious of the terrible doom that awaited him and was heaped up only by the thought that possibly Dr. Squires could cure him. But now he could never cure his secret. Would she marry him even though pronounced cured?

What would be the result? Mr. Goddard would go away to some foreign country, and after grieving over him for a time Miss Stetson would yield to the importunities of Dr. Squires and marry him. A new life claims of the tragedy, which, after all, would prove a tragedy only to my master, and it made me more faithful in my devotion to the unfortunate man. I decided me to stay by him until the time should come when my expectations would be fulfilled. Then I would return to my old ways. Meanwhile I was leading an honest life and making the money which I spent.

I had become quite efficient in my duties, and was trusted in many ways that never fell to the lot of my predecessor. I was more than butler—I was my master's confidential secretary in many respects. But there were some secrets that he would not reveal to me, and one was the dread disease which brought him so much care and sorrow.

After hearing the truth from Dr. Squires' own lips my attention was drawn more closely to Mr. Goddard's appearance. I watched his languid manners, his pale face and all the symptoms of disease that he showed during his periodical fits of sickness. More than this, I read up all the medical books about leprosy and then watched for the signs. To an excited imagination these were readily visible.

About this time Miss Stetson and the doctor took lunch at the house again, and my attention was called to the matter by an incident that greatly affected all of us. I had not seen Miss Stetson since that afternoon when I watched her from my hiding place in the wayside brush. She was paler than usual, and her manner was more or less excited, especially when Charles was near her.

During the progress of the lunch I caught her studying the hands and face of her host on every occasion when his eyes were turned away from her. I could not at first understand the reason for this scrutiny, but it suddenly dawned upon me that she, too, had been reading the subject and was looking for symptoms of the disease.

The doctor, as usual, was the life of the party and kept the conversation flowing freely from one to the other, never being at a loss for words. Nevertheless there was no meanness in his manner which seemed very unnatural. My master alone appeared to be perfectly at his ease and normal.

When the conversation lagged a moment, he suddenly rubbed the back of one of his hands with the palm of the other and said:

"Doctor, I think I must have run up against some poison ivy or sumac in the woods, for I have that my hands and face are poisoned."

CHAPTER XIII.

I WAS probably as much troubled as my master over this and state of affairs. Miss Stetson's treatment hurt him more than he would confess. He seemed so perplexed and worried over the matter that I was several times on the point of telling him the reason for her sudden aversion for him.

There was but little doubt that he had settled her dislike for him, but he was too proud and sensitive to speak of the matter to her one. He would not a kind to speak of such personal questions even to Dr. Squires. For several days he remained away from the Stetson mansion, sending me over twice a day to inquire after Miss Stetson's health. I never saw her myself nor any of those within except the last. Then, instead of sending the message down to me by one of the servants, she called me up to her library.

The first thing I noticed about her was a peculiar expression of self-repression on her face. Under the dark eyes and around the lips there were delicate lines and tints which revealed more than words. She had suffered and was doomed to suffer more. Pathetic acceptance of her lot was apparent on every lineament of her face. She had evidently battled successfully with herself and had become resigned to her fate.

The room in which she ushered me was an old fashioned library where her father, the doctor, had gathered together many rare books and curios. The heavy woodwork, the dark paper and furnishings of the library cast a gloomy aspect over the sole occupant, and her white face gleamed out of the darkness like an old fashioned picture in a somber setting. In spite of her surroundings she was still beautiful—more beautiful it seemed to me than when first I opened to found daylight. Hers was a beauty that did not fade in light or shade.

"You sent for me, Miss Stetson?" I said interrogatively as I entered the room.

"Yes, ma'am. He sent to inquire after your health," I replied, bowing respectfully.

"And he trusts you without a written message?" she questioned.

"In this matter he does, for he considered you too ill to write, and he did not wish to put you to any unnecessary trouble."

"That is the true reason," she said quietly. "He is always very considerate to others."

"He is to every one," I added, wishing to show my devotion to him.

"Yes, you; he is kind to all. He is a good man."

"I have never met a better, ma'am. If you will permit me to say it, and I have seen much of men in the world. He is always thinking of other people, and if he does wrong I believe he has some good reason for it."

She looked at me as if she liked to listen to praise of him, and when I stopped her expression seemed to say, "Go on, go on." And I did so. I knew my position and would say no more.

"Is Mr. Goddard well himself?" she asked when she found that I was mute.

"Yes. Except for an attack of poison, which has now gone away entirely, he has been very well."

She turned a shade paler and then flushed a little as she remembered that I had been present on the day when she fainted.

"Oh, yes! I remember he spoke of the poison the last time I saw him," she said to a moment, recovering her mental poise. "Have the spots or eruption entirely disappeared?"

"Entirely, ma'am. There are no signs of any left."

"I suppose Dr. Squires gave him something to cure them."

I knew that she was thinking of the doctor's cure for leprosy and that she imagined he had given my master something which would drive away the first symptoms of the disease, at least temporarily. But I knew differently, and I courted the opportunity to disabuse her of the error mistake.

"No, ma'am; the doctor did nothing for my master," I answered. "I gave him something which cured the eruption."

"You? What did you know about the matter?"

"Very much, ma'am, except that I had been poisoned once, and I remembered what helped me. I asked my master if I could get him a drug."

"A bottle of what?"

"Of nothing. It was one of my mother's cures for poison ivy or sumac."

"And that cured him?"

Her face brightened wonderfully. She began to realize that she had been a victim of her imagination.

"Completely," I answered.

"Then it was not—nothing more serious than ordinary poison," she added, with a sigh of relief.

"Nothing, ma'am."

She gave expression to her relieved feelings in a short laugh. The sweet-

"You come from Mr. Goddard?"

ness of it made me turn my head to look at her. The beautiful face had suddenly lighted up so that it seemed almost divine in its expression. Here, I thought, was true love, and I willingly adored her for it.

"Pardon me," she said after a moment of silence. "I was thinking of something else which amused me. You must take a message to your master."

She walked toward the library table and drew pen and paper from a drawer. She hesitated a moment and then

"No; I won't write. I will send a verbal message by you. Charles has treated you to bring me, and I will return it in the same way."

"Thank you, ma'am. I shall endeavor to prove worthy of the trust."

"Well, tell Mr. Goddard that I am quite recovered and that I expect to have him call on me today. Be sure to tell him that I must see him at once. He must give up every other engagement and come to me. Now, do you understand? Can you put it so he can't say no?"

"I can, ma'am, and I'll venture to give you my word of honor that he will be here before the sun sets."

"Ca, then, and prove your words." As I left her presence I felt that my mission had been one of mercy that morning, for I had, apparently unconsciously, been the means of lifting a burden temporarily from one lonely heart. I knew also that I carried a message that would bring a ray of sunlight into the life of another.

I might have stretched the importance of this interview to my master so I might have given him the literal truth. I knew not which now. However, I delivered the message in a way sufficient to make him obey it.

The result of their meeting was manifest at once. Both of them appeared happy and normal again, and the old relationship seemed to be re-established. How much Miss Stetson explained to him about her fears and knowledge of his case I never know, but for a time at least she was determined to put down all feelings of aversion for my master because of her knowledge that he was a deemed leper. Or perhaps—like another self sacrificing woman—she loved and stood about—she had decided to consecrate her life to him, to live by him and nurse him through the cruel years of pain and suffering and mental agony which must ever be the lot of a leper.

CHAPTER XIII.

I HAD now been in my position about six months. The interesting events which I have recorded had kept me from longing to return to the exciting experiences of my profession. During this time I had grown somewhat stouter, and my countenance had become so tanned as to be somewhat, well red appearance. Necessarily I had grown a little lazier. Several times I had almost decided to return to my old methods of life, but a certain inertia, undoubtedly bred and nourished by my new existence of ease, always prevented. I would keep deferring the time until a more convenient period.

A gosoiso fear that I would lose my skill through lack of practice occasionally disquieted me, but each time I put it aside with the thought that my profession was no longer an absolute necessity. It did not seem broad and human to me as it did at one time. It was a full fledged butler, and I could secure a good recommendation from my master any time I chose to leave his employ.

Warped by my own experiences, I never let an opportunity pass to help a young man just starting on the downward road to get back to the main highway. I never entertained any serious thoughts of cutting luck myself, but I took to see others straying from it.

Nevertheless I now found myself slowly slipping back to an honest life. This had been accomplished through no conscious effort of my own. Circumstances again were responsible for this change. I had met many reverses and was making love to Miss Stetson. This circumstance at first puzzled me, then it worried and irritated and finally disgusted me. I could not fathom its meaning. I saw my own crime, illustrated in him, in its true light, and it positively sickened me. The end of my record. I longed to speak of the matter to him, but our peculiar relations ship prevented it.

While I sympathized with him for his incurable disease which had always cast a blight over his young life, I could not help considering him for his rash folly. No man of his position, intelligence and opportunities in the world had any business to stoop to crime. In some cases necessity may drive a man to the commission of a theft and habit may later deaden his conscience, but no such excuse could be held out for my master.

JUST now Judge Parker and Richard Olney are very much in the Democratic eye.

IT is still a mystery how Halvor Steenerson happened to be nominated without the support of the Red Lake Falls Gazette.

IT is asserted that Aldrich controls the United States senate. It is also quite freely stated that the Standard Oil company controls Mr. Aldrich.

THE Minnesota legislature would probably pass the anti-passing bill if some excuse could be framed for exempting legislators from the provisions of the measure.

THE Red Wing News observes that with perfect consistency the senate over which Ray W. Jones presides refused to block the appointment of Matchan on the mere ground that he had been indicted.

Don't forget the old man with the fish on his back.

For nearly thirty years he has been traveling around the world, and is still traveling, bringing health and comfort wherever he goes.

To the consumptive he brings the strength and flesh he so much needs.

To all weak and sickly children he gives rich and strengthening food.

To thin and pale persons he gives new firm flesh and rich red blood.

Children who first saw the old man with the fish are now grown up and have children of their own.

He stands for Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil—a delightful food and a natural tonic for children, for old folks and for all who need flesh and strength.

THIS is one of Mary McFadden's compliments: "THE RED LAKE COUNTY COURIER says courage, like cowardice, is contagious. What a valorous lot of people Editor John King's neighbors must have become!"

THE Warren Register will occupy a handsome brick home of its own in the early summer, the preparations for its erection being completed. The newspaper fraternity is pleased to note the prosperity of its enterprising publishers, Messrs. Stevens.

THE Faribault Republican makes rather a serious charge against congressmen. The law allows to each representative in congress $100 a month for a private secretary. It appears that it is common practice with thrifty members to draw this amount and pay about one-half or even less to their secretaries. These useful functionaries have finally reached the conclusion that "the laborer is worthy of his hire" and formed an organization to secure the placing of their names on the pay rolls of the house instead of on the pay rolls of the members, which will greatly improve the situation for them.

FRANK DAY'S Fairmont Sentinel hits the nail squarely on the head in saying, "The survival of the fittest is a good law, but it doesn't apply to journalism. We know of some rural papers, price $1.50 a year, which are not worth to the community they are supposed to edify and enlighten fifteen cents a century. Their publishers are perpetually "beefing" because they don't get more business, when as a matter of fact it would be an act of mercy to the public if the editors were exiled and the papers suppressed. Oh, journalism! What a multitude of fakes are issued weekly and weakly in thy name!"

THE nonpareil man of Minneapolis Journal tells this one, and it should influence people to be more contented with their lot: "This story is probably old, probably very old, but it is filled with primal and eternal truth that it will bear repetition. It is the story of a dissatisfied man who wanted to sell his house. He hired a bright real estate man to write the advertisement. When the agent read the notice to him he said: 'Read that again.' After the second reading he said: 'I believe I'll not sell; I've been looking for a place of that kind all my life.' This is only a proof that the kingdom of heaven is 'at hand,' it is right in your hand now, and you don't have even to reach for it."

BRO. STEVENS of the Warren Register is much exercised because the people of Virginia want to erect a statue in honor of General Robert E. Lee on the Gettysburg battlefield. Our Warren contemporary evidently imagines the civil fued is still in progress and that the North and South are still divided by the issues of the rebellion. Fortunately, however, we are forty years away from the boom of the last cannon, and it is time that both sides to the controversy recognized the impropriety of prolonging the bitterness engendered by the ravages of war. Few greater praise for heroism and devotion to the cause he held sacred than Robert E. Lee. Though his fortunes were cast with the Confederacy his name and fame should be secure from attack by those who plead for a reunited country.

THE EXTRA SESSION PROSPECT.

The chances for an extra session of the Fifty-eighth congress are growing less. It looks now as though the deadlock in the Senate on the statehood bill will soon be broken by a compromise, and a bill passed admitting New Mexico and Arizona into the Union as one state, under the name of Arizona, with the capital of the new state located in New Mexico, and that Oklahoma and Indian Territory will come in as one state under the name of Oklahoma. This will be done unless the Democrats take a notion to put up a filibuster on their own account after Quay has laid down. The Republicans who are and have been fighting the omnibus statehood bill have about convinced Quay and his Republican followers that an extra session means that there will be tariff legislation, and that is what they do not want.

The coal, iron and steel interests of Pennsylvania are every day bringing pressure to bear on Quay to compel him to compromise the statehood matter in order to prevent an extra session.

The Democrats have not yet fully made up their minds whether they will make a fight against a compromise bill, and until they do the matter of an extra session will remain undetermined. It really would be good politics, in the opinion of many leading Democrats who see an opportunity to put the Republicans in a hole during an extra session, and then "scop the sides and pull up the ladder." If an extra session should come, it certainly will be a campaign material manufacturing session for the democrats. They have all to gain by it and nothing to lose.

The Red Lake Lands.

St. Paul Pioneer Press: Intending settlers on the Red Lake reservation, who have looked for the opening of the lands included therein on "homestead terms," or a nominal price such as was asked at the sale of the Oklahoma lands ($1.25 per acre), will be disappointed by the measure just reported to the senate, which provides for the cession to the government of eleven townships on the western portion of the reservation, and their sale at auction in lots of not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, with a minimum price of $4 per acre. But justice to the Indian owners of the land would seem to permit no other course. All the land appears to lie in Red Lake county, within easy reach of railroads already built or in process of construction. It is of superior quality, and at auction is pretty sure to bring much more than the minimum price. At 160 acres per man it will afford room for approximately 1,021 farmsteads. That means an addition to the population of Red Lake county, in the near future, of six or seven thousand souls. But the bill has yet to be passed, and to have the approval of the Indians. Of its passage and approval, however, there appears to be little doubt. Seldom, if ever, has an Indian tribe been the beneficiary of so good a bargain; and as the work of the Indian bureau in negotiating it admirably serves the state of Minnesota and provides the most equitable mode of distribution possible. Commissioner Jones deserves well of everybody for having carried it to its present stage.

Does This Hit You?

Said the grocery man to the butcherman, "It is really a sin that you buy your salt on the wholesale plan and don,t let me handle the tin." Then he told him back to the grocery store and quickly an order sent for a few choice hams for family use and a box of fish for Lent. Said the clothing man to the hardware man, "You certainly don't do right when you order your suit from an eastern house with my big sign in sight." But the clothier wanted a new steel range and it came as his neighbors know, in a box he tried to hide in the barn and marked, "Sears, Roebuck & Co." The business men then called a meeting to see where the trouble lay, and they all agreed 'twas the editor man and not the devil to pay. Why don't he roast the department and peddling fakers they said and stand by those that patronize him and give him his daily bread? So they drew up a compact long and strong for the editor to peruse and waited on him with aspect grim, as he solemnly dug for news, but the editor laughed with a big horse laugh 'till the gang all took to the woods, for 'twas written on axle grease letter heads that came with a bill of goods.—Ex.

Short-sighted Policy.

A Jersey City church makes the members of its choir sign a contract not to marry for a year. This strikes us as a very short-sighted piece of business. Just think how their young voices would soar and their very hearts beat time in unison if the ban were removed.

My Hair

"I had a very severe sickness that took off all my hair. I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor and it brought all my hair back again."
W. D. Quinn, Marseilles, Ill.

One thing is certain,—Ayer's Hair Vigor makes the hair grow. This is because it is a hair food. It feeds the hair and the hair grows, that's all there is to it. It stops falling of the hair, too, and always restores color to gray hair.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee: Fred Richards, Frank Brady and Verne Healy.

The civics class enjoyed a written test last Friday.

Last week's Athenian program was good and they received 38.73 points for it.

The Juniors' sociable netted them $22.85. They are very well satisfied with the result.

Next week occurs the tri-yearly examination. So we advise the high school pupils to work over time at least the following week.

The Senior class had a class meeting at the school house last Thursday forenoon. Though it was on serious matters it was enjoyed.

The Senior class is going to give a class play sometime after Lent. The title is "A Scrap of Paper." There are twelve characters in the cast. The play is very humorous.

As one of the teachers was hearing an English recitation from a sketch of Milton's Paradise Lost, she assumed that the members of the class had never seena soul. One of the boys cautiously looked down at his shoes.

We notice that some of the high school boys are enjoying their Junior privileges and a Senior was heard to say, "We have no privileges." Well you have the privilige to look wise, whether you are or not. That is something. See!

Next Friday occurs the debate on the foot ball question. We hope that the judges decide that we can play again without being called brutal and that our brother, the Athenian leader, will not indulge in personalities and give us any specific example of a foot ball wreck.

The higer algebra class feels some what relieved now that higher algebra is over with and they have shown themselves equal to the emergency. They will bo given solid geometry until the end of the year. They made themselves the promise that they would not again be in the same position they were before the higher algebra examination.

THE HEART OF A MOTHER A BANK WHICH NEVER FAILS

By PAOLO MANTEGAZZA, President Italian Anthropological Society

THE HEART OF A MOTHER IS THE ONE BANK OF SENTIMENT WHICH NEVER FAILS AND WHICH MAY ALWAYS BE RELIED UPON. After having been rent by ingratitude, scarred by the child's misdeeds, by all that would kill a human heart, it is born again out of the ashes, warm, tender, generous. There is not a mother but can forget all affronts to her pride, her deceived hopes, and without reproach, without resentment, go to the help of the guilty son who has been their cause. Lest he suffer, the mother hastens to dry her tears, and if she supposes his heart will to torn by rebukes she says nothing.

IF YOU KNOW A HAPPY MOTHER, CONTEMPLATE THE DELIGHTFUL SPECTACLE. IF YOU KNOW AN UNHAPPY MOTHER, VENERATE HER AS A SAINT, ADORE HER AS A GOD.

TWO VIEWS of the MODERN EDUCATION

By Rev. Dr. C. H. PARKHURST of New York

EDUCATION SHOULD BE THOUGHT OF, FIRST OF ALL, AS BEING A PROCESS OF MAKING A MAN MORE AND MORE OF A MAN THROUGH THE ENTIRE CIRCUMFERENCE OF HIS POSSIBILITIES, AND NOT SIMPLY ALONG LINES THAT MAY HAPPEN TO BE MOST CONGENIAL TO HIS TASTES OR THAT WILL HAVE A LARGER MONEY VALUE WHEN TAKEN OUT INTO THE MARKET OF PROFESSIONAL OR MERCANTILE LIFE.

The advice sometimes rendered to students by men from whom it would seem that we had a right to expect better things is unspeakably painful. All those attempts that are now being made to whittle down the college curriculum from four years to three years and a half, to three years or even to two, all that equaul that is given to young men who are debating the matter of a thorough academic course by what are called practical men af affairs, who are recommending to them to keep out af college if they are going to pursue a monetary career—ALL THIS IS VIRTUAL DENIAL OF ANYTHING BEYOND THREESCORE AND TEN OR FOURSCORE YEARS.

It convorts death into a blank wall and practically denies the future life by so dislocating it from the present as to leave it hanging in the air, a mere pictorial unreality. And it so cancontracts the sense of the eternal, and therefare its beliefs in the eternal. All this is true of other men and nations than our awn, but it is certainly very American.

A few days ago a rather bashful young woman went into a store carrying three chickens. She inquired the price of chickens and at the same time put them on the counter. The clerk didn't know the chicken's feet were tied, and asked if they would lay there. She bit her handkerchief and said: "No sir, they are roosters."

At the band meeting last Thursday evening L. P. Berthon tendered his resignation as manager of the City band and W. A. McIntyre was chosen to fill the vacancy. The election of a manager outside of the band membership was deemed wise as many details can be attended to much easier by one not playing with the band.

Francis Bergstrom, the Minneapolis attorney who has been spending the week in the city, is the patentee of a new-fangled frog carrier which promises to become a part of the paraphernalia of every fishermun. It is a simple and inexpensive device, constructed entirely of zinc nettling and wood, and promises to "fill a long felt want."

A party of eighteen couples of the mutual friends of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gibeau perpetrated a pleasant surprise on them Saturday evening by going to their home in a body and spending the evening in card playing, singing and dancing. A nice lunch was served and everyone thoroughly enjoyed the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. P. Beautrow and family left Monday for North Yakima, Wash., at which place the family will make their future home. Mr. Beautrow having gone to that point some time ago with the household goods. The Beautrows are old residents of Red Lake Falls and have a large circle of friends here who will wish them abundant prosperity in their new home.

A fire alarm was turned in about one o'clock yesterday afternoon, the dwelling house of Mose Belnir, on Champagne avenue, having caught fire in some manner unaccountable. the department responded with its usual promptness and soon had the blaze killed. The damage to the building was slight, but the household goods were badly burned and water soaked.

One of the slot machines at Robillard's saloon which cost two bits to operate was put out of commission Tuesday night. A man, whose name is withheld, went after it with an axe and demolished the machine so thoroughly that it will nevermore reverberate to the cheerful clink of the quarter. No arrests have ensued, since it is generally understood that a gambling device has no rights the public is bound to respect.

Rev. Andrew Walker was taken sick the letter part of last week with what was supposed to be an attack of the grippe, but Monday it was deemed advisable to take him to the Crookston hospital, where he will be treated for what appears to be serious stomach trouble. The many friends of the reverend gentleman will hope for a speedy recovery. No services were held in the Presbyterian church last Sunday.

R. R. L. Daniels, of the Indian service, stationed at the Red Lake sub-agency, is investigating the reported cutting of oak cord wood on the reservation near Thief River Falls in violation of the federal law. Several Indian police are at Thief River Falls, and it is rumored that several whites and Indians, as well, will have an interesting time in the near future. Mr. Daniels is present at Solovay, conferring with Major Scott, the agent in charge of of the Minnesota Chippewas.

The St. Hilaire Spectator has the following complimentary words for our band: "The concert given by the Red Lake Falls band in the Imperial opera house Tuesday night was one of the finest musical treats ever given here. Every number on the program was decidedly well rendered and heartily applauded. The solos were particularly good. After the concert about twenty couples took part in the ball and all agree that the music was excellent. Red Lake Falls has every reason to be proud of its band. It is an organization that would do credit to a city ten times as large. It is to be hoped that they will give other concerts here in the future."

Suffered Terribly—Doctors Failed.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Cured Him.

Weak, nervous, fretful, puny children require a treatment built on a principle. Dr. Miles' Nervine affords. When neglected these children grow up to be nervous men and women. Every mother should strengthen her own and babies' nerves with Dr. Miles' Nervine, a cure specific in all nervous disorders. Read the following:

"When my little boy was 18 months old he had cramps in his feet and hands. They would be drawn out of shape for two or three days. At first liniment seemed to help but in about two weeks nothing did any good the doctor gave him. We called another doctor but his medicine did no good so we changed to another who called it spinal disease. He said he could cure him, but after taking a few bottles his cramps increased to one side and his hands and feet out of shape. His sufferings were terrible, and he was losing from two to six fits a day. I was taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for nervous trouble and saw it was recommended for fits, so I thought I would see if it would help him. All three doctors had given him up. One bottle stopped the fits and his legs limbs straightened, and another bottle cured him. He is now a strong, healthy child, ready to start to school. I attribute my life and my children's health to Dr. Miles' Nervine. Before writing you, but it never has. I cannot praise Dr. Miles' Nervine enough, as I know it saved my boy's life."—Mrs. Unah Benson, Lansing, Iowa.

The Truant ...and... The Shark

By F. V. BLACK

Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association

"HI, Mat! I'd like to see me!"

The small boys looked at Master Wat with admiring eyes.

"You chaps can go and be taught by a burgher if you like, but not me."

"Won't your father lick you, Wat?"

"Shut up! He's got no father, and his mother never licks him."

Wat walked off, with his nose in the air, and just around the corner he ran squarely into the schoolmaster who was to take the place temporarily of the regular teacher, who had broken his leg. Wat sniffed impudently and would have walked past, but Jan de Jongh got out a hand to stop him—put it out with diffidence, hesitatingly, almost as an inferior might do.

"It is time for school, Master Thomé," said he.

"I am not going to school today."

"And tomorrow?"

"Not tomorrow."

"May I know why?"

Wat looked a one side and another, rather abashed, and then insolently at the young schoolmaster.

"White man," said he, "should not be taught by—by black men."

He ran away and did not see the flash of anger and sorrow that reddened De Jongh's olive cheeks. The schoolmaster looked after him for a second and then slowly proceeded to open his school.

This happened in Natal, where are many sons of different races—English, Dutch descendants, Portuguese, Malays, descendants of the coolies brought in old times from the East Indies as plantation workers, and Kaffirs. So there are many social ranks and grades. Wat was an English boy, brought out to the colony when a baby, and as the English rank highest in the country and never would think of mingling intimately with the other races Wat, being only twelve years old, had a rather exaggerated idea of his own and his people's worth.

Jan de Jongh was not a black man, though his skin was dark, like most Italians. He was the descendant of Dutch and Portuguese ancestors, who long, long ago had owned the country before the Englishmen took it as the spoil of war, just as America today has come into possession of the Philippines.

Mr. de Jongh was downhearted. Most of the boys were of English parentage, and if Wat, their leader, rebelled he forecaw a falling off in attendance and the consequent loss of his first position, his first stepping stone. He was right. The boys, small as they were, were impudent and impulsive, and Jan dismissed the school despondently.

Meantime Wat, for sufficient reason, did not go straight home. He doubted his reception by his mother might not be altogether cordial and appreciative. It was hot, as it usually is on the coast of the Indian ocean. One advantage the best brings to the boys is that one can go swimming any day almost all the year round. Wat, wandering along by the surf, soon felt the sun oppressive, and when he came to a cove where he and his chums knew well as a swimming place where the surf did not break too violently he naturally came to the conclusion that a bath would be a good thing to break the lonely monotony of the morning. He was, like most boys in warm countries, a first rate swimmer, and he had no hesitation in plunging into the huge Indian ocean even when quite alone.

He left his clothes on the beach near some rocks without fear of pilfering wanderers, for the cove was some distance from the town and a spot where few ever wandered. He ran in with a dash, passed to catch an incoming breaker just at the right moment before it broke, dived beneath its crest, again vigorously under water for a minute and came up puffing and blowing on the glorious swell of the wave, with the sun glowing down upon him in warm hearted approval.

Wat turned on his back and let himself be rocked luxuriously. One moment he would be lifted up so that he could look far out to sea or inland at the vast extent of greenery, and the next by was down in a great hollow, with nothing before his eyes but the cloudless blue above and the glassy waters reaching up at his sides like prodigious mountains.

"Poof—oof—ow!" cried the boy. "This is better than a stuffy schoolroom, with a low burgher making you study the idiotic history of the country. He had a check to think he could teach Boy Ish boys. I wish he was here, and I'd teach him to swim. Wouldn't I duck him! Oh, no! Certainly not!"

He was like a fish. He reveled and gloried in the sea like one of the ocean inhabitants. A home bred boy of a tamer climate, used to one or two months' swimming in the summer holidays, would not have believed a twelve-year-old youngster could be so much at ease on the breast of the fathomless ocean. Wat struck out to deeper water with a bold, swift side stroke and soon was standing, monarch of all he surveyed, on a great, black rock which broke the force of the waves as they strove to dash, with headlong strength, into the quiet cove.

As he stood there, with joyous eyes, facing the ocean defiantly, as his race's eyes have done for centuries and do today, sudden interest increased their wide brightness. A quarter mile, set from the beach of the little bay, but only half that distance from the rock on which he stood, lay on a reef the dark timbers of a recent wreck. Wat remembered hearing of a little bark coming on the reef in a gale a month ago, but school and cricket had prevented his going out to the cove until now. At once he was filled with the desire to explore, and without a moment's hesitation he plunged into the deeper outside waters and swam for the hulk. It did not take him long to cover the 200 or 300 yards to the wreck. When the vessel was wrecked, monster waves, driven in by a landward gale, had broken over the reef, but now the sea about the dead ship was comparatively quiet, and on the lee side Wat had no difficulty in climbing aboard.

Here were new and exhilarating delights of the rarest sort. To explore strange corners, to stand waist deep—now the tide was out—in the skipper's own cabin and, poking about with fingers and toes, unearth strange things, tarnished now, but interesting, to seek and pry with an excited heart in the hope that he might light upon a wonderful find—perhaps treasure overlooked, perhaps— At the thought of perhaps seeing something wonderful, although he knew all the crew had been saved, Wat suddenly felt lonely and afraid. He ran quickly up on the broken deck. He was startled to note how long by the sun his walk and his swim and his explorations had taken. Now he felt hungry, and knew it he must be long past time at his mother's house. Then he looked again at the sea and the shadows of the rocks upon the sea and calculated correctly that it must be 2 o'clock and school would be coming out in an hour.

Wat set to jump overboard. His foot was on the broken rail, and his hands were raised to dive. In an instant he would have been in the water, when he staggered back, white as flour, shaking at the moment of his escape. Slowly, with lazy complacency, with hardly a flick of its great tail, there swam below the boy most leisurely a great shark. It moved about close to the surface, its dorsal fin sometimes above the water, like a sail, and its cold, cruel, vicious, hungry eyes stared up at the truant. Wat almost swooned and fainted.

He had been foolish, worse than foolish. Time and again he had been warned, with the other boys, about the sharks, which, though they do not actually infest these waters, are by no means rare. The cove was comparatively safe, but beyond it there was all ways danger. It was the old story of the wolf. "Shark!" had been cried so often to young Wat that he paid little attention to it. Now he was trapped.

After a time Wat got up and looked cautiously overboard. The shark was not there, but when he ran to the other side it was there. The monster knew its man was safely ensnared. Round and round he swam, lazily and unconcernedly enjoying the warmth of the sun near the surface. Wat was unable to withdraw his eyes from it. It fascinated him as a snake does a monkey. Now and then the fish would roll over on its back, and then Wat would hide his eyes, shuddering at the sight of that hideous mouth and those gleaming teeth. Once, when the shark had been on guard for an hour or more, it paused at the stern end of the wreck and then swam slowly onward. Hope sprung in the boy's heart, and he slipped quietly to the other end, intending to glide noiselessly into the water and strike out for shore. If he had done so, he might have got safely away while the shark continued to swim about, thinking its prey was still there, but Wat had not the great courage to risk it. He hesitated, and in another two or three minutes it was too late. The brute came back, and Wat fancied as it resumed its watchful course that it looked up at him mockingly.

The truant grew hysterical with fear and horror. He was quite able to realize his position. If he swam shoreward, he would meet a certain, cruel death, perhaps the most horrible of deaths. But the cove and the bay had for below the sea road, and between that road and the ocean were great masses of trees and jungle which shut out the sea from land passengers. Not once in a week perhaps might any one seek that secluded spot, while ships passed far, far out. There was only a little chance of speedy help and an almost inevitable end by starvation and exposure, for, although the days are warm, the nights in Natal are often cold, and Wat was naked to all the chill.

When his hysteria grew uncontrollable, his moans and tears gave place to loud sobs, but still the placid sentry of the bulk swam round and round. The sobs at length ceased, and in their stead came loud cries which soon were shrill resounding shrieks. But the shark swam round and round till the truant was crazed, driven almost to madness by that relentless watch.

At length toward evening, when the sun was sinking fast, one piercing scream from Wat was answered from the beach of the little bay—answered by a long, full voiced "Hello!" Wat ran up and down, jumping and throwing his arms in the air, shouting "Help! Shark! Help! Shark!" with all his strength and all his might. To the highest rock a figure ascended, the sun shining fully upon it, and Wat recognized the humble student, the poor schoolteacher, Jan de Jongh, whom he had so grossly insulted in the morning. The boy's heart sank.

"I called him a black man," he thought, "and he isn't, and I tried to break up the school. He'll go away and leave me to die, and nobody will ever know."

Still he shouted and cried and pleaded with the unconscious man to help. Jongh, instead of going away, came along from rock to rock in a promontory where his words could be distinctly heard.

"I don't understand," cried De Jongh. "Are you hurt? Can't you swim ashore?"

"A big shark is swimming around the wreck," yelled Wat, "and I can't get ashore. Help me! Oh, Mr. de Jongh, give me and save me!"

The schoolmaster did not reply for a moment. He was startled. There was for small boat anywhere on the harbor, three hours away. There and back would be six hours at the very least, and by that time it would be cold and dark, and Wat might get so crazed with cold and terror and loneliness—might grow delirious, in fact—that he would jump overboard to swim ashore, when his fate would be awful. These things the master thought of in a moment, but there was something else for a moment, just the value of his own life, thought for not a single moment of that lucky privilege to raise a canine in the school, and the next moment he was stripped to the skin.

"Cheer up, Wat, my boy!" he shouted, as if Wat were a good comrade instead of an insolent pupil. "Keep a good heart, I'm coming."

He was coming! Wat could not reply. How could Mr. de Jongh pass out to he could not pass to? He looked and saw the master on his knees praying, and Wat knelt also.

When De Jongh rose up, he had a long bladed open clasp knife in his mouth and immediately dived into the water. The shark felt the vibration caused by that plunge and darted a little way in, at once on the alert. Wat, still kneeling, watched with clasped hands and anxious eyes. The head of the master appeared, his strong arms striking out resolutely. A few yards he came, when the monster detected him and made a rush. For a moment Jan de Jongh passed, then suddenly dived, and the next instant the shark leaped clear of the water and, sinking again, left behind it on the surface a great red stain. Dr. de Jongh came up. Wat saw, with a deep shriek in his soul, the shark's fin near the surface, saw the gleam of its white belly as it turned on its back to seize that his hideous mouth could bite, saw Jan dive once more and then saw the great shark roll over in a mess of blood and slowly sink. Jan had killed the shark in its own element. Wat leaped then, with a glad shout of thanks, and in a short time was safe on shore.

"I thank you," he cried, clinging to the student's side, "and, Mr. de Jongh, I was an awful rud to say that this morning. Lick me as much as you please, and I won't cry out. You can kill rate you like. I'm ashamed of myself."

De Jongh only pressed his hand and smiled.

"We'll try to forget all that, Wat," said he. "But, though I am not a black man and couldn't help it if I were, yet it was a black man who saved you from the shark."

"How?"

"Because a Kaffir on the coast, a famous diver, taught me that trick, without which I could not have saved you. So, you see, Wat, it is unwise to sneer at any person for any race, black, brown or white, for it is more than likely that person may be able, knowing what you don't know, to be of service to you."

Wat bowed his head, abashed.

"Mr. de Jongh," he said after awhile, "I'm coming to school tomorrow, and—were the boys rude?"

"A little."

"Well," said Master Wat, "they won't be any more. They know me, and I like you, Mr. de Jongh."

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

One Minute Cough Cure gives relief in one minute, because it kills the microbe which excites the mucous membranes, causing the cough, and at the same time clears the phlegm, draws out the inflammation and heals and soothes the affected parts. One Minute Cough Cure strengthens the lungs, wards off pneumonia and is a harmless and never failing cure in all curable cases of coughs, colds and croup. One Minute Cough Cure is pleasant to take, harmless and good alike for young and old. A. L. Reichert.

WYANDOTTE.

Mrs. Finstad made a short call at Lee's Monday.

Miss Finstad called at Knute Steen's last Monday.

Carl Steen hauled a load of wood to St. Hilaire last Tuesday.

Miss Katie Johnson was sewing for Mrs. Nickstad last week.

A surprise party was given at Oscar Ifedin Tuesday evening.

Miss Anna Holden is expected here from Minneapolis this week.

The Wyandotte people are so proud of the nice weather nowadays.

Mr. and Mrs. Pete Nickstad were pleasant callers at Henderson's last Sunday.

Alfred Nickstad feels very proud of his new violin. He received it last Saturday.

Mrs. Nick Holten was taken seriously ill a few weeks ago, and is slowly recovering.

Miss Annie Finstad returned to Grand Forks last Saturday, after a pleasant visit here.

Andrew Johnson was here from Emardville last Monday collecting money for the poor people in the old country.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson are visiting with Mrs. Hanson, but will soon move to Thief River Falls where they will make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Finstad were surprised by their many Wyandotte friends one evening last week. The evening was spent in dancing, music being furnished by Knute Ness. The guests presented Mr. and Mrs. Finstad with six dining room chairs.

Saved Her Child's Life.

"Three bottles weeks our chubby little boy was changed by pneumonia almost to a skeleton," writes Mrs. W. Walden, of Pleasant City, O. "A terrible cough set in, that, in spite of a good doctor's treatment for several weeks, grew worse every day. We then used Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, and our darling was soon sound and well. We believe this grand medicine saved his life." Millions know it's the only sure cure for coughs, colds and all lung diseases. W. A. Schreiter guarantees satisfaction. 50c, $1.00. Trial bottles free.

Grant's First Speech.

When Grant returned from crushing the Confederacy, he was literally worshiped by the people of the North, as nthey a man now living can testify. On his first public appearance he was cheered until the crowds could cheer no longer, but he wouldn't speak. Then a man called out: "Have Sherman speak for you!" Grant merely bowed and said: "I would never ask a subordinate to do what I won't do myself." Then he sat down. The man of action is rarely a talker, but he will tell you that golden grain belt beer is a wonderful stimulus to the energies, because it puts the body in perfect condition. If you want to be strong and healthy, use it regularly. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

One of the First.

Dining car service on American railroads was first inaugurated in 1875, and dining car service between Twin Cities and Chicago was first established by the North-Western Line, as were also all the conveniences of "Limited" train service; and today finds the North-Western Limited between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago the peer of all other trains.

The Easy Pill.

DeWitt's Little Early Risers do not gripe nor weaken the system. They cure biliousness, jaundice, constipation and inactive livers, by arousing the secretions, moving the bowels gently, yet effectually, and giving such tone and strength to the glands of the stomach, liver and bowels that the cause of the trouble is removed entirely. These famous little pills exert a decided touch of feet upon the organs involved, and if their use is continued for a few days there will be no return of the trouble. A. L. Reichert.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, that justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next few years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $5,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit of 6 per cent. A fine investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

PRESSIE.

BY ELLA S. ATHINSON.

JOHN HEAT and his wife sat at the door of their little home Sunday evening. He was baggage master at the town station along the track, and Sunday was his one night off. He had tilted his chair back to the wall of the house, his feet were caught in the rung, and he was dreadly content, sitting there in his shirt sleeves, his wife beside him and the long, pure twilight deepening into languorous, flower-scented night.

"Ver flow'rs is doin' pretty well, Mary," he began, presently. Mary had been crouched on the steps, her elbows on her knees, her face buried in her hands, and she had been so long silent that he wanted to hear her speak, to know if she were weeping.

"Oh, yes," she answered, without enthusiasm.

There were no tears in her voice, but the tone was hopelessly dreary.

"Ver 'sturtiums ain't blowed yit," he continued, with a wish to enliven her.

"No, jist buddin'."

"An' the sweet peas?" with a movement toward the window where the thrifty vines were climbing up their taut white strings.

"They'll be out in a week," and then the silence grew around them again.

"There's the down express," John volunteered after a long pause. A puff of smoke rose over the cutting beyond the bridge, the headlight leaped into sight, the whistle screeched its warning and the train thundered by, its window lights shooting in and out as the curve like sparks tossed on a hurricane.

"There they go," Mary said, curiously, "comin' here an' goin' there, seein' things an' people, an' enjoyin' themselves, an' we jist stick here in the one place like the boulders over on the roadside."

Her tone was hard, the inflection was a complaining one.

"I guess you git pretty lonely, some days," John ventured, letting his chair down on its front legs, and putting his hand on his wife's shoulder in a half clumsy caress.

"Oh! it's awful, John," she said, suddenly, takes off her guard by the tenderness, "when I've washed an' cleaned myself an' there ain't nothin' more to do. 'Tain't but what I could do huttin' or sewin' for winter, but I can't get the things to do with. Then the trains keep goin' by, an' I hate the people who kin go to places. I'd go crazy mind, if I didn't do somethin', so I allus go an' scrub up the kitchen floor. It works off them feelin's, and some days I do it marnin's an' afternoons too."

"Why don't you go over an' set with Jim Lawson's wife?" John suggested.

"I don't like her," Mary answered, promptly, "for she's allus braggin' 'bout her babies."

"How many her they got?" asked the husband, carelessly.

"Four," the childless woman at his side whispered.

Mary had been a talloress before she was married. She was ambitious beyond her fellow-workers, and this was her needle, quick with her tongue, and she dreamed of a future far different than the life of John Brey's wife. Each ten hours a day at a sewing-machine was upon a woman. John could her to marry him, and she thought the little brown house would be a paradise. She kept the rooms spotlessly neat, she planted and tended the flowers, and helped her husband in the starting of their garden vegetables were. She had been married four years. John's salary was no higher, the house began to look a little shabby here and there and Mary pined for companionship and grew bitter as sheenie her silence of life being slowly strangled one by one. John was away most of the time. When he came home, he wanted his supper, or his paper, and his wife dropped all her nerry ways. She thought he despised them and in that she was wrong. He liked to be amused, but he made the mistake of accepting without thanks. She thought him cold and irresponsive. She thought him changed. It had come to him before that Sunday evening that she was unhappy. Now he brooded over it. Sometimes he reproached himself more often, as poor human nature goes, he was out of patience with her. Day after day, when he went home for his noonday dinner, the little kitchen smelled of soapsuds, and the floor was damp from scrubbing. Often it was so at night. He knew his wife was discontented.

"You'll wear that floor out of me first," ; retort. And John went away ; kissing her good-by.

enough to make a man stay out some," he muttered, and then he rain stop, and half-mechanically an to run. It had only stopped for orders and began to move before he came up. Looking along the track, he saw a woman catch the rail of the last car and swing herself on. When he reached the place, he saw a curious black object on the bank. He jumped the ditch and took hold of it. It was a basket. He opened it, beneath the red remaphore light, started back with muttered words, shut the lids tight down, and ran down to his house. Mary was wiping the tea things.

"What's up?" she asked.

"See here," he said, lifting both lids of the old-fashioned market basket. A little baby lay there, blinking, squirming and crying a little.

"Whereuld you get that, John Brey?" He told her.

"Take it back," she cried. "I'll have no girl's trust around me."

"Hadn't we better keep it till morn.in'? I'll let the constable or somebody know about it. Then they kin take it away."

"Well," Mary assented, "an' I'll take it out; it's all crowded up there."

John went off to his work, and Mary's tea dishes stood while she lifted out the tiny baby and tended to it. There were clothes and food in the basket and a note, beseeching the finder to care for it three weeks' old baby girl. Mary wept and crooned by turns over the wee, dark-haired thing, and presently it went to sleep in her arms.

Nine o'clock came, ten, half-past ten and still Mary sat with the baby in her arms. John came in, and she straightened somewhat him to silence.

"WHERE DID YOU GET THAT?"

"Why don't you set it down?" he asked.

"I was waitin' for you to turn down the bed, for she seemed so comfortable cuddled up here I hated to rout her up. Join' the thing myself."

John's boots were noisy, as he stepped about.

"Hadn't ye better go stockin'-footed, ye'll wake her up," suggested Mary. John took the oath of allegiance to the baby unreservedly and drew off his shoes.

"Ain't she a picture?" asked the wife, when she had nestled the wee thing lower.

"I guess you liked holdin' that baby a your arms," John began, and Mary laid her face on his shoulder and cried.

"You'll kinder hate to give it up, won't ye? An' the constable's goin' to see about it to-morrer. I was down there. That's what kep' me so late. There don't seem to be any portickler place for to put it, but he'll find out."

Mary was silent for a little, and then the baby stirred. She hurried over to it, shaded the lamp and tiptoed back to John.

"Can't we keep her?" Mary began, wistfully; "her little clothes was in the basket and her food in a tin can, an' this note says about her."

John read the note, spelling it out, and shoving the meaning slowly.

"I guess we keep her if we want to," he said, judicially, and then, eagerly: "What'll we call her?"

"I was thinkin' 'Express 'ud be a good name," Mary answered.

"It's too long," John objected, "an' it's unhandy to say."

"Well, Pressie for short, an' Pressie's a real pretty name. It's kinder 'propriate to call her 'omethin' like that," Mary went on, for Mary was romantic in her notions.

"Your little mite," John said, solemnly, looking steadily at the same place in the floor for several minutes.

Mary crept up to him and sat on his knee. "I didn't know what was wrong with me, nor what I wanted," she sobbed, "but, John, if I can keep that baby, there ain't nothin' I want. She won't cost much, John."

"No, it won't take much to bond her, an' I guess Pressie'll her to stay," John made answer, and then they rose and moved together to the door and out into the starlight.

John was moist about the eyes and happy at his heart. He took a new and strange delight in everything, in his precan and future, his home, the sky, and his wife beside him. And they planned and wondered what Pressie would be like when she grew up. They said one to the other what company she would be, and how careful they would have to be about the track.

"I'll make a gate for the door," John said, and he looked around for timber as if he thought he ought to do it to-morrow.

"Ye won't her time to scrub yer floor so much now," John's tone was mischievous, as he said it.

But Mary only sighed, a long, deep sigh of contentment. Her childless misery had passed away. She had put her lips to the cup of motherhood.—S. Y. Independent.

NEW FLOURING MILL.

Red Lake Falls People Interested in Crookston Project.

The Crookston Journal says the first move looking to the building of an important addition to that city's manufacturing industries was made yesterday when ground was surveyed and a location determined for a large flouring mill plant.

Negotiations have been in progress for some time between Marcus Johnson, of St. Paul, representing himself and certain other stockholders in the city of Crookston, for the purchase of a site for a flouring mill, the location desired being the property owned by J. E. Morrisey fronting on Robert street and the Great Northern right of way opposite the depot. The negotiations have been closed by the purchase of the property and the new mill will be located thereon. The site is one of the most advantageous in the city. It has a frontage on the Great Northern right of way of 150 feet, 200 feet on the river and 100 on Robert street.

The plan is to erect a four story mill fronting on Robert street that shall be equipped with everything modern in the way of machinery, and will have a capacity of grinding 300 barrels daily. The plant will be so arranged that the output can be increased to 1,000 barrels by making some minor changes and additions.

Besides the mill proper the company proposes to put up a large elevator on the right of way of the Great Northern and expect to store wheat to supply the mill several months so that there will be no shortage at any time, and a continuous run will be insured.

S. S. Siverston, of Red Lake Falls, who has been associated with Mr. Johnson in his milling business at the latter point will be the representative of the management here. The business of the new plant will be conducted under the name of the Crookston Milling Co., and a corporation will be formed under that name.

Ed. Coenen Married.

The many friends in this city of the young man mentioned in the following item will be pleased to extend their heartiest congratulations. The Thief River Press says:

"Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents in this city occurred the marriage of Mr. Ed. B. Coenen, of Brainerd, to Miss Emma Gunderson, of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. I. T. Aastad and was witnessed by a number of relatives and immediate friends of the contracting. Both the bride and groom are well known in this city where they have a host of friends who wish them happiness and prosperity in their journey through life. They departed Thursday for their future home at Brainerd where Mr. Coenen is employed as a cigar maker."

Aluminum as a Whetstone.

Though aluminum has been in quite general use for years, it has just been discovered that it has splendid qualities as a whetting agent. Knives sharpened on aluminum have a finer edge than can be secured on a high-graded whetstone or even a razor strop. The aluminum, on being rubbed, develops a sort of greasy substance like fine oil. As the world grows older the commonest things are found to have properties never attributed to them. Golden grain belt beer, for instance, is one of the finest tonics in existence, although it is commonly used only as a table delicacy. It seems hard for some people to believe anything that tastes good can be of benefit to the health. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson Crookston.

WISDOM OF THE EAST.

Some Laws About Marriage and Other Things.

Do not judge a customer by the clothes he wears, he may not have paid for them. Be courteous to all men. The humblest of your neighbors may sit on your jury one day.

A business man who finds it necessary to attend a daily noon prayer meeting is either abnormally virtuous or his piety is of a kind that needs a good deal of stimulus to keep it going.

The lunch is for the thirsty; not for the hungry.

Many a man is grateful at being told a piece of news until he is supplied to keep a secret. Then does it weigh like a millstone around his neck, or a wife upon his knees.

Some are grateful though possessing neither wealth, nor health nor high station because they have illustrious ancestors. It is a harmless kind of pride, for who would be cruel enough to ask them if such "descent" did not also imply degeneracy?

Many a man who never complained of poverty, complaineth bitterly when he hath grown rich enough to be assessed for taxes.

When Adam was expelled for eating the apple he blamed "the woman." She said naught, but years afterwards she invented pie, and the worst of these is apple pie.

The truly good man may love his enemies, but he taketh a hermit living alone on an inaccessible island to love his neighbors.

Woman's second is he in whose tent dwell both his mother and his wife's mother; for even tho' he gain not Paradise, yet shall he fear not Gehenna.

In choosing a wife disdain not youth nor beauty; for these are things which time will cure.

Love not a woman for her riches; but loving first the riches, thou shalt learn in time to love her for their sake.

There are two ways of missing the miseries of matrimony: one is by not getting married; and the other by not being born.

Pay as you go, but not if you intend going for good.

Boast not of your wealth; but let humility curb your tongue when the assessor cometh around.

Politeness between husband and wife costeth nothing. Were it otherwise the virtue would be even rarer than it is now.

Be diligent in keeping your accounts. It is better to charge an item twice than to forget to charge it once. That is the true principle of double entry.

Do not put the best figs at the top of the crate. Have just as good a layer on the bottom also; for there are sometimes evil minded persons who open the package at that end.

No man knoweth what true happiness is until he getteth married; then is the knowledge rather a sweet memory than a new boon.

Dispute not with thy neighbor if his hens decimate thy garden, but bid them welcome and give them shelter. So shalt thou have fresh-laid eggs for thy breakfast.

Desertion a Felony.

The state legislature will probably make a husband's desertion of his family a crime. The Senate has already passed Senate Wilson's bill making desertion of wife and family a felony. He may be indicted, arrested and tried as other criminals. After conviction, the prisoner may secure a stay of execution by filing a bond for the support of his family. The bill passed the Senate by fifty-two to nothing. This correctly outlines how the public will regard such a law. It will be unanimously approved.

THE COST OF AN EDUCATION NOT AN ARBITER OF SALARY

By WILLIAM E. CURTIS.....

THE AMOUNT OF MONEY EXPENDED UPON A YOUNG MAN'S EDUCATION IS NOT ALWAYS A FAIR MEASURE OF HIS USEFULNESS.

A college bred young man, like every other candidate for success in life, is worth exactly what he earns, and he usually receives it. Good men are scarce, BUT THE FACT THAT A YOUNG MAN'S PARENTS PAID $5,000 FOR HIS EDUCATION DOES NOT QUALIFY HIM TO EDIT A NEWSPAPER OR COMMAND AN ARMY OR MANAGE A RAILROAD OR A MERCANTILE ESTABLISHMENT OR ARGUE A CASE IN THE SUPREME COURT OR ACT AS A LEADER IN POLITICS. Those duties require skill, judgment and experience, which, however, may be acquired by a college bred man more readily than by one who lacks education, and in the race for such positions he has every advantage, while his competitor who has not been so fortunate is handicapped. For that reason EVERY YOUNG MAN WHO CAN DO SO SHOULD GO THROUGH COLLEGE, no matter what occupation he intends to follow. The mental and moral training, the information acquired and the social advantages a college man enjoys are all in his favor.

A WASHINGTON PARTY.

Mesdames Marshall and Siverston Delightfully Entertain the Ladies.

One of the most delightful social events of the season was the reception given by Mrs. E. F. Marshall and Mrs. S. M. Siverston Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Marshall. About seventy ladies, including a number from Thief River Falls were most delightfully entertained from three o'clock until seven. The guests were received by Master Donald Marshall in full George Washington attire, and indeed the great general himself could not have done the honors more gracefully than did Master Donald. Little Helen Siverston directed the ladies to the room in waiting for the wraps, and in her quaint white gown of eighteenth century pattern with the typical Martha Washington cap, she made a most charming appearance.

The spacious parlors and dining room were tastefully decorated in flags, bunting and potted plants. Shortly after the guests had all arrived they were invited to engage in a search for hidden candy hearts, and the rooms were soon turned topsy-turvy in the eager seach for the tiny candies. Then followed a very interesting contest, "a penny for your thoughts," when answers to twenty-five queries were to be found on the face of a penny, each lady being supplied with the "resourceful" penny neatly tied to a card on which the answers were to be written. After this contest the ladies were seated at tables, each table supplied with a generous pan of peanuts and each lady given a hat pin with which to take the peanuts from the pan. One minute was allowed for each effort, then the two having taken the most peanuts from the pan proceeded to the next higher table, etc. Beautiful prizes were awarded to the winners in each of these lively contests, and almost equally attractive were the booby prizes. After the presentation of these a most delicious luncheon was served.

The favors were tiny hatchets of parchment on which a cluster of cherries in water colors were painted. The color scheme, red, white and blue, was carried out in every way possible, and every appointment throughout the entire afternoon could not have been more delicate and attractive.

A Successful Band Concert.

The third of the winter series of monthly concerts by the band was given at the Metropolitan Monday evening, and while the two former efforts were given much praise the concert of that evening was more than enthusiastically received. The program consisted of seven numbers and from the time the first note was played until the end of the last piece the audience gave the closest attention and accorded liberal applause. The "Brilliant Star" polka, solo for baritone, was beautifully executed by J. B. Armstrong, and the audience was hardly willing for him to quit even after he had played it the second time.

Of the band and the concert there is nothing but the highest of praise and more than ordinary credit is due Bandmaster Clint O. Smith for the manner in which he has brought the band to so proficient a state in so short a time. The professor has worked faithfully to accomplish this end, and his work is showing itself in each concert before the public. It has required more than average ability to make such a musical organization as we now have, and Prof. Smith has won the esteem and confidence of the people in his efforts.

The dance at the conclusion of the concert was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed, the music by Prof. Freund's orchestra being pronounced of the top-notch order.

A Legacy of the Grip.

Is often a run-down system. Weakness, nervousness, lack of appetite, energy and ambition, with disordered liver and kidneys often follow an attack of this wretched disease. The greatest need then is Electric Bitters, the splendid tonic, blood purifier and regulator of stomach, liver and kidneys. Thousands have proved that they wonderfully strengthen the nerves, build up the system, and restore to health and good spirits after an attack of grip. If suffering, try them. PROFESSIONAL BRETHREN

By GEORGE E. WALSH.

He was either had at heart, a criminal by instinct, or he had a weak will that had been perverted by others when young and unsuspecting. In everything else he seemed a model of strength, self command and intelligence. Why should he be so helpless in the respect?

Since that first memorable meeting at the dead of night in the Stetson mansion no word or sign had ever passed between us which indicated that we knew anything of the other's criminal tendencies. Out of a sense of honor I kept my part of the agreement, and for some reason he respected my reticence about the subject. Nevertheless I longed to break the ice between us. If I could once more meet him when robbing a house, I would have the liberty to speak, and I would not again bind myself to silence.

Admiration for his skill, love for him as a man when not engaged in his professional work and a sense of disgust at his deceptive, double existence produced strangely conflicting emotions in me. I desired to hunt him as crime should be stoned for and that if he should ever attempt to shoot Miss Stetson I would reveal all I knew to her. Gradually his moral disease seemed more terrible to me than his physical. As a leper he was suffering for the sins of another, but as a criminal he was pursuing dangers and pleasures of his own free will which in time would entail suffering upon others.

A wave of moral reform swept over me for a time and possessed me so completely that I decided to make amends for my past deeds by trying to convert my master from his evil ways. If I could accomplish this, I should feel that my life had not been spent in vain.

Meanwhile I lived to the fear that he would be discovered. I knew from the reports that somebody was conducting a systematic series of burglaries in the neighborhood, and I did not hesitate to attach the blame to my master. Detectives were constantly prowling around at night to capture the robbers, but all their skill seemed to be without avail. A better testimony to the ability of my master could not be given.

CHAPTER XIV.

WHEN I reached the conclusion that something ought to be done to save Mr. Goddard from him self, I began planning the best course to pursue. I would have to meet him at night under circumstances similar to our first meeting, and then I would have the liberty to speak to him. To accomplish this I watched him every night, often sitting up until nearly daybreak to see if he left the house. For nearly a week I followed this course, and I could assert that he had not left his bed after midnight.

On the seventh night he had an appointment to meet Dr. Squires at my office, and, feeling worn out with my unsuccessful vigils, I retired early and enjoyed a sound night's sleep.

That night a big robbery was committed not five miles from the house, and the following morning everybody was talking about it. When I heard the news, a terrible suspicion seized me. My master was using his alleged appointments with the doctor as a means to throw me off the track. I tried to trace out the facts of the various robberies, and I imagined that I could establish a coincidence between them and Mr. Goddard's visits to Dr. Squires.

All that day my master was indolent and worn out, as usual, and I instantly attributed it now to his work of the preceding night and not to any poison which the doctor was administering to him.

When this light dawned clearly upon my mind, I knew exactly what to do. I slept soundly and peacefully during the next few nights, but about ten days later when my master announced that he had another appointment with Dr. Squires I prepared to spend the night following mine.

He left the house about 8 o'clock. To my surprise, he did not take his horse, but walked leisurely down the road toward the old haunted mansion that the doctor had so long occupied. I followed him at a respectful distance, but he did not seem nervous or at all suspicious. He walked carelessly along, without once looking behind him.

He reached his destination about half past 9 and walked slightly up toward the house and entered. This did not astonish me, for I supposed that he really did go to the doctor's and probably submitted to some sort of treatment. His ambitious marauding would begin after he left to go home.

I cautiously approached the house and tried to get a glimpse of the interior, but the blinds and shades were so closely drawn that I failed to get a glimpse of even the light. I contented myself with examining the burglar alarm, for in some future time I might find it useful to unfasten it from a window without giving an alarm.

The minutes passed slowly. Not a sound or movement from inside could be heard. Accustomed to waiting in p ce for a long time, I did not find it so difficult. I refreshed my v various ways to keep from falling keep. A few moments of sleep spoil everything for me.

ast have been shortly after midnight when I heard the front door creak on its hinges. I was concealed behind some shrubbery at the time, where I could command a good view of the entrance to the house. The door, I knew, was opening, but no ray of light streamed from the inside. The whole house was, in fact, wrapped in darkness.

I saw the shadows of two men on the front porch, and by their general outlines I knew that one was my master and the other Dr. Squires. Neither spoke for some time. Then I heard the doctor say in a low, muffled voice:

"Now, Charles, the house is three miles below, and you ought to reach it in half an hour."

"Yes; I'll coach it in half no hour."

"You must be extra cautious, for there are many detectives around," the doctor continued.

"I shall be very careful."

"Then go and return as soon as possible."

They separated. The doctor stole noiselessly back into the house and my master walked stealthily down the gravelly drive toward the main highway.

His manner had completely changed. Every movement he made indicated suspicion and alertness. He was not nervous, but every faculty was strained. He was now the professional burglar on the scent. The slight breaking of a twig or the climbing of a pebble, I knew, would arouse and alarm him.

My prey was not an easy one to follow. He would stop and turn upon his tracks in the most unexpected way. His ears and eyes appeared gifted with wonderful powers of sensation, I had to increase the distance between us to avoid detection.

I managed to keep him in sight for about a mile, and then he suddenly gave me the slip. In some respects I, the master he had dodged away from me and disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him. Chagrined at thus being thrown off the track, I put all my energies at work to regain the lost trail. For two hours I wandered around, vainly trying to catch a glimpse of the man. I became so reckless that a train more exposes my person to him if he would have discovered his whereabouts to me.

Finally I gave it up in disgust. I seated myself under a tree near the highway and reflected. Certainly I was baffled for the night. I was on the point of returning home when the sounds of horses' hoofs occurred to me. The two were evidently engaged in the same criminal practices, and they would probably pass again that road somewhere.

With this thought uppermost in my mind I cautiously retraced my steps to the doctor's house. Once I thought that I had discovered my master again by accident, but upon closer observation I found that I was on the very point of accosting a detective. An arrest at such a time of the night might lead to unpleasant complications, and so I remained half an hour hidden in the bushes until the man had disappeared.

When I reached the old mansion, everything was as dark and gloomy as when I left it to follow my master. There was not the sign of a living being around. I cautiously started to walk up the gravelly drive, and the crunching noise of my boots sounded clear and distinct on the night air. I just had time to drop down behind some shrubbery before the front door opened and the doctor stood in the shadow of a man seemed to flit out of it. I remained perfectly quiet, not daring to move or scarcely breathe. Undoubtedly the noise made by my boots had attracted the attention of somebody in the mansion.

I remained in this reclining position for a full half hour. The shadow on the porch remained so perfectly still that I half fancied that it was an illusion or the reflection of some intervening object. But my policy has ever been to make sure of a thing before deciding what course to pursue, and so I recognized the benefit of the doubt and waited patiently. Once or twice I thought of the tales of spirits and ghosts related about the old mansion and of how they walked through the premises every midnight and made free with all earthly occupants. This did not disturb me, however, for I knew that somebody besides spirits was awake around the house that night.

I was getting tired of watching that immovable figure on the porch, and my eyelids were winking and blinking spasmodically when my ears caught a sound directly back of me. I did not dare move my head at all, but the thought of the bloodthirsty Danes suddenly made me cold and clammy. I imagined I detected the gutter of their feet on the drive, and I grasped my revolver tightly, determined to make a desperate stand for my life.

A moment later my feelings were considerably relieved. The steps approached nearer and nearer—softly, stealthily, delicate steps that might have been made by a child. Then the figure of a man loomed up within three yards of me and moved swiftly toward the house.

But in that momentary glimpse I caught the features of my master. In his hands he carried a clumsy bundle or article, which I failed to make out. Then for the first time the shadow on the porch moved. The two met at the top of the steps and quickly disappeared in the house, the door closing noiselessly behind them.

I would have given much just then to have had the power to penetrate behind those wooden walls or to have raised the shades and looked into the doctor's office, where I knew that a light must be burning. But I felt that my quest was ended for the night and that further work would be useless. After waiting around another half hour I quietly stole out of the yard and started home to reflect over the strange occurrences of the night.

CHAPTER XV.

MY opinion of Dr. Squires did not improve any after the disclosures just related, and I was naturally inclined to lay all the blame upon him. I thought that he had misled my master in some way or that he had a price over his head and forced him to do his will. I took this view of the question for several days, upholding my master and reviling the doctor, attributing all sorts of evil things to him. Certainly he was as great a criminal as Mr. Goddard, and if one was ever caught in the act of robbery the other would have to be implicated. I felt that the doctor was scooping the easy part of the job, staying home to receive the stolen goods while my master ran the risk of arrest and imprisonment.

"There are many detectives around."

While I was busily satisfied in cloaking over the stolen goods, I began to think of returning. I put the articles back in their places just as I had found them and drew the cover over them so as not to excite any suspicion. Then I left the room after one longing look behind, locked the door and retreated up the ladder to the cupola. I could not fasten the staple in as securely as before, but by means of a long piece of small boles to detect any ray of light. But apparently nobody stood in that part of the house, and the noise had done no harm. I tried the trapdoor, and found that it was fastened, and by prying it up with my eshel I managed to raise it sufficiently for entering me.

An old ladder led from the trapdoor to the hall below. I tested it with my foot before venturing my whole weight on it, for I was not certain whether it was strong enough to hold me. Then I quietly dropped down into the hall.

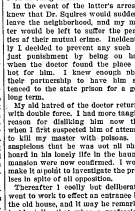
At last I was actually in the doctor's house, but whether I would find what I wanted was another question. Before attempting any investigation I made sure of where the doctor and his old servant slept. Their sleeping rooms, I discovered, were on the ground floor. They opened into each other, and both doors were standing on the jar.

This gave me the two upper stories all to myself, and I began my investigation with a quiet mind. The first room I entered was empty, with the exception of a few old clothes, bits of carpet and discarded furniture. The second was furnished as for a bedroom, but very little furniture was in it. The third and fourth were disposed of in a few minutes because of their barren condition.

The large back bedroom which overlooked the wood was next explored, and the key missing. With fingers all of a tremble in anticipation of a great discovery I proceeded to pick the lock. Fortunately it was a common lock which could be put little skill to open. The spring was a little stiff and I had to exercise it worked easily, and I threw the lock back in its socket without causing anything more than a slight rattling.

Then I entered the room and closed the door behind me. I flashed the light from my lantern on every side, taking in the whole room in one circular sweep, and for a moment I was disappointed. There was nothing visible in the room except a pile of furniture covering. It looked as if furniture had been stored in the room and then covered over with the cloth to keep the dust from accumulating on the articles.

But why should the doctor have such fine furniture stored away in this



I soon disclosed to view a collection of upstairs room? I raised one end of the coverings and found a clue to the enshlement. I could almost have shouted in my surprise. Throwing back the cloth I proceeded to make an inventory of the floor and tables. In short, there was everything that a robber could covet from a house and carry away in a bundle.

Besides all this strange accumulation of miscellaneous goods, I felt that I was standing in a dangerous place, for at any moment my return would set hesitate an instant to kill me if he once discovered my presence. There were the old gotten gains of both my master and the doctor, and either one would be provoked and frightened enough to take my life if he once saw me in the apartment. Nevertheless I was so fascinated by the glittering heaps of gold and silver and precious jewels that I could not refrain from examining and handling each one individually. I must have spent nearly half an hour in doing so, for some of the pieces rolled out of the heaps and fell upon the floor. But the fever of excitement which possessed me could not be controlled. In all my life I had never before come across so much plunder. Although nominally a mere butler, I knew that my master had probably one to two and half hundred thousand dollars' worth of stolen goods in that room, and the doctor's share was probably as much more.

I believe for a short time I was bewildered and half crazy. I know that I scattered myself on the floor and took up one article after another, holding it up to the light to be sure of its genuineness and then pressing it closely against my face.

Then I filled my pockets with them and tried to estimate the wealth that I could carry away, although I had no intention of removing a single article from the house. My plan was to retrace my steps so that the doctor would not know that his storehouse had been visited by a stranger. I had made my way to corner him or at least to bring him into my power by holding his secret over his head.

When I was finally satisfied in cloaking over the stolen goods, I began to think of returning. I put the articles back in their places just as I had found them and drew the cover over them so as not to excite any suspicion. Then I left the room after one longing look behind, locked the door and retreated up the ladder to the cupola. I could not fasten the staple in as securely as before, but by means of a long piece of wire I succeeded in attaching it loosely into the door so that nobody would enter the room without my knowledge of the cupola. This I judged rarely occurred, and I thought I was safe in leaving matters as they were. I climbed down the piazza post and once more found myself on the green lawn without having aroused any of the inmates of the house.

My night's adventure had been successful, and I retired to my bed feeling that I possessed a secret which made me the equal of either my master or the doctor in power. At any time I might use this knowledge to ruin them or force them to do my bidding. Altogether I thought I was a pretty lucky dog.

CHAPTER XVI.

KNOWING beyond doubt now the double dealing of both my master and Dr. Squires. I found myself sympathizing with Miss Stetson almost unconsciously pleasing to save her from other one. It may seem a little strange that one of my character should find fault with anybody following the same line of business that had occupied my attention, but I saw that the reins had been broken and that they were dangling dangerously under the horse's feet.

Realizing that I would not check the runaway by grasping him by the bridle, I decided to make a desperate effort to unseat the rider. I rode her as calmly as I could to discourage her feet from the stirrups, and when I gave her the word to throw her weight toward me.

Then, swinging my horse close up to the side of the runaway, so that for a moment my leg was jammed between their two bodies, I reached out my left arm and caught Miss Stetson by the waist. I knew that her animal would be likely to do, and I braced myself for a violent effort.

As soon as the runaway felt the collision against his side he turned sharply to the left and ran into the gutter, where he stumbled and broke his leg. But as he swerved away from me I clung with all my might to the woman. She partly jumped, and I partly dragged her to the back of my own horse.

long, for I could scarcely see anything for a time. Then I heard a faint groan, and when she finally opened her eyes I was more relieved than I had been when I picked her up from the bed of the mud runaway. She closed them immediately, but I detected a look of gratitude in them that repaid me for all my trouble and danger.

I found myself quite out of my depth on the grassy bank and said that she was all right, I succeeded myself from further expressions of gratitude by pretending to go back to look after the horse. I observed that the runaway was a kind to receive thanks from any one. It always embarrassed me and left me speechless.

"Your horse has broken a leg," I reported when I returned.

"Poor fellow, he must be killed, I suppose," she said. "But aren't you hurt?"

"No," I answered shortly.

"I almost wish you were so I could have my gratitude for you, when you back to health," she said, looking me in the eyes.

I turned my head away and answered inadequately.

"Can you ride my horse back home or shall I go for a carriage?"

"I can walk first said, "if you will lead me your arm."

I took my horse by the bridle while she leaned heavily upon my arm all the way to her house. Of course the adventure was quite delicious in a way, but it was embarrassing to one of my position as valet. I dreaded it that she made me her slave from that day onward.

She persisted in talking about my brave deed all the way home. First I tried to change the subject by making irrelevant replies and suggestions and then by total silence. But she could not be stopped or turned to another subject. For the tenth time she said earnestly and carnestly:

"I wish you would tell me how I can repay you. Isn't there something you want or that I can do for you?"

I remained silent a moment and then said shortly:

"Yes, ma'am: there is something."

of her attracting any one who could help her.

The horse was panting and snorting with the violence of his exertions, and by the way he swung his head and neck by the reins he was liable to cut up any dangerous trick to unseat his rider. As they approached within a few rods of me I caught a glimpse of the white face of Miss Stetson. She was nearly overcome with fright and exertion, and her appealing eyes stirred up every latent power within me.

I let the raging horse pass, for any attempt to stop him with my hand and career would result in his dragging the rider to the ground. Then, stepping up my own horse, I started in pursuit. I shouted a few words of encouragement to Miss Stetson and bent myself to the task before me.

Fortunately I was mounted on the finest animal in Mr. Goddard's stables, a powerful, heavy stallion. He seemed to enter into the spirit of the race in an instant, and with long, sweeping strides he slowly overtook the runaway.

Inch by inch and then foot by foot we overhauled the nearly spent horse ahead. The noise of a pursuing animal seemed to stimulate the runaway to renewed exertions at first, but it did not last long. I was soon within five feet of his tail; then my stallion's nose was even with it, and finally we galloped along just abreast of the crazy animal.

Again I spoke a few words to Miss Stetson, warning her to be prepared for any sudden swerve to the right. She could not look at me, but she grasped the pommel of her saddle with determination. I saw that the reins had been broken and that they were dangling dangerously under the horse's feet.

WHY?

The reason Our Private Cough Cure relieves coughs in one minute, is because it acts first on the mucous membrane over which the cough irritation is the result, and then on the nerves, thereby removing the cause of cough, pain and inflammation. It is the One Effective Cough Cure. It penetrates the disease system, and stops all fever pulses, but it gives nature a chance to throw off the disease poisons which poison the blood and lungs. Opens the air passages and promotes unrestricted breathing. Causes the blood to become rich, mineral supply of oxygen, thus enlivening the pulmonary organs with health and strength. Our Private Cough Cure contains three healing balsams against the three great diseases. Asthma, Bronchitis, La Grippe. Cold on the Lungs and all Pulmonary Complaints that are curable are quickly cured by the use of

She looked at me inquiringly.

"I just want you to trust me and to believe in me," I continued. "Some day I might make a strange request of you. All I ask is that you will have confidence in me and believe that it is all for your good. It may seem very strange to you at the time, but I assure you it will be all for the best and you will thank me for it afterward."

"What a peculiar!" she said, smiling.

"Yes, it is peculiar, but it is all I ask of you."

"Well, you shall have your wish. I will do whatever you ask of me at any time."

"All right. I shall remind you of it some day."

We stood at her gate. I would not go in, but excused myself on the ground that it was necessary to go back with somebody and attend to her wounded horse.

CHAPTER XVII.

I WAS a hero in the eyes of Miss Stetson and my master after the runaway. Mr. Goddard was not long in finding me in his congratulations and praise of me than the one I had saved from almost certain death. It pained me to see that his affection for her was genuine and yet not strong enough to induce him to give up his double life. I believe that if anything serious had happened to her he would have mourned for her as much as ever man did for woman. Nevertheless he continued to practice secretly a profession that would cause pain worse than death if she discovered it.

Realizing that matters were reaching a climax, I determined to make a bold stroke and try to induce my master to turn away from his evil ways. I had firm faith in him outside of his one weakness. If he was once confronted with his crimes and warned that an exposure would ruin him for life, he might relent. There was a possibility of saving him from himself and from the doctor's influence, I had the power within me to do it. I could face him and Dr. Squires with their crimes and threaten them with exposure if the latter did not immediately leave the place and the former promise to reform.

It might prove a risky experiment to permit such a man to marry a sweet, pure woman like Miss Stetson, but there was the possibility of a unhappy married life, while there would be nothing but misery and unhappiness for both if my master was exposed and punished for his crimes. Choose as I would, I considered the lesser of two evils. I decided to make the experiment.

A sense of honor still kept me from approaching my master and telling him all that I knew. I had given him my word that I would never mention meeting him in any other guise than that of a gentleman, so, in other words, our accidental meeting as common burglars was to be blotted from my mind unless we were thrown together again under similar circumstances.

I now determined to create those circumstances to suit my own purpose.

Several days after this when I learned that he had an engagement at Dr Squires' in the evening I made preparations to follow him again. This time I was posted so that I would not give him the opportunity to escape from me in the darkness.

It was a fitful, moonlight night. The moon came up about 11 o'clock, but the clouds in the heavens partly shut it from view. It east wavering, vanishing shadows upon the calm earth which were exceedingly aggravating. They were so deceptive in appearance that I felt my task would be doubly difficult.

My master left the house at the usual time and proceeded to walk leisurely toward the doctor's. I followed him at some distance, not making any special effort to keep him in view. I knew that he was not anticipating any shadowing, and we both made our way to the old mansion according to our own notions.

I hurried a little toward the end of the walk to make sure that he entered the house. I noticed a vantage point just in time to see the door open and close behind him. Then I amused myself the best way I could for several hours.

Shortly after midnight I roused myself to action. The time was approaching when I must put into play my skill. The house was all dark, and no signs came from it to indicate the presence of a living soul anywhere around it.

It was a full hour before the door opened. Then by the aid of Beaumont's white light I caught a glimpse of my master and the doctor. They were consulting together in the shadow of the porch. I saw the letter pass down the road, but I could not understand anything he said.

A few moments later my master left him and glided rather than walked down the drive toward the highway. I waited him, concealed in some bushes near the gate. His manner was quick, nervous, energetic—so unlike his natural habits. The professional burglar was aroused in him—a second self which had been carefully cultivated and developed.

He soon moved down the highway cautiously, watching, listening and anticipating some unknown danger. I kept within ten yards of him, but always ready to increase the distance between us on the slightest sign from him that he intended to double upon his tracks. I was familiar with his tactics this time sufficiently to enable me to be prepared for the most unexpected movement.

Never did a detective shadow a criminal with more keenness than I did my master that night. He led me a chase two miles down the road; then without apparent reason he struck across the fields to one of the side roads which ran parallel with the main highway. A mile down this brought him to a fork in the road formed by the meeting of an old, deserted lane. Into this he turned his silent footsteps. Five hundred yards down it a small, pacing brook crossed the lane. It was too broad to jump over, but only a few feet deep.

My master removed his shoes quickly and then plunged into the cool water, but instead of crossing he waded a long distance down stream and then regained the same shore again. I understood his maneuver. It was to throw bloodhounds off the trail and to confuse any detective who might try to trace him back to the doctor's house.

I smiled at the trick and waited quietly for him to replace his shoes. Then once more he started on his journey. This time he ceased to pursue a zigzag course, but made a bee line for a large house not a hundred yards from the brook. This I knew was the scene of his night's work.

The house was a modern one and stood on a slight eminence overlooking the surrounding country. It was owned by an intimate friend of the Stetson and Goddard families, Mr. Jaimson by name—and it occurred to me as being very peculiar that my master should attempt to rob it. But what could not be expected of him after he had looted the Stetson home, the very home of the one whom he loved? Could such insensate be ever overlooked? Could such a man be reformed? For a few moments my resolutions wavered, and I thought of returning and telling all that I knew to Miss Stetson and let her decide the fate of the two men.

But a moment later I found myself pursuing my game with renewed determination. He had actually entered the house through one of the basement windows. I waited a reasonable length of time before following him. Then when everything was quiet I climbed through the window at the risk of my own life, for I realized that my form was silhouetted against the outside light, while my master might be hidden in the darkness within.

But I gained the interior of the basement without accident. I searched around for an open door, and, finding it, I walked quietly into a larger room. I knew that my master's first point would be the dining room, and I boldly climbed the stairs leading to it from the basement. Once there I heard the slight rattle of silver and caught the quick, flashing ray of his dark lantern. Then I concealed myself behind some curtains and waited.

I decided that it would be better to let him finish his job and then confront him with his booty in his hands. There would then be no question of his intentions.

He passed from the dining room into the library and then moved silently upstairs. In spite of his soft steps and quiet manner I could occasionally catch a sound which indicated to me where he was. I knew that he had been awake, his presence would have been detected.

I kept myself pretty well concealed behind some curtain or portiere, for I decided last at any moment he might flash the rays of his lantern in my direction and detect me. I was thus concealed from view in a small alcove opening upon the upper hall when I was startled by a peculiar noise.

As a professional burglar myself I knew the meaning nature of that sound. It was the distinct click of a revolver. I peered through the curtains to determine what it meant. As I did so there was another click, this time lower and less distinct. This was caused by the pressing of an electric button. The next moment the whole house was hastily lighted.

I stepped back into the alcove with trembling knees. Five minutes of the house had been aroused, and my master as well as myself was caught. Through the filmy curtains I caught a glimpse of a dark shadow flash through the hall toward the front stairs. I knew that it was my master and that he was making a bold dash for freedom.

At almost the same moment I heard a door open and a loud voice exclaim:

"Stop or I'll shoot!"

I imagined that my master did not obey, for the next moment two pistol shots rang through the house, followed by the loud shuffling of feet and the banging of doors.

Had a burglar been enacted within sound of me or had my master escaped?

I waited and listened, expectantly and anxiously. The people of the house were evidently assembled in the hall below. They were too frightened to do anything. Then matters calmed down a little, and I caught snatches of their conversation.

"The basement window was unopened," somebody said. "He jumped out of that."

"Didn't you hit him, father?" asked a youthful voice which I recognized as that of the fourteen-year-old son of Mr. Jaimson.

"I don't know. Do you see any signs of blood in the basement?"

They went down another flight of stairs, and I would have made a bold dash for liberty then had not the presence of some of the frightened servants in the upper hall prevented me.

Half an hour later they returned upstairs. Fortunately for me no thought of a search for another burglar entered their minds. Mr. Jaimson tried to calm the servants and the ladies by saying:

"Now all go to bed again. There is no more danger. He has left the house, and we are safe for the rest. A burglar never enters a house the second time."

Gradually they separated and returned to their bedrooms. Only the old man and his wife remained in the hall which my hearing. When everything was quiet again, he said:

"Ellen, I recognized the burglar to-night beyond doubt."

"Why, Edward, who was he?" his wife asked quickly.

"You will hardly believe me, Ellen, when I tell you, but it is true. I could not have been mistaken."

Then he lowered his voice and said:

"It was Charles Goddard!"

"Impossible, Edward; impossible! You were excited and could not see well!"

"No, Ellen; there was no mistake. I faced him in the hall and could have shot him dead. But the surprise at meeting him unnerved me. Then I merely tried to wound him and not to kill him when he rushed downstairs."

Their bedroom door closed then, and I heard no more. But what more did I need? I saw the game was up. My master was recognized, and nothing but family friendship could ever induce Mr. Jaimson to hold his secret.

I waited in my concealed place for several hours before daring to venture out. Then as I saw daylight beginning to break I boldly left the alcove, walked downstairs with my shoes in my hand, unfastened one of the parlor windows and dropped out upon the soft grass. I did not stop to close the window, but hurried home in time to get in my room before the servants would be rising.

CHAPTER XVIII.

I WAS tempted to catch a few hours of sleep that morning, but I had difficulty in losing consciousness. When I did forget myself in slumber for a brief time, unpleasant dreams disturbed me, and I awoke with a start.

It was still early in the morning when I dressed and knocked at my master's door. He was sleeping soundly, and I hesitated to rouse him. But I was fearful lest he had been wounded the night before, and I could not leave the house on the mission I had in view until I had ascertained. I shoved his door open and found my master fast asleep. He never looked it at night and asked him if he wished anything.

"No, William; not yet," he replied in a sleepy voice. "I am very tired this morning and shall not get up until lunch time. Have a good lunch for me, and I will be down."

His face was pale, but not more so than usual after his night visits to Dr. Squires.

"There is nothing wrong with you this morning, master," I ventured to remark.

"Why, William, except that I'm very weary and sleepy. Why do you ask?"

He looked inquiringly at me, and I stammered:

"Nothing, only you look pale. I thought maybe you were ill."

"No, I'm not sick—merely tired. Leave me for a few hours."

I closed the door softly, satisfied that he was unhurt.

After giving directions to the servants about an early lunch for my master I left the house and started on a brisk walk toward Mr. Jaimson's home. It was essential that I should have an interview with him before he saw my master or talked to anybody about the events of the night.

He was at breakfast when I was ushered into the library. I insisted upon seeing him alone and immediately, urging the servant to report that my business was very important.

Ten minutes later he appeared in the library. He was a man past middle age, stout of figure and stern of features. I realized that he was one not easily turned from any course which he considered just. He bowed stiffly upon entering and said:

"I haven't the pleasure of knowing you, I believe."

I was dressed in a new suit of clothes, and I fancied myself that I would pass for a gentleman among strangers.

"No, sir, but that is not necessary," I said briskly and with the air of one of authority. "I have come to talk with you about last night's robbery."

He started visibly and then said smilingly:

"Ah, I see! You're a detective!"

I made no direct reply to this, but added:

"I think the robbers who have recently been terrorizing the neighborhood will soon be cornered."

He started and said:

"Possibly. I know something about it but only in the most superficial way."

"I know that," I sneered, "and that is why I have come thus early to see you."

"How do you know it?" he responded.

"That isn't the point. I not only know that you know a good deal about it, but I know exactly the information that leads you to think you can expose the robbers."

He looked inquisitively at me and then said positively:

"What is it that I know or that you think I know?"

I leaned toward the room as if I expected somebody might be listening.

"We are alone," he said quickly.

"You recognized the burglar last night before you shot at him," I said impressively.

He gave a startled look at me and then recovered.

"Who told you—hes my wife told anybody—she was the only one"—

"Never mind that," I replied, waving my hands. "I know. That is sufficient for our present purpose."

A look of suspicion entered his face, and probably thinking that I was merely leading him on, he asked:

"If you know so much about it, please tell me who it was I recognized."

"Certainly. I'll whisper it in your ear."

I bent near to him and said impressively:

"It was Charles Goddard whom you recognized in your house last night and at whom you shot."

The last expression of doubt left his face and he could only add slowly:

"Well, well, I don't understand how you found it out."

The man was completely mystified, as I hoped he would be, and I continued with a smile on my own face:

"Now, if you believe that I know what I'm doing we will enter into the matter of my mission here this morning."

"Go on. I'm ready for anything."

"First, then, what did you intend to do with this information?"

"I hadn't made up my mind," he said doubtfully, taking a seat in an easy chair near me.

"Well, you either intended to inform the police or accuse Mr. Goddard of the crime to his own face."

"Yes, one or the other, but most likely the latter. Mr. Goddard's father and I were great friends. I should hate to see his name stained with dishonor."

"I thought as much," I replied, "and it is to prevent you from making a mistake that I have called this morning. I know more about this matter than you do."

"Probably. You seem to know all that I do. It's wonderful how you knew it, for I swear I never mentioned the matter to any one except my wife, and she's seen nobody but the servants."

"But other eyes may have recognized the man," I said suggestively.

"That's true. I never thought of that. Did some of my servants see him?"

"Don't worry yourself," I interrupted. "The person who saw him will not mention it further. I've fixed all that."

"Well, well; so early in the morning, and you seem to have arranged everything before I could decide upon the first step."

"It's my business," I added. Then with confidence I said in a low voice:

"But Mr. Goddard is not the only one concerned in these robberies. There is another and I think a more dangerous neighbor who is implicated in the crimes. But he is too wary to be caught easily. He directs the whole affair, but keeps in the background. He must be caught at least and punished if Mr. Goddard is to suffer. It would be a sin to let him escape and the lesser criminal punished."

"Yes, yes, of course—by all means."

"Then we must work together. I've laid a plan by which I can fasten the guilt of this other party. If you will work with me and do as I tell you, you can help me to punish the guilty one of all his shiftlessness."

"Anything that you think best. Propose your plan."

"Well, first, I want you to keep the matter strictly quiet and not mention to a living soul that you recognized the burglar last night. Let the detectives work on the case as usual, but warn your wife not to commit herself. Is she brave enough to do this?"

"Yes; Ellen is only too ready to shield Mr. Goddard. I could see at once her that I was correct in recognizing him."

"So much the better. Let her continue to think so and pretend that you think you might have been mistaken. Then next Tuesday night I shall ask you and another person who is more interested than you are to be present."

"Ah, I see! You're a detective!"

Internally Mr. Goddard was giving yourself—Miss Stetson, in short—to accompany me in one of your neighbor's houses. He will be away that night, and I will show you some of the secrets of his life game that he conceals in his house. When he returns late at night, we can confront him with the crime. I shall then leave it with you and Miss Stetson as to what further course to pursue. If we arrest the man, Mr. Goddard will have to be informed, for we cannot hide from the place with the threat of exposure, we can shield Mr. Goddard and give him another chance. That, in short, is my plan. Will you co-operate with me?"

Mr. Jaimson gave me an admirable arrangement. I believe we ought to give Charles another opportunity. I can hardly find the heart to have him arrested."

"Well, I leave that entirely to you and Miss Stetson."

Mr. Jaimson will agree with me."

I said nothing in reply, but after lying a few more directions I withdrew, promising to call for him on the evening specified to conduct him to the house of his unknown neighbor.

Here's a Suggestion

When you want a first-class daily newspaper—

One that excels in Northwest news;

One that ignores no points to get the news of the world, and prints it first;

One whose commercial and financial news and market reports are admitted to be the best;

One that is fearless and fair in its editorial discussion of live topics—republican but independent;

One that contains Hart'scartoons, the Journal Junior—a weekly paper for children without extra cost—Jerrmore's daily Washington correspondence, a notable daily series of articles and notes on current themes by the most eminent men and women of either party—is peculiar to that paper.

There is only one thing for you to do and that is to subscribe for

A VICIOUS MEASURE.

If anyone has been generous enough to doubt that the present legislature is controlled by the railroad influence the action of the house committee in recommending for passage the bill introduced by Representative Wilson of Worthington ought to dispel the illusion. Wilson's bill is directed at Public Examiner Johnson. It proposes to take away from the examiner the power to investigate the books and reports of the railway companies, transferring this authority to the railroad and warehouse commission.

When it is remembered that during the past year the public examiner has found errors in the reports of the railways which brought $83,000 to the public treasury, and that an additional $200,000 is in sight, the solicitude on the part of the corporations affected will be readily understood. Especially is this true when the railway commission is generally understood to be made up of men controlled by the corporations affected.

It will be well for the people to keep an eye on their legislators. Not one of them can give a reasonable excuse for voting against the best interests of his constituents.

Public Examiner Johnson's experience ought to prove that a genuine reformer has no business fooling with the Republican party in Minnesota. The Republican managers do not want reform. A little flap-doodle about election time is all right for campaign purposes, but it ought to end there. The grafters and the special interests that have been so tenderly cared for by public officials have rights that must be respected, and the audacity of the public examiner in insisting that "public office is a public trust" is bound to get him into trouble.

Power who invest money with the expectation of realizing ten per cent a week deserve to be fleeced. And invariably they are.

Colds

"I had a terrible cold and could hardly breathe. I then tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it gave me immediate relief."
W. C. Layton, Sidell, Ill.

How will your cough be tonight? Worse, probably. For it's first a cold, then a cough, then bronchitis or pneumonia, and at last consumption. Coughs always lead downward. Stop this downward tendency by taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

It is more than 50c., $1. All druggists.

Consult your doctor. If he says take it, then do as he says. If he says not to take it, then don't take it. He knows. Leave it with him.

THE NEXT LEADER.

The leaders of the Democratic party are beginning to exhibit some interest in the different booms for the presidential nomination on the Democratic ticket that are being turned loose in several sections of the country. There is the Olney boom which was started in Memphis, Tenn., and is being nursed to keep it warm by the Hon. Josiah Quincy of Boston. Mr. Olney was in the last Cleveland cabinet. He was attorney general and then secretary of state. He is an able man as everyone will admit, but he is about seventy years old. He has always kept his Democracy on straight, but he did not tear his clothes for the ticket in '96.

There is the Parker boom. Judge Parker is chief justice of the New York court of appeals, and is undoubtedly a good man and a good Democrat, but his only claim to recognition is the fact that he was elected to his present position by about 60,000 majority the year following the big McKinley majority in New York.

There is the Gorman boom. Senator Gorman is looked upon as one of the best political leaders and strategists in the country, but he has not been very strenuous for the ticket during the last two campaigns. He has done much service for the party, however, and he has many friends among the leaders of the party.

The latest boom to be cut loose was that which Governor Budd of California let go in Cincinnati, Ohio, a few days ago at the big Jefferson-Jackson-Lincoln barbecue, when he named William Randolph Hearst as his choice. The people of the south try know Mr. Hearst as one who, in 1896 and 1900, stood by the ticket when most of the other wealthy men deserted. In the two campaigns he is said to have contributed $200,000 to the Democratic cause. His Jefferssonian Democracy is unquestioned. His philanthropy has often manifested itself. He was elected to congress last fall by an unprecedented majority from New York.

SOMETIMES it is convenient to be a doctor. For instance Mayor Ames' professional training tells him just when it is unwise to undertake a journey from New Hampshire to Minnesota.

MARY MCFADDEN criticises Nettie Lesley Murphy's dissertations on "Experiences of Life and Love." Some of the unmarried editorial brethren need to inquire how Mary succeeded in acquiring such a fund of wisdom on the subject.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Edited by Spartan Reporting Committee. Fred Richards, Frank Brady and Verne Healy.

Friday, February 27, there will be no program.

The Senior class will have the first rehearsal of their play Friday.

The Moorhead high school is also helping us organize a base ball league.

The last part of this week and the first part of next will be taken up with examinations.

Some of the high school pupils made an effort to secure a holiday Monday but failed.

Tuesday evening the high school girls were entertained by Ina Tibbets and the boys by Drew Marshall. They all had a good time.

The weather is so nice this week that the pupils use up their surplus energy out-of-doors; therefore the high school items are not numerous.

The Senior English class forgot themselves last Monday and went to class without having prepared their lesson. They were given permission to go and study a while.

Wednesday the cases of absence were very numerous. The main excuse was that the pupils went to church, but we think that if they had not been up so late the night before the cases might have been diminished by half at least.

The debate last Friday was a victory for the Spartans. The points were, Spartans, 17.32; Athenians, 14.74. The Spartans' points showed how patriotic they are. The debate was held two days before Washington's birthday, and they risked the loss of the debate so that their points would signify the year of his birth, 1732. Athenians' arguments did not convince us that fees ball is a bad thing, and we think it failed to convince the people they invited to school for the purpose.

The Spartans will render the following program Friday, March 6:

Song—49.
Recitation.
Character sketch and life of Thos. B. Reed—Theodore Deforge.
Reading—Marjorie Rodgers, Ina Tibbets, Allee Newton and Margaret Kane.
Recitation.
Original story—Bonta Hage.
Recitation—Ina Johnson.
Piano duet—Marjorie Rodgers, Ina Tibbets.
Essay—Verne Healy.
Recitation—Blanche Berthalume.
Reading—Minnie Linnehan.
Song—314.

"Cole's Carbolisalve has been a favorite household remedy with us for years," writes Capt. J. W. Partridge, Belfast, Me. "We have never seen anything that compares with it as a cure for Burns, cuts, catarrh, weak and sore eyes, chilblains, sores and all lighting diseases." Cole's is guaranteed. Keep a box handy. 25 and 50c. Sold by all druggists.

Consumption

Salt pork is a famous old-fashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs most.

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion that puts new life into the veins; parts and has a special action on the diseased lungs.

A sample will be sent free upon request.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of genuine Scott's Emulsion.

THE CITY OF THE DEAD.

They do neither plight nor wed
In the city of the dead.
In the city where they sleep away the night
But they lie, while o'er them range
Winter blight and summer change,
And a hundred happy whisperings of flowers.
No, they neither wed nor plight.
And the day is just as bright,
For their vision is of other kind than ours.

They do neither sing nor sigh
In that bourgh of by and by,
Where the airmen have grasses growing cool and long;
But they rest within their bed,
Leaving all their thoughts unsaid,
Deeming kisses sister for than sob or song.
Though the robin be a-wing,
Though the leaves of autumn march a million sienna,

There is only rest and peace
In the City of Success
From the fallings and the wallings 'neath
the sun.
And the wings of the swift years
Make no sound to reach their ears
Whether music to the world or misery one.
There is only peace and rest;
But in them it seemeth best.
For they lie at ease and know that life is done.

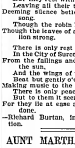
AUNT MARTHA'S MISTAKE.

BY FRANK B. WELCH.



N all things Aunt Martha was very much like her brother's household, of which she was the presiding spirit, she was particularly methodical, and especially in the supervision of the culinary department. The kind-hearted yet severe old soul kept after Matilda, the kitchen girl, with a relentless persistency and a never-ceasing vigilance which often made the poor girl sigh for relief from her surveillance; for anything that was done carelessly had to be carefully rehearsed under the direct supervision of her inspector-general. As a result the culinary skill of Aunt Martha came to be known and heralded throughout her wide circle of friends and acquaintances; and when anybody wanted to speak in praise of anybody else's pies or puddings the invariable verdict was: "Most as good as Aunt Martha's."

One evening a small but select company of Aunt Martha's friends was invited to take dinner with her, in celebration of her brother's birthday anniversary, and she had given every detail of the cooking thereof her personal attention. The soup, meat, etc., had all received her approval before being placed before her guests, but when it came to the dessert, that she insisted upon preparing with her own hands. She made one of her famous cabinet puddings, as a treat for the occasion, and threw on several squinting anent her guests over the prospect of inserting their teeth in the much-vaunted dainty.

The pudding had been passed over for dinner and supper, when that she had not made any sauce for it. Such an oversight would have been almost inexcusable on the part of anyone else, and she drew old soul was honest enough to declare that she never even thought of it.

Matilda was sent to make the sauce, and she proceeded to confess that in her hurry she had overlooked that important item, and begging to feel that she could not forget her awful mistake, and regretted the slightest allusion to it with severe-ness. Matilda, with the assurance that she would have sauce if Aunt Martha had to make it herself, went to the pantry for the sauce, and returned with a large bowl of creamy liquid, which she placed before the guests, and then proceeded to help each one liberally to the pudding. Then Aunt Martha began to help herself, and was about to put a spoonful of the sauce into her mouth when she noticed that her guests were looking at her in a peculiar manner, and she paused with the spoon in the air and asked:

"IN YAH TOEN OWN SELFES."

"Why don't you help yourself to sauce, Matilda?"

"Why, I have, mum," she replied, with a look of surprise.

"Have you, indeed?" said Aunt Martha, as she put the spoon down and looked at the bowl. "Why, you have not, you careless girl! You have given us all starch instead of sauce!"

Then she had finished her lecture, and Matilda had a chance, the long-suffering servant said, in her most correct and high-toned English:

"Aunt Marda, I didn't, nae pud dis boddle in der bandry, neider! Id vas your own selgs. I dank you vas make de fiddle on der knife sharpener you didn't vas toog id and yet."

Upon thinking the matter over carefully, Aunt Martha found Matilda was right, and she shouldered the whole blame, and was further humiliated by having to make the acknowledgment to the girl, who, in the depth of her sense of wronged innocence, was returning her apron with tears. After apologizing for her injustice Aunt Martha left the kitchen to Matilda, with the assurance that she would trust everything to her in the future.

The soothing hand of time gradually leeched over the terrible wound to Aunt Martha's self-esteem, but she never forgot her awful mistake, and regretted the slightest allusion to it with severe-

AN AMATEUR VOLCANO.

Eruption of Mount Olympus (Wash.) Traced to Burning Liquids.

The Mount Olympus sensation which lately roared the people of Washington state with the idea that a volcano was in active operation in that great mountain, has been brought to a sudden end by the return of an exploring party to deal out wisdom in the matter.

It seems that earth in that vicinity is interlaid with veins of lignite coal. Recent fires have fallen into the crevices and caused enormous quantities of leaves have drifted down upon these, and by some means fires have been started which have communicated with the coal veins. Great jets of steam and burst of smoke therefrom have come from the sides of the mountain and these confirmed the theory that there was a genuine volcano in operation. It seems that the heat has melted the snow which has formed a perpetual white cap at the summit. This, trickling down the sides of the mountain in streams, has fallen upon the fire, which accounts for the great volumes of steam. The puffs of smoke and explosions are thought to be caused by the ignition of collections of gases.

This condition of affairs naturally leads to the inquiry whether a good many volcanic eruptions might not be traceable to burning lignite and the explosions of large quantities of combined gases. Be that as it may, Mount Olympus is a seething mass of burning coal, and the volcano scare amounts to nothing.—N. Y. Ledger.

Pure Politics.

"We have called to beseech your aid in a movement for the purification of politics," said the spokeswoman of the delegation of high browed, lean visaged ladies and gentlemen.

"Well, my friends," said the practical statesman, "I don't know exactly what is need of a good deal of purification right now."

"Ah! We thought you would see—"

"Yes. It is getting so mixed up with reform and economy and one thing and another here lately that there is hardly room for the good, old-fashioned, pure politics at all any more."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

While there is no occasion for getting excited over the possibility of an epidemic of diphtheria in our city, it is well that parents use precautions against contagion and so far as possible keep children at home.

The Redmen meet at Odd Fellows' hall Wednesday evening, March 4. This lodge has nearly sixty native members, and is in fine financial condition. The sachem requests that all members be present at the next meeting.

Remember a penalty of ten per cent. attaches to personal property taxes unpaid March 1. If you have not squared up with Treasurer Tandberg you will save money by doing so before the close of business Saturday night.

On Saturday morning we shall place on display a new stock of wash goods, waist cloths, black dress goods, trimmings, silks, hosos, table and bedroom linens, etc. Every item priced in plain figures on low cash basis.—Bangs & Co.

Carl Pochardt, a wealthy German farmer from Iowa, purchased a half section of choice land near town from the Healy agency last week. Mr. Pochardt expects to move here and make extensive improvements on his farm at once.

The many Red Lake Falls friends of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Zeh will be pleased to learn that a baby girl came to their home at Missoula, Mon., last week. The COURIER joins with our people in extending hearty congratulations to the happy parents.

Paul Berthon's residence narrowly escaped burning Tuesday morning. Some of the children were playing with matches and set fire to the lace curtains at one of the windows. Mrs. Berthon succeeded in subduing the flames, and little damage ensued.

Adelard Lemieux went to Grand Forks today, where he will be treated for deafness by a specialist at that place. The many friends of the young man will hope that he will return entirely cured of his troublesome malady. He will be absent a month.

The cold weather of last week extended over the entire country. In Florida and California the temperature was decidedly fatal for oranges and bananas, and at Kansas City, St. Louis and Cincinnati the mercury went below zero for the first time in years.

The defunct Scandia Hail Insurance company of Crookston has brought suit in justice court against some ten or twelve Red Lake county farmers to enforce payment of assessments levied against them. The case will be tried before Judge Swanson next Wednesday.

If we can lay claim to one particular feature of merit in our grocery line it is the sterling values which we are giving in teas and coffees. We are the exclusive venders in this section of the finest lines of such: Primrose teas and Famous King and Success coffees.—Bangs & Co.

Mrs. William Vagne, of Poplar River, was a caller at THE COURIER office Tuesday. She informs us that her husband, who was seriously injured in a railroad wreck near Pipestone about six weeks ago, has returned home and is unable to work, and it is unlikely he will ever be as strong as before the accident.

THE COURIER is not in the habit of making apologies, but for the past two weeks manifest difficulties have had to be endured. Two members of the regular force have been away, and this week the editor has been "on the shelf" a good deal of the time with an attack of that very common and unprepossessing ailment, the grippe.

H. N. Johnson, the genial manager of the Robertson Lumber Company, returned this morning from a visit with friends and relatives at Chatfield and Winona. Much to the gratification of numerous young ladies he is still "heart whole and fancy free" and there is still hope that he may prove his Republicanism by patronizing home industries.

The Red Lake Falls Grange held a special meeting at Odd Fellows hall Monday to hear an address by their state president, Mrs. S. G. Baird, of Edina. A large attendance of the members is reported and much interest manifested. The local Grange is prosperous, an no doubt by the proper kind of co-operation its members can secure great and lasting benefits.

H. Gonigam received a message last Friday announcing the sudden death of his father at Red Oak, Ill., and left immediately for that place to attend the funeral. While there Mr. Gonigam will make arrangements for the removal of his family to this place in the immediate future. They will occupy the Spillane property on Third street, which Mr. Gonigam purchased last week.

Misses Ina Tibbetts and Florence Dautremont entertained a dozen young ladies at the home of the former last evening. Games and charades furnished amusement for the evening. Those present were Misses Misses Lulu Fletcher, Etta Garceau, Marjorie Rodgers, Alice Newton, Orilla Hennemuth, Margaret Kaus, Maud Findeisen, Ella Krueger, Dollie Matthies, Etta McNerthney, Clara Allison and Ida Lemieux.

Blackduck American: Zatique Bray arrived home Friday evening from Crookston where he went for treatment a few weeks ago. As will be remembered he was terribly hurt ed about the hands in a gasoline explosion and although much improved his physicians advise him to no longer continue his work in his saloon and he will probably go back to his old home in Red Lake Falls and engage in farming.

Thief River Press: : J. M. Bishop, the attorney, has been appointed by Governor Van Sant as municipal judge of this city to succeed Judge N. W. Tarrant, who recently resigned tas except the office of judge of probate. As soon as it became known that Mr. Tarrant was going to resign the city office, several candidates announced themselves as applicants for the position, but Mr. Bishop, owing to the fact that he is a practicing attorney and well acquainted with the duties of the office soon took the lead in the race, although he himself made no effort to secure the place. The appointment meets with general favor.

Fits.

Baby Had Two to Six Every Day.

Suffered Terribly—Doctors Failed.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Cured Him.

Weak, nervous, fretful, puny children require a treatment such as only Dr. Miles' Nervine affords. When neglected these symptoms lead to epileptic fits or spasms. Every mother should strengthen her own and babies' nerves with Dr. Miles' Nervine, a true specific in all nervous disorders. Read the following:

"When my little boy was 18 months old he was taken with fits. Doctors said he would be down out of shape for two or three days. At first liniment seemed to help but in about two weeks medicine did any good the doctor gave him. We called another doctor but his medicine did no good so we changed to another who called it spinal disease. By this time the child's body was drawn out of shape; his backbone was curved to one side and his hands and feet out of shape. His sufferings were terrible, and he was hardly ever out of fits. We got a bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for common trouble and saw it was recommended for fits, so I thought I would see if it would help him. All three doctors had given him up. One half bottle stopped the fits and his limbs straightened, and another bottle cured him. He is now a strong, healthy boy going to school. I have wished to see if the old trouble returned, before writing, and he has never had. I cannot praise Dr. Miles' Nervine enough for what it has done for my little life."—Mrs. Dinah Nutting, Lansing, Iowa.

MY LITTLE DIMPLE CHEEK.

There are days of care and crosses
Mixed with ledgers, pens and ink,
Of profits and of losses
As the values change and sink;
But when dusk and day are blending
And the lights are turned low,
There's childish laughter pealing,
And a kiss that wants for me,
Till my burdened heart is beating
With a love it fain would speak,
In the clinging and the clasping
Of my little Dimple Cheek.

There's a chair of childish troubles
Then unfolded in my ear
Which to me doth seem as bubbles
On the sea of childhood clear.
But we share them, both together,
Till my troubles flit away,
And we never mind the weather,
Be it winter, be it May;
For I catch a glimmer of sunshine
That shall hallow all the week,
In the clinging and the clasping
Of my little Dimple Cheek.

Tell me what of wealth's possessions,
And the gay steadfast trade,
What of honor's bright ovations,
Mingling pleasure up with pain,
Can repay the fond caresses,
Restless before or restless after,
Like a dear one to caress me,
And to welcome out her love?
For the Lord He doth reward us
In the ways diverse we seek,
In the clinging and the clasping
Of a little Dimple Cheek.

LOVE'S SLAYER.

HERE lived a man who loved a woman passionately, but every time he approached her with a figure looming up before him, hindering him. And every time he threw wax writ in large letters, the word "Satiety." And the man, covering his face, fled from it.

But after off, the ardor of his passion grew, and he raged exceedingly.

"Why should I thus dread a mere phantom?" he asked of himself. "I will go forth and do him battle."

But as he drew near to his love the ghostly thing was there, between them, looking with weary eyes into the depths of his soul. And ever the man fled, affrighted.

One day the woman came to him. Her face was radiant with love, and all his soul leaped within him at sight of her beauty.

Why dost thou shun me thus?" she murmured, laying her arm about his throat. "Lo! I have waited for thy coming and heartened for thy voice, but those things came not. Therefore am I here, for great love drew me."

And he, looking deep into her eyes, found delight there, and laughed aloud in his joy. "I was feared of a shape that ever came betwixt thee and me in the hour of my approach," he said to her.

And she laughed, asking: "What shape?"

A great figure," he made answer, "that loomed over thee, shadowing thy face, and upon its brow was writ the word 'Satiety.'"

Then keep thee from me, since thou dreadest him, for he puts a mark on woman's beauty in men's eyes, they say." Said the woman, gravely, "though methinks thou hadst little to fear from him, once thou hadst reached me," she added, proudly.

But she pondered.

And he, being mad with love and enthralled by her witchery, caressed her many times, praising her beauty, and he spoke with her. And she grew even fairer in his sight, though in her mirror she sometimes saw weary eyes and a smile that was bitter, for his words about "Satiety" had sunk deep in her heart, and she was ever watching for the shape.

The days sped swiftly.

Once, in the dawn, he looked upon her and noted a mark upon her beauty. And waking her he asked:

"What is this?"

And she, rising, sought her mirror,

I SEE NOTHING.

and smiling—but bitterly—answered: "I see nothing."

But daily the mark grew, and daily he asked her: "What is this?" and she, gazing into her mirror, replied: "I see naught."

"Then is thy mirror false!" he cried, in anger, "I will break it!"

And smiting it upon the ground, he broke it, and she wept, saying:

"Alack! Why is my lord angry?" But the sight of her tears maddened him, and he went abroad.

And she dried her eyes, sighing, and called her maidens about her, and as she sat among them, she sang a little song about the death of Love, nor heartened to their merry chatter.

Now the man in his walk met a gray-beard bearing a scythe upon his shoulder, and peering in hedge and byway, in ditch and tree.

"What seekest thou?" asked the man.

"I seek one of my brethren," the graybeard made answer. "Hast thou seen him?"

"How should I tell, not knowing him by name?" said the man. "Is he named Hate to thee?"

"Nay, I am called Time, but he is called Satiety," answered the other.

The man frowned.

"Your brother does not abide Serenheata," he said.

"Methought I saw him wander Slitherhut a while since," mumbled the old man. One with whom he hath enmity dwelleth here, and doubtless he hath some to seek him."

"And whom may that be?" inquired the man.

"Men call him Love," said Time, and his dry laugh rattled in his throat. "Satiety killeth Love when he gets entrance to where he abideth, and I bury the slain."

"And how doth he get entrance?" asked the man, thinking backward.

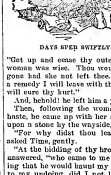
"By many ways," answered the Sage, leaning for a moment upon his scythe. "Sometimes through the eyes of a jealous woman, for she is a weariness unto the soul of man; sometimes through the foolish eyes of a man who, seeing much beauty, becometh blind to it, and oftenest through the heart of her who is faithful, but protesteth her love too greatly; for the vast love of a woman is also a weariness unto the soul of man."

And the graybeard gazed pierelugly upon the man, then, cackling in shrill laughter, went on his way.

Then hurriedly the man sought the woman, but he found the house empty and her maidens running about in search of her. And she was nowhere to be found. When last seen, they told him, she was talking to a stranger who had turned aside from the road, a creature of vast stature, with weary eyes, and a giant frame, upon whose brow was writ the sign: "Satiety."

Then the man, clapping his hand to his head, fell upon the ground, crying out that she had found the curse, not he; that she had shin Love, not he, that she was false, not he.

"Get up, fool," quoth a graybeard in the crowd about, touching the stricken man contemptuously with his foot.



DAYS SPED SWIFTLY.

"Get up and come thy outery. The woman was wise. Thou wouldst have gone had she not left thee. Here is a remedy I will leave with thee, which will cure thy hurt."

And behold! he left him a year.

Then, following the woman in hot haste, he came upon her as she sat upon a stone by the wayside, weeping.

"For why didst thou leave him?" asked Time, gently.

"At the bidding of thy brother," she answered, "else coins to me thereto-ing that he would haunt my good lord, to my undoing, did I not leave him. 'Go, before Love be slain,' he said, 'thou may'st thou hope one day to return.'"

Time smiled.

"Here is a remedy I will leave with thee for his hurt," he said.

And, behold! he left her a year.

And at the end of that space, Time came to the man, and lo! he found him feasting and rejoicing. And round about him were beautiful women, and one there was more beautiful than all the others who rested her head upon his shoulder and upon whom he gazed affectionately.

Time stooped to look at his hurt, and found it healed, not even a scar remaining.

Softly the graybeard sped in the night to the place where he had left the woman, but the stone by the wayside was bare. The Night Wind moaned down the road.

Spake the Wind:

"Whom seekest thou, O Time?" and Time made answer:

"A woman whom one year ago I left here weeping."

"Come with me," sighed the Night Wind. And he led him to a solemn place of yews, and, pointing to a gravestone, said, softly: "She lies there."

And Time, stooping, saw that of his gift she had taken but 20 days, for a mightier than he had come and comforted her—even Eternity.—N. Y. Truth.

The Intended Compliment.

In an old-fashioned home of New Orleans there was company at dinner, and the ladies were discussing the woman question. A gentleman present, after hearing all the pros and cons, facetiously remarked that two preachers were discussing the same problem recently, in his hearing, and they both agreed that it portended evil, and "that women were responsible for most of the evil in the world—in fact, that women were worse than men." One of the ladies indignantly retorted: "Indeed they are not; women are the salt of the earth." "Don't so, honey," put in old Aunt Susan from the kitchen; "dat's de Bible truf, for dere is women in hell, ob de earth. Just think ob Lot's wife."

And everybody laughed at the saddle and unexpected application of the old Bible story.—N. O. Picayune.

A PRELUDE TO THE MARITAL KISS

(Original.)

Blakely Wharton came home early expecting to find his wife at the door to give him a kiss, as was her daily custom. He was disappointed. Going into her boudoir he threw himself on a lounge for awhile, then concluded that he would write a letter. In the bonbon door was an antique desk in which Mrs. Wharton kept her papers and her correspondence. Sitting at this desk Mr. Wharton penned his epistle, addressed it and set about hunting for a stamp. In the effort, opening and shutting the drawers, punching here and there, suddenly he was astonished to see a drawer fly open from a place where he had never known there was a drawer. In the bottom were several papers. Taking one up, he read:

Dearest—I was not able to come to you on Monday, as my Morse has gone lame. I will see you as soon as possible, but I cannot tell exactly what day. GEORGE.

"Can it be from one of Laura's old lovers? She's had this desk for twenty years and doubtless has used this drawer. Upon my word, I never supposed my wife could have associated with—had a lover who would spell horse with a capital H and Monday with a u."

He glanced at the next paper:

Dearest—I was frightened today at meeting you in company with a Stranger, especially since I have heard reports about you. Do relieve my anxiety at once as possible. G.

The next had been addressed on the back, but the name had been erased:

Dearest—You say that you still love me, but that fate separates us forever. Is it possible that you can think of marriage with another? YOUR LOVER.

At this point Blakely began to devour the missives greedily and with terrible anxiety. Some of them had dates and other features to give a meager information about them, but he was too eager to get the story to notice anything except the facts stated. The next note was postmarked, but to this Blakely was oblivious:

Oh, my darling, how can you submit to this tyranny? You know you are my own. Wife in the sight of God, and yet you are going to marry another Man, even adoring me and him at the same time. Then before it is too late. YOUR HUSBAND.

Blakely's heart seemed suddenly to freeze. "O God!" he moaned and, staggering on a lounge, buried his face in the cushions. In this position his wife found him a few minutes later. Surmising that he had fallen asleep, she went to him and, sitting on the sofa beside him, put her arms about him.

"Oh, awry!" he cried.

"Why, Blakely, what's the matter?"

"Go away, I tell you! I have discovered all."

"Great heavens! What all?"

"Bigamist!"

By this time Blakely Wharton was standing in the center of the floor, glaring like a lion.

"Oh, Blakely, what does this attack mean? Be calm. You have been overstrained by the loss of your suit in court, but the appeal will be decided in your favor. Do be down and let me pet you."

"And you have been living with me ten years, the wife of another man! You were even married to the first. He calls it a marriage 'in the sight of God.' We all know what that means."

The wife stepped to the electric bell too.

"What are you going to do?" cried her husband.

"Send for the doctor, the police, somebody, anybody. I can't take care of you alone."

"Hold! I am as sane as you. I sat at your desk to write a note. Accidentally a drawer flew open, and I found notes that you have been treasuring, hiding where you supposed they would never come to light. They prove conclusively that when you married me you were the wife of another, as 'in the sight of God' wife at that."

"I never knew of that drawer."

The notes were either on the desk or on the floor. Mrs. Wharton gathered them up and ran them hastily over. Then her brow lowered. For the first time since their marriage her husband saw her angry.

"Blakely, you are a fool!"

Her action warned Mr. Wharton that perhaps he might have been hasty.

"Do you suppose anybody nowadays spells nouns with capitals?"

"I didn't know anybody ever did."

"Or Monday with a u?"

"I noticed that. I thought you—I mean the fellow—must have been uneducated."

"Did you notice those dates?"

"No; I was too cut up."

"Do you suppose I'm a hundred and twenty-five years old?"

"No, my dear. You're only thirty-two."

"Thirty-one. If this note was for me, I must be a century and a quarter old, for it was written in 1777."

"You don't mean it!"

"And this postmark on the back—do you suppose a man even ten years ago would have written me a letter and sent it through the post without the envelope?"

"Why, no."

Mrs. Wharton started to leave the room. "My love," called her husband, "you have forgotten something."

"What?"

"That which you usually give me at the door."

Mrs. Wharton made no reply, continuing on her way upstairs.

Wharton had fallen into error within a few minutes. It required a few hours to do away with the effects. It was not till 10 o'clock that night that Mrs. Wharton was sufficiently appeased to give him the marital kiss.

ANNABEL MAUD WRIGHT.

A Race With Satan

(Original.)

We were in the square in the center of the town talking of the robberies. The moon now shone feebly behind a mist and again was hidden by clouds, leaving the sky as black as ink. The air was balmy, and at times a few big drops of rain pattered on the ground. Off in the west there were flashes of lightning and the low muttering of thunder.

Up comes little Maggie O'Brien and tells how she fell asleep in a barn and was wakened by four men lying low in the hay at the other end, talking about robbing St. Patrick's church at R., ten miles away, and how they set out an hour ago for the purpose.

"What's that you say?" queried Father Higgin, who just then came into the square, passing from the chapel to his rooms.

"The robbers have gone to git the silver service at St. Patrick's church at R. Maggie O'Brien heard 'em and so."

We all made a rush for the stable, mounted Mike Monahan on the best horse we could find and started him to R. to give warning of the intended sacrilege. Some said two men would be better, but there was only the one fresh horse, the other being very tired. Mike shot down the pike, which for a moment lay white toward the valley, then was swallowed in gloom. The last we saw of him was on the crest of the hill beyond, his figure dimly shown by a flash.

"What was that movin' up behind him?" asked Tim Murphy.

"He'll no give the varmits," said Maggie O'Brien. "It was one of the robbers."

"Put, child," said her father; "'twas no such thing."

"Maybe 'twas the divil comin' up to hinder him," said Teddy Gallagher. "They say Satan has a fleet colt that of service plate an' dines off 'em every Sunday."

By this time it began to blow and to rain, and the lightning was so vivid and the thunder so child that we all went into the inn at the corner of the square and set there tippling for an hour, when all of a sudden the door flew open and Mike Monahan, white as a ghost and drenched with rain, staggered in and fell in a heap into one of the seats beside the fireplace.

"What is it, Mike?" shouted all at once. Never a word of explanation did we get till we had poured two glasses of brandy down his throat. Then he stiffened up and told the story:

"I'd made a matther of three mile while the storm kem on in earnest. There was such a rattlin' an' rollin' of thunder that I couldn't hear me horse's hoofs on the stones. Then sudden, lookin' up, I saw to the east a fiine bit of sky wid the moon in the middle, while the west was still black wid the grumblin' storm. An' says I, I says, 'In the fair spot there the angels is a-grinnin' at Satan in the storm beyant an' remarkin' "Ye'll not git the plate, ye spalpeen.' An' I felt happy as a pig waitin' in a raise full of mud at his' the divine insthrumeent to prevint the robbery. But what's that I was hearin' behind me—a clatterin' of horse's hoofs? I could hear it between the rollin' thunder, an' next while I looked back I saw it by a flash of lightnin'. Howly mither! It was Satan himself! I knew he had come out to race wid me to prevint me intherfiers' wid his servants. I dug me heels into me horse's belly an' laid on the whip, determined to kill him the baste an' meself for the church if I might but save the holy service. But do what I could the one behind was gainin' on me. I was goin' at a mad pace, an' just as I plunged down into the hollow where the creek crosses the creek I looked up an' saw a black cloud the exact shape of Satan's face, wid the horns on his head, pissin' over the moon. Then it was black ag'in all about me, an' I couldn't see a yard before me.

"Just as I kem on to the bridge me horse stumbled on a loose plank, an' I shot over his head. I could hear the divil shoot by me, though divil a bit of him could I see for the darkness, an' as he clattered up the road there kem back to me his demd's laugh. Now I know he'd got the bettther of me, an', findin' me horse had gone lame, wint could I do but lend him hoch?"

"Put, man," said O'Brien, "you've been scared by one in league wid the robbers. Why didn't we stud yer bettter?"

"Scared, is it? An' ye don't believe my story? There's proof of it. Satan as he wint by me threw somethin' at me that caught on me sleeve, an', somethin' that shines wid hell's own fire. Ivery toime the lightnin' kem it flared and went out after the dark kem back. Go outside an' ye'll get it."

O'Brien, with a growl, went out and in another moment came in, holding up something hanging to a chain.

"Put, man, it's nothin'!" the crowd. "It's a rosary."

There, true enough, was a string of beads, to which was suspended a silver cross.

Now how it was that the devil possessed a rosary no one could tell. In truth, some believed that it wasn't the devil at all. O'Brien said it was some one who knew Mike Monahan's mission and was determined to prevent his reaching the church. At any rate, we were all of a shiver at the mystery.

It was 12 o'clock when we got the explanation. We were going across the square to our homes when Father Higgin rode up, covered with mud, and told us he had been to R. and given the warning, and the robbers were caught in the act.

"I lost my rosary," he added. "I think it was in leaning over to see the way."

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, that justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next five years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not let us well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvement, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $3,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A fine investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

THE CELIBATE CLUB.

BY LEWIS GRESWICKE.

Characters: Miss Hager Hunch, president; Miss Dora Darlish, secretary; Mrs. Egerton and Mrs. Clare Graham, visitors; and the "Celibates," eight in number.
Scene I.: The Club Room.

MISS HUNCH — O, Mrs. Egerton, you are just in time. We are now to take the oath binding ourselves to refuse all offers of marriage.

Mrs. Egerton — Perhaps I had better retire; as wife and mother of a family I—

Miss Hunch—Certainly not; we welcome any witness, and, after all, we owe much to married women, since every one of them is a Cretian who, by a leap into the chasm of publicity, may save a doomed multitude!

Mrs. Clare Graham (laughing)—Gracious! I did not know I could leap anywhere. Pray tell me how it is done?

Miss Hunch (glaring through her spectacles)—The subject is too serious for trifling. Marriage is calculated to pen the free instincts of the feminine community. You know our motto: Aut vivam invenium aut faciam?

Mrs. Egerton—I see it is all over the room. We don't care to tell me what it means.

Miss Hunch—It means that we will find a road out of our bondage or make one.

Mrs. Clare Graham (giggling)—Sail from Scylla into Charybdis, eh? You see I love tragedy of both destinations.

Miss Hunch (acrostically)—A kind concession, but frivolous; still we prefer the risk of the unknown to the horror of the known.

Mrs. Graham to Mrs. Egerton (aside)—What on earth does she mean? How many times has she been married?

Mrs. Egerton (aside)—Hush! You mustn't offend the prejudices of the club. Ah, how do you do, Miss Darlish?

Dora Darlish (joining them)—Charming rooms, aren't they? So glad to see you here, Clara.

Mrs. Clare Graham—Thank you, but I feel like a fish out of water. It takes a long time to cultivate amphibiousness.

Dora—O, we're not amphibious—we mean to keep high and dry—

Mrs. Clare Graham—I thought you didn't forswear love and romance and all that kind of thing, but—

Dora—Now do we; we took on love as the divine revelation of life—

Mrs. Clare Graham—O! And then?

Dora—When love has ceased to be love, we—

Mrs. Clare Graham—Scramble to the bank to sun yourselves till ready for the next plunge. I must tell Charlie—

Dora—Don't. You will put wrong

"I MEAN TO MARRY DORA."

constructions on things. Of course we must merely preserve the right to scramble out in self-defense—

Mrs. Clare Graham (laughing)—I thought so! How about amphibians? You ought to rechristen the club!

Miss Hunch (speaking up for the burst of conversation)—Let us join hands and make oath that, however pressed to marry, we will refuse.

(The "Celibates" join hands.)

Mrs. Clare Graham (whispering Dora's dress and whispering)—Dora, don't be a fool. You know Charlie is devoted to you.

Miss Hunch (severely)—Let me beg silence while the oath is taken.

Chorus of "The Celibates" (with clasped hands)—We solemnly swear that, however pressed to marry, we will refuse.

Mrs. Clare Graham (pulling Dora to her side)—Dora, I am disgusted with you. Only yesterday you gave my brother a book with an inscription.

Dora—Well?

Mrs. Clare Graham—I read it—there was something about "Pure romance of love, Idyllic and ideal as could be, All policy and prudence far above."

Dora—I'm not ashamed of it. Why shouldn't love be idyllic and ideal? Why should wedlock of soul mean pedlock of individual?

Mrs. Clare Graham (angrily)—Why, indeed? But don't talk against policy and prudence. Your theory seems the quintessence of both!

SCENE II.: MRS. GRAHAM'S DRAWING-ROOM.
(Clare Cheyne and his sister, Mrs. Clare Graham, are seated.)

Mrs. Clare Graham—Now, I have told you the whole story surely you don't intend to proceed with your absurd courtship?

Charlie—I mean to marry Dora, if that's what you are driving at.

Mrs. Clare Graham—It's impossible! However much she wanted to accept, she would be bound—as a matter of honor—to refuse.

Charlie (stroking his chin contemplatively)—After all, marriage is merely a matter of form, and if it pleases Dora—

Mrs. Clare Graham (warmly)—To please Dora you'll let Jane's boy inherit the estates?

Charlie—Still Dora loves me, and she will do anything I ask.

Mrs. Clare Graham (rising irately to leave the room)—I tell you she won't! Women with convictions are obstinate as Cork pigs.

(Exit Dora in a Parisian bonnet.)

Charlie—Oh, Dora, here you are! We've been expecting you for hours.

Dora—I'm afraid I've disturbed the conversation; I see Clare is ruffled.

Mrs. Clare Graham (abruptly)—No: I was going out. Good-by. (She goes out.)

Dora—She is in a huff with me about something. Why?

Charlie (hesitatingly)—No—that is—she was angry with me.

Dora—About?

Charlie—Oh, because you and I agree

"AND YOU MADE LOVE TO ME?"

with each other so well on all subjects, marriage included.

Dora (pressing his hands)—My beloved!

Charlie—I said it was a rotten institution—or something of the kind.

Dora (chuckling)—An effete conventionality—

Charlie (putting his arm around her waist)—Only suited to reckless people who risk the disappointments of the future for the effervescence of the present.

Dora—What did she say?

Charlie—She began to talk about my sister's boy inheriting the property, as though we cared.

Dora—Will he?

Charlie—Of course. It's entailed. But he's a fine lad, and we, who will be all in all to each other, need not grudge it him.

Dora (thoughtfully)—I suppose not.

Charlie—I believe that is the source of Jane's affection for me. She knows how safe I am in the matter of marriage.

Dora—Then you have never contemplated it?

Charlie (emphatically)—Never.

Dora (horrified)—And you made love to me without any idea of proposing?

Charlie—You forget; you explained your creed at the outset.

Dora (pouting)—Then you deliberately availed yourself of the opportunity—

Charlie (drawing his mustache over the corners of his lips)—Of adoring a girl whose theories corresponded with my own? Yes.

Dora (with tears in her eyes)—Oh! You mean—you would not have loved me if your courtship had involved marriage?

Charlie—I can't say. We both abhor to be handicapped by legalities, don't we? We both enjoy the same rights of bridegrooms.

Dora (rising angrily)—Then, if lovers me had been created the remainder of your liberty you could not have done it?

Charlie (earnestly)—Could you?

Dora (sobbing)—Could I? I would have loved you always.

Charlie (taking her in his arms)—I would have loved you in the same way.

Dora—Not if I had wished to marry you?

Charlie—I won't say. You never put me to the test.

Dora (scornfully)—But if I should? Oh, Charlie—tell me, would you—won't you—marry me?

(Mrs. Graham enters, and, finding them in each other's arms, prepares to leave.)

Charlie—Clare! We want your congratulations. Dora has proposed to me, and I am to name the happy day.

Mrs. Clare Graham—What! And how about her oath?

Dora (blushing)—Oh, I only vowed that, however pressed to marry, I would refuse. But I was not pressed; was I, Charlie?

Charlie (sedately)—Certainly not.—Black and White.

Bad Fire at Crookston.

The following account of the New York Department store fire at Crookston last Saturday evening is taken from Monday's Times:

"One of the most expensive fires which Crookston has had for some time occurred Saturday evening about 5:30, in the New York Department store in the Fournet block, at the corner of Broadway and Robert streets. The loss will aggregate nearly $75,000 with nearly $45,000 insurance, A. Chabot of the New York store being the heaviest loser. The stock inventoried $47,000 the first of the year. Since then $12,000 worth of spring goods have been received. This together with the fixtures will swell the loss to about $60,000.

"The fire originated in the front display window of the New York store, and is supposed to have caught from an electric light wire. The window was filled with cotton, laces, and other inflamable material, with which the window dresser was working out a design. Almost instantly the fire communicated with the entire store. The spread of the fire was so rapid to all parts of the various departments that it seemed to the clerks and people who witnessed it as if it must have resulted from an explosion."

Mr. Chabot will re-open his store as soon as the loss is adjusted. Jos. A. H. Lemieux, formerly of this place, has been head clerk at this store for the past year.

A Cure for Croup.

"I have never found a remedy for croup equal to Cole's Cough Cure," writes a Wisconsin woman, "and I have used many different kinds, for my children are subject to severe attacks of this disease. It gives immediate relief, always cures and the children like it." It is the matchless remedy for coughs, colds bronchitis, consumption and all other lung and throat diseases. Guaranteed to satisfy. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by all druggists.

MARCH WEATHER.

Rev. Earl Hicks' Predictions for the Month Not So Bad.

In his weather predictions for March Rev. Hicks says that the first regular storm period for the month is from the 2d to the 7th. At this time the earth is fully under the influence of her own vernal equinox, blended with a Venus disturbance. From about Tuesday the 3d to Friday the 6th there are reasons to expect all the changes and phenomena of a very decided storm period. A marked change to warmer and falling barometer will lead rapidly into cloudiness, with general rain and thunder storms in the south. Rains may also be expected in central and northern sections, but change to much colder will follow the rains, with heavy snow squalls generally along the northern side of the country. Sharp change to cold will bring up the rear of these storms, bringing the temperature quite to the frost line far into the south.

The 9th and 10th are central days of a reactionary perturbation, intensified by Moon in perigree on the 10th. An electrical crisis is annually to be looked for about the 10th to the 15th. Heavy earth currents of magnetism and electricity, auroral lights, serious convulsions and quickened volcanic activity are among the things to be expected during and about the 10th to 15th.

The regular storm period, centering on the 16th and extending from the 13th to the 20th, will bring a line of exceedingly unsettled weather, with probability of many heavy and some dangerous storms. The barometer and hygrometer will prove faithful monitors at this as well as at all other times of violent storms and changes. The indications point to two decided disturbances during this central period in March, one at the very beginning of the period, and the other about the 17th or 18th. The storms on and about the 18th will barely subside before the entrance to reactionary storm conditions due the 21st and 22d. In all central, western and northern sections mingled rain, snow and raw, depleting winds will render it exceedingly hard and trying on unsheltered live stock. Every possible effort should be made for the feeding and protection of the dumb brute creation through this equinoxial crisis.

The last general storm period in March is central on the 27th, covering the 25th to 30th. This period is covered, also by a Mercury perturbation. The Moon is on the celestial equator on the 27th and at its new on the 28th. As we approach these days it will turn phenomenally warm for the season, the barometer will fall to low and dangerous readings, and anywhere from Friday the 27th to Monday the 30th it will be wise to keep an eye on the gathering storm indications. Very warm, humid weather, with greatly depressed barometer, will presage violence and danger, especially in all central to southern parts of the country. Late snow and sleet storms will be most natural northward. The month, in every probability, will reach its close in the midst of the cold wave at the end of these storms.

An Everlasting Wood.

The department of agriculture has become convinced of the great economic value of catalpa and is advising farmers to plant groves of it wherever possible. The wood is said to be almost indestructible. A post of this wonderful timber was used for fifteen years as a fence post on a Missouri farm, and then sold to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern railway, where it was used for 23 years more in another fence. At the end of this time the wood was in good condition. The linden grain belt here won't make you live forever, but it will keep you strong and healthy to a good old age. Compared with other tonics it has no equal either in strength-giving or delicacy of flavor. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

GREAT WEALTH: HOW IT IS GAINED

By MAX NORDAU, Scientist

PROVIDENCE has happily arranged that trees do not reach the heavens. Great wealth can only be gained from man. It is never the prize of solitary contemplation or secluded work at a desk in the cozy study. One must go to seek it in the market place, among the jostling, feverish crowd.

ONE MUST HANDLE, OUTDO, OVERCOME OR CRUSH INNUMERABLE PEOPLE.

One must be more clever, have more will power or be more artful than other men. THIS PRESUPPOSES QUALITIES WHICH ARE NOT POSSESSED BY ONE MAN IN A MILLION. The young opposition fool, soon sees that he is not cut in the material from which millionaires are made. He calculates that, on the whole, there is no business which pays so little as the chase after the milliard. He abandons the race in time, before he breaks down, and devotes his energies to aims which are closer at hand. AND REACHES NOT THE FABULOUS MILLIARDS, BUT PROBABLY AN HONEST COMPETENCE.

NEW LAND OFFICE RULING.

It Will Effect Homesteaders Who Have not Secured Patents.

Entrymen of commuted homesteads who have not secured their patents and have taken advantage of the six months constructive residence, may not hoallowed commutation, says the local U. S. land office under a ruling made by the commissioner of the general land office which was received at the local office. Heretofore, settlers have been allowed to live on land the last six months of the fourteen and then commute, the first six months being known as constructive residence.

By a decision in the case of Wm. J. Kelley, seeking to commute a homestead, in which he was refused permission to commute on the ground that the entryman had not lived six months on the land, the commissioner places in jeopardy numerous homesteaders who have not yet secured their patents.

Those who have done so can only be attached through a court of law.

To the Farmers.

I am now prepared to take care of your trade in the harness line. My stock is all new and of reliable manufacture. Call on me in the Boughton building, next to the cigar factory, when in need of anything in the way of harness goods or repairing. T. G. BRUNELLE.

General Increase in Salaries.

Fergus Falls Journal: The general raid on the state treasury by having the present legislature raise the salaries of everyone who now fills a position has aroused a storm of indignation and protests all over the state. There are undoubtedly some officials whose salary ought to be adjusted to meet changed conditions and increased work, but the general onslaught is made on the grounds of good times. The Pioneer Press estimates the increase asked for at $250,000 annually. It is very much easier to shove the salaries up than to get them down again and the good times may not last for always. There has not been any hesitancy in accepting positions in the past and there have been few, if any, resignations.

The Good Work Goes On.

Fairmont Sentinel: The lumbermen, the retail grocery men and the retail hardware men have their mutual fire insurance societies. The newspaper men will soon enter the list and the retail clothing merchants are agitating the question. There is more than one way to get rid of the trust robbers. Let the good work spread.

Good appetite, healthy digestion, clear skin and bright eyes mark those who take Cole's Laxative Liver Pills. Their action is pleasant. Sold by all druggists.

JAS. G. BRADY MARRIED.

Ripple Compass Reports the Event in Happy Vein.

Ripple Compass: Shakespere says: As a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honorable than the brow of a bachelor.

Jas. G. Brady, the Ripple schoolmaster, has been carefully studying the quotation all winter and over a week ago decided that William S. was a level-headed old duck, so locked the school house and struck across the swamp.

Brady is a man of action, whether he is dodging railroads in his Campbell town homestead shack or boiling the food of knowledge for the hungry American youth. We all expected him to do some wonderful thing while away and we were not surprised Sunday when he returned with a wife.

Mr. Brady was married to Miss Jeanie Metcalf on Tuesday, Feb. 17, at Alexandria, Minn. They took a hurried bridal tour to visit relatives at St. Hilaire and Red Lake Falls, the groom's old home, reaching Blackduck Friday night just in time to finish the trip by reaching Ripple before Monday.

The bride is a resident of Brandon, where her father operates a flour mill. While working for an elevator company at this town last fall, James first met the fair lady whom he has so speedily won.

The young couple will keep house at the Robinson mansion for the present.

Mr. Brady is a promising and popular young man and has a host of friends throughout Northern Minnesota to respond to the toast to himself and wife of "Two souls with but a single thought,

Two hearts that beat as one."
Two hands that clasp in loving clasp
As life's sweet race they run."

The Compass joins with the happy school children, fresh from vacation, in wishing them well.

A Good Bill.

According to the Thief River Press Representative Simoas has introduced a bill in the legislature, which, if it passes, will result in raising the salary of Judge of Probate Tarrant about $200 per year. The salary of the judge of probate is fixed by the population of the county, and thus the salary in Red Lake county is based on the census of 1900. There has been a large increase in the population of Red Lake county since 1900, but unless the law passes, Mr. Tarrant's salary will remain the same as it is at present—$800 per year—until 1905, when another census of the state will be taken.

More Riots.

Disturbances of strikers are not nearly as grave as an individual disorder of the system. Overwork, loss of sleep, nervous tension will be followed by nervous collapse unless a reliable remedy is immediately employed. There's nothing so efficient to cure disorders of the liver or kidneys as Electric Bitters. It's a wonderful tonic, and effective nervine and the greatest all around medicine for run down systems. If dizzy spells, nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia and expels malaria germs. Only 50c, and satisfaction guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggist.

Locally a Fit Epitaph.

It makes all the difference in the world where the language is used. According to President Harris, of Amherst, for instance, a word that is looked upon as profanity in Boston, may express the deepest sentiment out West, in proof of which he tells the following story:

"A rough miner died out west, and was laid away by his fellow laborers, with a common slab of stone to mark his resting place. On the stone was this inscription:

"Bill Jenkins: died June 13, 1901. He done his damnedest. Angels could do no more."

The Stomach is the Man.

A weak stomach weakens the man, because it cannot transform the food he eats into nourishment. Health and strength cannot be restored to any sick man or weak woman without first restoring health and strength to the stomach. A weak stomach cannot digest enough food to feed the tissues and revive the tired and run down limbs and organs of the body. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cleanses, purifies, sweetens and strengthens the glands and membranes of the stomach, and cures indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. A. L. Reichert.

RED LAKE TREATY BILL PASSED AT LAST

Eleven Townships in Red Lake County to Be Opened for Settlement This Year.

To the closing hours of the Fifty-seventh congress the Indian appropriation bill was passed, and with it the bill opening to settlement eleven townships of the Red Lake Indian reservation of Red Lake county. All that is required to make this effective is the assent of the Indians, which, it is believed, can be secured during the coming summer.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer one Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. PROFESSIONAL & BRETHREN

By GEORGE E. WALSH.

CHAPTER XIX.

WITH the danger of exposure of my master removed, I returned home with a lighter heart. I reached there in time to have the lunch served to him. He had not noticed my absence, and I congratulated myself upon a shrewd piece of work. I had at last determined to bring matters to a climax.

It was two days after this that I got the opportunity to call upon Miss Stetson. I wanted to redeem her promise made on the day of her horseback accident.

I had learned through an accident that Dr. Squires would be away on Tuesday and that he would not return until late at night. I did not know what his mission was or where he was going. All that concerned me was that he would be absent and the house would be left in charge of his old servant.

It was the knowledge of this that made me anxious to appoint Tuesday for the little experiment I had in mind.

When I reached the Stetson mansion, I was informed that Miss Stetson was engaged. The servant knew me by this time, and while they did not exactly treat me as one of their number they did not accord me all the courtesy due a gentleman. I was told to take a seat until the person who was with Miss Stetson had gone.

My name was not even carried up to her, but I was too much preoccupied with my thoughts to resent this inselvility, and I made the most of it by taking a comfortable seat in the waiting room. This room opened right off the front parlor, and just back of that was the library.

For some time I remained seated there busily occupied with my own thoughts, but as time passed I became restless and anxious to make a change. Not hearing any voices, I rose from my seat and walked quietly into the parlor to look at some of the beautiful pictures hanging on the walls. This liberty, I knew, Miss Stetson would not resent.

As I stepped into the parlor I heard the sound of voices proceeding from the library. I would have retreated to the waiting room if the voice of Dr. Squires had not arrested my attention. I could not resist the temptation to listen to him, for, knowing what he was, I thought anything was fair enough for him, and I played the eavesdropper.

The portieres between the parlor and library were drawn, and through their thick folds I could just catch the words of the two. The first words of the doctor informed me that I had reached the place at a critical moment.

"Miss Belle, you do me injustice to say that I do not like pleasant surroundings and the finer things of life. I appreciate my tastes. No man appreciates more than I do."

I not mean to insinuate that, [illegible] Miss Stetson replied. "I merely said that I thought it so strange you should like to live in that old deserted, haunted mansion."

"I like to live there. It was not a matter of choice with me. I was poor and had to be under to carry out my experiments."

"You couldn't you find more congenial quarters without going to any more expense?"

"No—that is, none that would suit my purpose."

There was a short pause, then the doctor continued:

"But, Miss Belle, my time in the old haunted mansion is short. I'm going to leave it. My fortune has improved, and I shall very soon be gentlemen."

"Has your discovery proved successful so that you can confine some money on it?" she asked eagerly.

"No, not exactly that," he stammered. "But I'm not fortunate in another way. A distant relative has died and left his money to me. It is not much, but enough to keep me in comfort for the balance of my life. It will amount to about $100,000."

"Indeed! I'm so glad to hear it, doctor. Nobody will congratulate you more heartily than I, for I think you deserve it."

"It is kind of you to say it," he said slowly, "but there is one other thing necessary to complete my happiness."

Another pause followed in which I could imagine their exchange of looks.

"I would not mention it, Miss Belle, if I did not have your own word for it that you would not marry Charles," the doctor began again in a labored voice. "But when you told me that you would not marry him I thought that there was no longer any reason why I should ever say a word more for you. Miss Belle, I loved you before that, and I love you now. I am no designer poor; I'm not rich, but I'll have a competency enough for both of us. I love you, and your love alone will make me happy."

I trembled more than the doctor to catch the reply.

"Please don't talk to me like that, doctor," she said in a voice that had a piteous ring to it. "It is impossible."

"Why impossible? Nothing is impossible," he answered fiercely. "I've learned to believe that anything can be accomplished if we but will it. Why can you not love me and marry me?"

"You do not understand, doctor. I do not mention it again. It is useless for me to say this."

"But will you not give me your reasons?" he continued passionately. "You will not marry Charles?"

As almost inarticulate sound escaped his lips. He also rose from his seat, and I saw him move toward the portieres, and I withdrew rapidly to the waiting room.

There was a murmur of their voices for a few moments, and then the portieres parted and they entered the parlor. I coughed purposely to attract their attention. Miss Stetson moved toward me, and I arose to meet her.

"I fear the maid did not send up my name," I said in reply to her inquiring look. "She said you were engaged and that I could wait here."

"Have you been waiting long?" she asked.

"No; only half a minute," I replied boldly.

"You have a message from Mr. Goddard for me?"

"Yes, a private one, but I can wait." The doctor walked out of the parlor and gave me a close, scrutinizing glance. I was absorbed in studying the ceiling and did not meet his eyes, but I could feel the front door and the bid his hostess good day. Then I walked into the library to take his place.

CHAPTER XX.

MISS STETSON was considerably agitated and nervous when she finally appeared in the library. Her facial lines were drawn and haggard, indicating the strain she had just passed through. When she entered, I stood before her as I said:

"You must pardon me for telling you an untruth, but I could not do otherwise in the presence of your guest. I do not come with a message from my master, but with one from myself."

She looked inquisitively at me and waved her hand toward a seat while she dropped wearily into another.

"No; I will stand," I said, "until I find out whether my request will be granted."

"Your request? What is it?"

Her mind was still dwelling upon the interview that had just closed, and the purport of my words had hardly attracted her attention.

"Oh, I see!" she added a moment later, with the faintest indication of a smile on her face. "You have come to ask me to fulfill my promise of the other day."

"Exactly," I said.

"Then I will grant it."

"As I told you then, it will seem very strange to you, and I now repeat

"Then you will not grant my request?" it. But you will find in the end it will be for your own good."

"Anything, anything," she said, shuddering more interest. "I do not like so much mystery."

"But, ma'am, it will be a mystery to you for some time yet. I cannot explain matters now—not until my last request is fulfilled."

She looked at me with amusement and then added:

"Well, go on. I've promised, and I'll keep my word."

"My request is this: I want you to accompany me to a certain house on next Tuesday evening at 9 o'clock sharp. There I will explain and show you things that will greatly alter your views of some of your friends."

"Why, sir, that is a absurd proposition," she said, rising, with some dignity.

"Then you will not grant my request?" I said quietly.

"How can I under such circumstances?"

"You promised."

"Yes, anything in reason. But you ask me to go to a strange house with you in the evening, and what assurance have I that"—

"I understand, ma'am; you have no confidence in me. I reminded you on the time you promised to do what I asked of you that it would require no confidence and belief in me. I see now that you haven't."

"You are severe. I did not say that," she answered in a less repelling voice.

"No, but you implied as much. But I will not tear your faith in me any more. I will give you assurances that my purposes are honorable."

She waited for me to proceed without a flush overspread her face.

"You know Mr. Johnson?" I asked.

"Yes, very well."

"He is a friend of yours, and I believe you would trust yourself with him after dark."

She nodded affirmatively.

"Well, Mr. Johnson is in my secret and he will accompany us. Under those circumstances will you go with me next Tuesday evening?"

"Why, of course. It must be all right if Mr. Johnson approves of it."

"He does. He will call here before I do on that evening, and the three of us will go together."

"But where do we go?" she asked inquisitively.

"I cannot tell you now. You will know that night."

"How mysterious you seem! I do not understand it at all."

"You will in time. But one other request. Will you promise to keep this matter absolutely secret? Do not even tell Mr. Goddard or Dr. Squires. If you do, everything will be spoiled, and, mark my word, you will regret it if you do."

"I will promise," she answered.

"And keep your promise better than you did the other one," I could not refrain from saying, for her lack of trust to me had piqued me a little.

She colored and at first would have resented my bold words, but an afterthought checked her.

"Yes, I will redeem my promise this time without question."

"Thank you. Then on Tuesday at a quarter to 9 Mr. Johnson will call for you, and you will be ready to accompany him. I will call for both of you at 9 o'clock. I will guarantee that you will return to your home without harm or injury."

I hastily withdrew then. She accompanied me to the door. She was watching me peculiarly, trying to decide, I imagine, whether I was a monk or a sane man and whether she had made a mistake or not in promising to accompany me.

CHAPTER XXI.

WAITED with feverish anxiety for Tuesday night to arrive, for I naturally thought a great deal of my success or failure depended upon the success of my little scheme. If either Dr. Squires or Miss Stetson got a hint of my intentions, the game would be up and I would have all my labor for nothing. It would be such an easy matter for them, for either Miss Stetson or Mr. Johnson to drop in word to some relative or intimate friend which would ruin everything.

I had not learned what Dr. Squires' mission was in leaving the mansion on Tuesday afternoon and evening, but I suspected that it had something to do with his prospective fortune, and this fortune, I felt reasonably certain, consisted solely of the stolen goods which had accumulated in his house. He had evidently reached the point where he thought it advisable to ship them away at some more convenient place where they could be disposed of to advantage. It would be comparatively easy to send them off by express to some distant city and melt up the silver pieces and sell the metal for what it would bring.

While he was making arrangements to escape with his unlawful goods I was planning to capture him and rob him of his sole right to a fortune that, not double but he would take the lion's share or not much less, and incidentally earn a man portion, or probably be would at the last moment escape without dividing at all with him. He was capable of such a trick.

Shortly after dusk on Tuesday I approached the old mansion on foot. I did not make sure of the doctor's disappearance. I saw him go on the train about noon and leave for the city.

As soon as it was dark enough to conceal myself from view I approached the house and looked through the kitchen windows. The old Indian servant was alone and seemed to be busily engaged in cooking his supper. What I had made sure of this, I hurried around to the front piazza and began to climb the post which had once been removed as a similar road upon.

Knowing the way well, I made quick work in climbing on the roof of the piazza, and I reached the upper story without mishap. Here I found everything as I had left it during my previous visit. I opened the window without difficulty and proceeded to lift the trap door in the floor. The lock had not been tampered with, and nobody had been in the room for my absence.

In a few moments I found my way down the ladder and stood in the upper hall. The house was wrapped in darkness, except for the light in the kitchen. This all helped to make my plan easier.

I descended the front stairs noiselessly, and through the front door I could catch a glimpse of the old servant. From this position I could observe his movements without danger. It was necessary that I should be able to cope successfully with him, and I was quite sure that I was equal to the task.

For some time I watched his slow movements about the kitchen. He prepared his supper and ate it in silence. Then what he proceeded to wash up the dishes I found that it was getting late, and for the success of my plan it would be necessary to complete matters. I purposely dropped a heavy book in the front hall and then glided quickly behind the other portieres. The noise, as I expected, attracted the old man from his work, and he came to satisfy into the hall, peering intently ahead of him.

He did not expect to find any one in the house. The noise sounded as if it proceeded from the front piazza. The old man glanced through the plate glass of the front door before he opened it. This was my opportunity. I sprang out of the darkness and landed plump upon the man's back, carrying him to the floor by my weight.

As we fell together I had grasped his two arms and held them securely locked behind him. For a moment his face was frightened by this sudden attack that he did not struggle, but when he felt me running a rope around his elbows and wrists he understood me of his strength and fought desperately. I had not underestimated his strength. He was thin and lithe, but powerful and sinewy. He was like a serpent in his wriggling, and I had the greatest difficulty in the world to hold him. We struggled and scuffled about the hall floor for ten minutes before I got the rope into place. Once or twice I felt that the battle was going against me, but I renewed my efforts and finally pinioned his arms behind him with the rope.

When his arms securely tied the man gave up the struggle and lay there panting and attempting to speak. I saw that he was really dumb, although not deaf. He could not speak, but he could hear.

"Be quiet now, and I shall not hurt you," I said in answer to the question which I could plainly read in his eyes. "You are not going to harm you; you must submit to being bound for the rest of the night. I will make you as comfortable as possible."

I had grasped his two arms.

A piteous sigh up and carried him into the library and then I went downstairs. After placing him in an easy position on the floor I bound him securely to the posts, running the ropes around and around his body and the bed. He looked more like a bandaged mummy than a living being when I had finished.

"Now, you'll remain there until I call for you," I said. "If I catch you attempting to escape I shall be severe."

I placed my revolver at his temple as I spoke to emphasize my words. He looked frightened and shook his head vigorously.

Then I left him, locking the door and windows securely, and returned to the scene of our recent struggle. I lighted a lamp long enough to give me an opportunity to clean up things which we had displaced in our struggle. I wanted everything to appear natural when the doctor returned home.

Leaving a dim light burning in the kitchen, I took the front door key with me and stepped out into the cool night air. "So far so good," I said to myself. It was then half past 8, and I had half an hour in which to reach the Stetson mansion in time to meet my appointment.

CHAPTER XXII.

THAT was at Miss Stetson's promptly at 9 o'clock. Mr. Johnson was waiting there for me, and Miss Stetson was all prepared for her strange journey.

"I don't like this at all," she said, beginning to lose her courage when she saw me. "I know whether to regard it as a joke or not."

"It is not a joke," Mr. Johnson replied gravely. "I am in the secret of it."

"Why not tell me all, then? I don't like mysteries."

"It is for a time to tell you," he answered, patting her hand.

Knowing that he took me for a detective, I answered evasively:

"We'll soon be there, Miss Stetson, and then you will know all."

I led them a short walk down the old highway until we reached the ground surrounding the old mansion. When I turned to go up to the house Mr. Johnson protested and exclaimed:

"Is Dr. Squires?"

I nodded affirmatively and increased my pace.

"Of course this is where Dr. Squires lives," she said, turning to address Miss Stetson, looking from one to the other.

Neither of us made reply, but trudged on in silence.

Without any formality or explanation I produced the key and opened the front door of the old house. I stepped inside and lighted the hall lamp. Then I key followed me and closed the door.

"Dr. Squires is not at home tonight," said Miss Stetson, "and I do not see why we should enter his house in this way. Where did you get the key, and where is his old servant?"

"One thing at a time," Miss Stetson," I replied. "I will explain everything in a few moments. Please be seated in the hall until I light more lamps."

I left them in the hallway while I went through the suites to see if the old servant was all right. I unlocked the room and glanced in. He was propped up in the same position as I had left him, and his bindings were secure.

I closed and locked the door and turned then to the treasure room. I put two or three extra lights in this place, placing them so that the rays would glisten on the silverware and jewelry. I threw all the coverings of the stolen goods and even arranged many of them so they would show off to the best advantage. With the lights shining down upon them they made a fine display, and I felt certain that it was a spectacular effect that grafted my little vanity.

I returned to the hall, where I had left my two companions, and said:

"If you will accompany me upstairs, I will make all this mystery plain."

They both eagerly followed me, even Miss Stetson showing more than her ordinary curiosity. She preceded Mr. Johnson, and as she reached the door of the room I threw it open and said:

"Behold, Miss Stetson, Dr. Squires' secret! Here is the mystery which he has safely guarded from you and all the people around here."

She stepped into the room, shaded her eyes with one hand and then stepped back with a little cry of amazement.

"What does this all mean? What beautiful things! Where did they [illegible]"

"Examine some of them, Miss Stetson," I said. "Look at this handsome silver teapot and water pitcher."

She stepped forward and took them out of my hand and then nearly dropped them in her agitation.

"Why, they are mine! They have my mother's initials on. They are the ones stolen from my house."

"Yes, they belong to you, and if you will look around you will see plenty of others that you may recognize—and only those which belonged to you, but to your neighbors."

She picked up one after another, handling them with such eagerness that she nearly dropped them. Then she turned helpless toward me and Mr. Johnson.

"What does it mean, Mr. Jalmson?" she asked in a trembling voice.

"That we have at last run the robbers to earth," he replied sternly.

"Who are they?" she gasped while her face turned white as a sheet. "Not—surely not—Dr.—"

"Yes, Miss Stetson, I fear Dr. Squires is one of the guilty parties."

"It cannot be. What could he do such a thing? I—I—don't understand it."

She leaned against the wall for support. Mr. Jalmson put his arm around her waist.

"You must not give way to your feelings," he said tenderly. "You must be brave. There is more to do tonight. We must tell you the whole story before you must be equal to the emergency. It is difficult."

I interrupted him by touching his arm. The sound of wheels on the gravelly drive had attracted my attention.

"Somebody is coming," I said. "Go down to the office. I will follow you."

I turned the light out quickly, locked the door and bounded down the stairs two at a time. Had the doctor unexpectedly returned earlier than he had promised?

When I reached the office, I shoved them into a closet shut off from the rest of the room with soft, sheery curtains. The place was barely large enough for all of us to squeeze in. I warned them to keep quiet until I gave them permission to speak. Though the soft curtains we could see any one in the office, but nobody could see us.

We had barely closeted ourselves when the sound of a key in the lock of the front door announced the coming of the owner of the house. Heavy steps in the hall followed, and the voice of Dr. Squires could be heard saying:

"I suppose my man has retired, Charles. I told him not to wait up for me. He has left a light burning for me in the office. It always seems more cheerful to have a light waiting for you."

He entered the office, followed by my master. After turning up the light into a brighter blaze he removed his overcoat.

"No, Charles; you're wrong in imagining that I do not help you in my experiments. I am no married impresario in you every week."

The doctor took a bottle from the mantelpiece and poured out some brandy, swallowing it with a gulp.

"But you have the effect your hypnotic treatment has upon me," my master replied. "Every morning after you subject me to it I'm so weak and languid that I do not care to do anything."

"Merely temporary—merely temporary, Charles. You will soon be relieved of the hypnotic state without feeling some ill effects of it afterward. But they are merely temporary and don't last lasting; they leave no permanent ill effects. You soon rally from your fatigue."

"Yes, I'm all right after a long rest, but it does not seem natural that such a reaction should follow."

"On the contrary, it is very natural—most natural. I should be surprised if it were not so. I cannot enter into a detailed explanation of hypnotism. It would require too much time, but I can assure you that it effects the nervous system for the time, and under the intense strain the nerves are subjected to the body must afterward feel worn and weary. That is all there is to it. Take a good week's vacation, and you might hesitate, but one with your strong, vigorous constitution ought to stand it."

My master did not reply, but remained passive, evidently thinking of the fee in the grate.

"Why should you be so discouraged in the hall until I light more lamps?"

"Why should you be so discouraged tonight?" the doctor added a moment later. "Has anything occurred to make you dissatisfied with my treatment?"

"No, except that I'm getting skeptical. I believe at times that I'm entirely well. I would never know that anything ailed me except when I'm reminded of it by my engagements with you. Then I go home from here and wake up the next morning with all the feelings of a man who had been through a severe fit of sickness. I don't understand it."

"My dear Charles, that is the peculiarity of your disease and of my treatment of it," the doctor replied. "I have succeeded in warding off my attacks of the disease itself, but at a slight expense of nerves. That you must expect. No medicine can cure an inherited disease without giving some counter shock to the system."

"So you've told me before, doctor, and I've accepted it trustingly. But now a week to show how much longer you will have to experiment with me? You admit yourself it is only experimental?"

"It was at first, but not now. I'm positive about the results. So well have I succeeded that I'm ready to announce that in a few more more treatments you will be entirely cured. Then will there be no more danger of phthisis, and you can feel that you are free from any taint of heredity."

That is comforting, and under such circumstances I will permit you to continue the treatment for another month. Then I will refuse to submit longer to these hypnotic trances."

"Very well; I accept the conditions, and I have reason to believe that you will always thank me for my perseverance."

"I shall if you succeed."

"Shall we make another experiment, as you call it, tonight? It will shorten your month by a few days."

"Yes, I'm willing."

Then a most remarkable scene occurred.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE doctor busied himself with some medical implements, while my master remained perfectly still, sitting gloomily and absently in the chair. In about five minutes the former seemed to have found what he wanted and said:

"Now, if you will take a seat in the office, Charles, I will hypnotize you so you can return home early and have a good sleep. It is rather late now—after 1."

He looked at his watch as he spoke, and my master took a seat in a large, comfortable operating chair. He threw himself back into it and closed his eyes for a moment.

"Now, Charles, look at me and glide yourself to my hands," the doctor said. "Remain in as passive a condition as possible."

My master sat up and looked dreamily at the man, while the doctor slowly and methodically went to work.

He was hypnotizing him not against his will, but with his full consent. Miss Stetson breathed hard and with difficulty restrained a scream. I placed a warning hand on her arm. She controlled herself with marvelous power and waited patiently for further developments.

In a few moments my master was reduced to a perfectly helpless condition. He was merely an automaton obeying the will of Dr. Squires. The latter smiled quietly to himself.

"Now, Charles, you do not remember any of your last visit, do you?" he asked.

"No. Only the present."

"You feel tired and weary, don't you?"

"Yes; very tired."

"Well, rouse yourself and do my bidding. Remember this always."

"Certainly. What is it? I feel fresh enough for anything."

"I thought so."

Then after a short pause:

"I want you to be as shrewd and alert as possible tonight, for I have a very difficult mission for you. You know the large mansion on the main road just as you turn off from Gates Ferry?"

My master nodded.

"Well, that house is occupied by Dr. Chalmers, a rich old fogy, who has plenty of valuable articles in the mansion. I want you to go as directly back to me all that you can collect. Any difficult mission for you that you know the large mansion on the main road just as you turn off from Gates Ferry?"

My master nodded.

ANOTHER revolution in China will insure a busy and prosperous season for the executioner.

THE president has called the senate in special session to take action on the pending treaties.

THANKS for small blessings. Congress has put an effectual quietus on the infamous ship subsidy bill.

MR. BRYAN wants to know what's the matter with Governor Garvin of Rhode Island for the next Democratic candidate for president.

OUR protectionist friends who insist that that the tariff has nothing to do with regulating the price of commodities are invited to study the letter of Forman, Ford & Co. recently sent to the plate glass trade.

JOE TAINE, the well-known writer on agricultural topics, says that the lately formed farm products' trust concerns the farmers of the whole country. It is in a financial way one of the strongest trusts in the whole country and has a practical cinch on the business, for the reason that it controls very valuable patents. It is said that the price of machinery is to be advanced, and it probably will be, for as matrimony is the objective point in courtship so higher prices and bigger profits are the real objective point of all trust schemes.

THE bill authorizing an additional judge for this district has passed both houses of the legislature and will undoubtedly become a law. Interest now centers on the prospective appointee. At one time it was thought that Andrew Grindland of Warren had the call, but as he has recently been appointed a regent of state university it is doubtful if Governor Van Sant will care to transfer him to the more important position of district judge. In the meantime let us hope that the governor will not overlook the qualifications of the Red Lake county bar.

THE most striking tribute paid to the memory of Abraham Lincoln on his birthday, February 12, was a resolution adopted by the Texas house of representatives and reading as follows:

"Resolved, That when this house adjourns today it does so in honor to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, this being the ninety-fourth anniversary of the birth of that unique man of American history whom all nations call statesman, hero and martyr."

The copy of the legislative record containing this resolution was sent to us by a member of the house, who marked two names as being the only Republicans in that body.

TOOTH a man's pocket-book and you find out where he lives. Last year when it was proposed to organize a mutual fire insurance company for the benefit of Minnesota newspaper publishers, two-thirds of the editors declared that they would not sanction a policy that interfered with anyone's private business. Then the squeeze came. The old line companies arbitrarily raised the premiums on priatshops from 25 to 100 per cent., and this year when the proposition to organize against the trust was made, there was scarcely a dissenting voice in the chorus of disapproval of the greed and rapacity of the insurance trust.

DOES anyone doubt that such trusts as the Standard Oil need curbing? A press dress dispatch says that on Monday the Standard Oil company declared a dividend of $20 a share upon its $100,000,000 of capital stock. The dividend is payable on March 16. It is an increase of $10 a share over the amount of the last November dividend, but it is the same amount as was declared in February, 1902, 1901 and 1900. The total dividends paid on Standard oil shares in previous years have been as follows: In 1902, 45 per cent; 1901, 48 per cent; 1900, 48 per cent; 1899, 33 per cent; 1898, 30 per cent; 1897, 33 per cent; 1896, 31 per cent; and from 1891 to 1895, inclusive, 12 per cent. yearly.

HERE is congressman-elect John Lind's opinion of the new so-called anti-trust legislation: "It is undoubtedly very satisfactory to the railroads. It repeals the drastic criminal penalties of the old law, and what is more important, it removes any possibility for securing convictions under the section imposing fines by directing the penalties against the several parties to a transaction. There is no more effective way to nullify such prohibition than by making both parties equally guilty, the one who gives and the one who receives the rebate. That makes it certain that neither party will betray the other. Both are participants to the misdemeanor and they will stand together to prevent any disclosure or conviction."

THE Warren Register editor wrongly interprets THE COURIER'S position respecting the attitude the North should assume toward the South. The editor of this paper is not a Southron. His forbears fought for the abolition of slavery, and we are proud to believe they were right. But the war is over. There is no longer excuse for either section to maintain an unfriendly attitude toward the other. We are bound up in a common country and are working out a common destiny. We share equally the glorious traditions of the Revolution, and in later war the lads from North Dakota and from the everglades stood shoulder to shoulder in defense of the country's flag. Why should we now, forty years after the reconciliation at Appomatox, seek to renew the embers of sectionalism by decrying the South the small satisfaction of building monuments to the memory of their heroes? Why, indeed?

AN INJUSTICE.

For reasons that are pretty well understood the Crookston Times doesn't like Public Examiner Johnson, but this fact ought not excuse the Times for resorting to wilful prevarication to bolster its warfare on him. The Times charges that the state board of railroad commissioners terrorted out the delinquency of certain railroads with regard to bank taxes, and that Johnson had had nothing to do with the matter except to claim the glory. This is the first time we have ever observed that the present board of commissioners was charged with any investigation in, which the people of the state secured their rights. As a matter of fact the last legislature specifically delegated the duty of investigating the reports of the railways to the examiner's office, and Mr. Johnson and his deputies succeeded after months of hard labor in finding somewhere in the neighborhood of $200,000 justly owing to the state, and of this sum about $85,000 has been paid into the state treasury without protest.

It is easily conceivable that the Times and other apologists for official depravity should like neither Mr. Johnson nor his methods, but it is a sad commentary on northern Minnesota journalism that one of its leading exponents should endeavor to wreak vengeance at the expense of truth and fair play.

THE PATHOS OF REAL LIFE.

The editorial writer on the St. Paul News has of late been abjuring politics, economics and the other customary editorial themes, and is devoting attention to social topics which seldom secure mention on this side of his news columns. Here is one of his best productions:

There is the Hutton case.

It almost seems as if the affair was planned by Destiny to show how deeply a woman may be wronged and what a miserable, detestable fellow dog a man can be when he tries.

John T. Johnson was the man in the case. He grew up with May Hutton. As children they plucked berries together, studied the same books and enjoyed the same sports. She made him her knight. As he grew older he became a king in her life. She gave him her heart, her mind, her whole impulsive self. She didn't think or reason. She simply loved, and with her right was a man's smile and kindness and wrong his frown.

It wasn't wise or moral. He didn't deserve her love. He was not big and clean and brave. He tempted her. He made his love the vehicle of her destruction and tired of her just as thousands of men who were cowards have wearied and insulted love.

She asked him to marry her.

Worthless in the beginning and worthless every minute of his life, a tempter and a coward, he struck her in the face and taunted her with being the very thing he had made her.

You see he was tired of her.

She shot him. She put a bullet between his eyes and then fell upon his dead body and cried that he might beat her as he would, if he would only come back to her.

The other day she told her story. She didn't seek to shield her own weakness or to hide her love. She faced a jury and did not see the faces that were the faces of the jurors on the bench.

Then May Hutton completed her story tho trial stopped.

Something bigger than a statute was in the minds of the men, and the judge and the jury knew that it was he who should be facing a court of justice. The real murderer, the destroyer of far more than a mere life, was out of reach of human hands, hiding his shame in a narrow grave.

For killing John T. Johnson May Hutton was acquitted by the order of the court.

All this happened in Brooklyn, the City of Churches. It might have happened anywhere, for humanity the world over hates a coward who wrongs a life while professing the holiest of passions, love.

LITTLEFIELD'S LIST OF 800 TRUSTS.

It will be difficult for the Republicans to run away from the trust issue in future, or to deny as did Senator Hanna in 1900, that there are any trusts. One of their leading congressmen, Hon. Chas. E. Littlefield, of Maine, whom the administration last year selected to present the only measure for trust bill in congress, has settled this discussion in his party. Mortified, perhaps, because his bill was shelved by the trusts which controlled his party, he resolved to hit them and their agents in congress a backhanded swipe which would make them gasp for breath. He got together and published in the Congressional Record a "list of trusts" —not exactly simply, but real trusts—which fills more than six paces of the Congressional Record. He says of this list that it "contains the great total of nearly 800 trusts, with a total capitalization of nearly fourteen billions. These totals are fully 33 per cent. larger than those of a year later list hitherto published."

This list puts in the shade any list published by the Democrats or Democratic press

Genereau & Zaiser inaugurate their spring campaign by quoting a list of exceptional bargains in seasonable goods. It will pay you to watch THE COURIER'S columns for announcements by this store.

Grand Chancellor James Robertson, of the Knights of Pythias, will visit the local lodge on Monday evening, March 30, and preparations are being made for an unusually interesting meeting.

Ed L. Healy and L. C. Simons drove to Tilden Sunday and took the train at that place for the Twin cities, Mr. Healy on a business mission and Mr. Simons to return to his duties at the capitol.

The bill increasing the amount of appropriations given fire departments has passed both houses of the legislature, and as a result the local department will receive nearly $200 from the state this year.

Treasurer Tandberg reports that the personal property taxes are pretty nearly all in, and that not a great many Red Lake county citizens will be obliged to pay the added ten per cent. for delinquency.

Mr. and Mrs. V. M. Higinbotham are expected to arrive from Forest City, Iowa, tomorrow or Saturday. They have rented a suite of rooms in the it. H. Bourdon residence and will go to housekeeping at once.

William Schwalen and wife returned Saturday from their visit with relatives and friends at Hudson and Houlton, Wis. While away Mr. Schwalen purchased the spring stock for the furniture firm of Anderson & Schwalen.

H. H. Zaiser took charge of the store of Garceau & Zaiser Monday, and fits into the position as one "to the manor born." Mr. Zaiser is prominent among Red Lake county people and will be sure to receive a flattering patronage.

The next band concert will be given at the Metropolitan opera house the latter part of the month—probably the 29th. There will be no dancing, and the program will consist of vocal and concert music appropriate to the Lenten season.

Regarding the results of the last teachers' examinations, it is expected that they will be made known about the middle of March. There has been some unavoidable delay in marking the papers, occasioned by the want of room for the large army of markers.

The Fergus Falls Journal states that the marriage of Rev. R. N. Adams, for many years pastor of the Presbyterian church in this city, and Miss Mary Compton will occur next month at the Soldiers' home. Miss Compton is a sister of Capt. James Compton.

Frank E. Hunt returned Tuesday morning from Minneapolis, where he attended the annual meeting of the Minnesota retail hardware dealers' association. Mr. Hunt is a member of the board of directors and has always taken an active part in the work of the association.

Josephine Kienast will hold a public sale of live stock and farm machinery at her farm in Poplar River township, on Friday, March 20. Nine head of horses, eight head of cattle and eleven head of sheep are listed, and also an unusually large line of good farm machinery.

W. A. McIntyre was a business visitor to points over west from Friday until Monday. The sign on his office door said he was at Crookston, but those who pin their faith in signs do not always reach a correct conclusion, and thus, again, it is barely possible that Mac altered his objective point after posting the notice.

The Fertile Brick company has closed contracts for a drain tile and hollow block factory. The addition will cost about $12,000. Work will be commenced at once, and the factory will be ready by July. Harry T. Zartman of Parry, Iowa, has been engaged as superintendent, and about twenty men will be employed in the factory.

M. Shagnon's grocery store was closed last Friday at the instigation of the creditors of the establishment. It is stated that the liabilities are about $2000 with assets nearly as much. The interests of the creditors have been placed in the hands of James I. Wyer, and it is thought that at least 70 per cent. of the claims will be paid.

Thief River News: W. C. Smiley has completed a map which comprises a portion of Red Lake, Marshall and Beltrami counties, which is all tributary to Thief River Falls. The map is a very accurate one and shows all roads and bridges. It is the intention to have about 10,000 printed and they will be purchased by the land men doing business in this city.

Representative Krostue, of Polk county, has introduced a bill providing that the state shall pay fourfifths of the loss in cases where horses are killed on account of glanders. The same law is at present in force in cases of cattle being condemned for tuberculosis. The bill provides that no horse shall be appraised as worth more than $75.

The Red Lake Falls friends of Leland Healy will be pleased, though not surprised, to learn that he has been chosen from among about 400 freshmen to lead the annual debate between the freshmen and sophomores, to be held at the state university May 8. At a recent examination Les was marked 100 in argumentation, only one other member of the class receiving this marking.

The Presbyterian church now stands in its new location at the foot of Main street. Some apprehension has been expressed because of the elevation of the building, but we are informed that in addition to the regular blocking placed by the contractor substantial supports and cross-braces are being put in all places possible, and nothing short of a hurricane will shake the building.

Seed wheat, says a farmer in the Crookston Times, will not be as scarce this season as it has been for several years past. Nevertheless it will be slightly in advance of the market price of the product. It would be a good thing for all farmers who have not as yet secured their grain to get it as soon as they can, as it will certainly not be any cheaper than it is at the present time.

The March apportionment of the state school fund has been made by the state auditor. The total number of school pupils in Minnesota is 383,918 and the apportionment is $1.39 per capita. The apportionment last October was $2 per capita but it is always larger in the fall than it is at this time. Red Lake county has 3,263 pupils entitled to apportionment, and will receive $4,241.90.

Ole Theobaldi, undoubtedly one of the greatest living violinists at present will give a concert in the opera house here March 6. Theobaldi's fame as an artist is so widely known all over the world that scarcely anything need be said in his behalf. Several years ago he was a leading cities of Europe and in the United States, and no violinist since the days of Ole Bull has met with greater success than Theobaldi. One-half of the proceeds of this entertainment will go for the famine relief fund.

At the regular meeting Tuesday evening the Rebekahs installed officers for the ensuing year as follows: Noble grand, Miss Margaret Taylor; vice grand, Mrs. P. A. Whiteley; recording secretary, Miss Jessie Mullin; financial secretary, Mrs. C. E. Baughton; treasurer, Mrs. William Findeison. The noble grand announced appointment of the following officers: Right supporter noble grand, Miss Carrie Pirnih; left supporter noble grand, Mrs. Frank Jeffers; chaplain, Mrs. H. C. Hanson; inside guardian, Mrs. F. A. Mixen; outside guardian, Mrs. F. E. Hunt; warden, Mrs. August Riechel.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Pleth, of St. Hilaire, returned home last Thursday from their extended trip abroad. During the past three months they have toured a portion of Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Germany, making their longest stay in Denmark, where Mr. Pleth was born. Mr. Pleth says there will be an immense immigration to this country from the points visited by him, but acknowledges that the greater number of the immigrants will seek homes in the Canadian Northwest. This fact is due to the efforts of agents for the various companies interested in the sale of lands in Canada, who have spent the winter through the lands visited by Mr. Pleth, where they have taken great pains to extol the merits of the cheap lands, and have worked up a great deal of interest in immigration.

Adrian Democrat: The Unity circle assembled at Mrs. Libaire's Thursday evening and proceeded from there to the home of Mrs. Anna Childs, where they spent a few hours very pleasantly. Mrs. Childs was presented with a beautiful silk quilt in token of the love and esteem in which she is held by the members of the circle. She and her son Clyde will leave about March 10 for Red Lake county, where they have a farm.

Crookston Times: A suit in which a title to a lot in Red Lake Falls is involved occupied the attention of Judge Watts Tuesday morning. The lot in question is owned by a Minneapolis gentleman named Brunor. In 1892 the county records show that the taxes were not paid and the subsequent year the property was sold for taxes and a tax deed given. Bruner claims that the taxes were paid for the year in question and asks that the tax deed be set aside. The case drags with the writer briefs to the case and Judge Watts will render a decision later.

What's in a Name?

Everything is in the name when it comes to Witch Hazel Salve. E. C. DeWitt & Co. of Chicago, discovered some years ago, how to make a salve from Witch Hazel that is a specific for Piles. For blind, bleeding, itching and protruding piles, eczema, cuts, burns, bruises and all skin diseases, DeWitt's Salve is equal. This has given rise to numerous worthless counterfeits. Sun

Stroke Shattered My Nerves.

Gave Up Preaching For Two Years.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Put Me On Active List.

Are you well? Do you sleep well? Do you get up rested, fresh and vigorous? Is your mind clear and active? If not read the following. See what another has suffered and how he recovered.

"Some years ago I was afflicted with sun stroke which left me with a shattered nervous system and exceedingly poor health. I suffered terribly with pain in my head, and was unable to study, preach or work. I lost my study, and after striving for two years to wear the trouble off, I was compelled to give up my pastoral labor and retire to my farm where I spent nearly two years trying to recuperate. It was all of no avail. Physicians' treatment and patent medicines failed to relieve me. I was exceedingly nervous and irritable and sometimes would shake terribly. I could not bear any noise. At last an excitement the blood would rush to my face and head. I was induced to write and consult Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. After using one bottle I could see improvement in my condition so I continued taking it for nearly a year. I am happy to say I no longer have those pains in my head or nervous spells. My appetite is good and I am able to preach three times on Sunday without fatigue. I consider Dr. Miles' Nervine the most wonderful medicine ever discovered." C. D. Hall, Holman, Pastor U. MISS CATHLEEN NEILSON, WHO IS TO MARRY REGINALD VANDERBILT.

The most important society event scheduled for the early winter will be the marriage of Reginald Vanderbilt to Miss Cathleen Neilson. Young Mr. Vanderbilt is just twenty-one and is the youngest son of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt. Miss Neilson is of the famous Gebhard family. She is not only a beauty and an heiress, but she brings to the Vanderbilt family the social prestige of Kaiserbocker meestry.

ARCHDUCHESS ELIZABETH, WHO IS TO WED.

Archduchess Elizabeth of Austria, who is said to have been recently betrothed to a grandson of the late Don Pedro of Brazil, is the youngest sister of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, heir presumptive to the throne of Austria-Hungary.

LUNCHEON TIME AT A FASHIONABLE OUTDOOR HORSE SHOW

The outdoor horse show is just now claiming the attention of the members of society's so called smart set. At Tuxedo, Newport, Lenox and other fashionable summer resorts the open air horse show has come to be one of the chief events of the season. It is a sort of glorified county fair with luncheon trimmings. Those who attend drive to the grounds in smartly appointed rigs, and the exhibition of side gowns is as much a part of the affair as is the indoor horse shows which come later. In this scene is shown a group of prominent society folks. The young man at the left is Stanley Mortimer Couch, and the young lady to whom he is talking is Miss Evelyn Blight, noted beauty and heiress. While they are chatting the butler and his assistants are preparing luncheon, from the hamper carried in the box of the hunting drag, and when the time comes it will be served. You may judge by the bottles and cups that it will be no skimpy affair.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of three certain mortgages made executed and delivered by Magnhild Strong and Ole Strong, her husband, mortgagors, to N. E. Thompson, mortgagee, which mortgages bear date the 28th day of December, 1901, and were filed of in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of January, 1902, at 10:30 o'clock P. M., in Book "M" of mortgages on page 323, and is now recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, in Book "M" of mortgages, on page 323, the first (1st) parcel of which (1902) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) of section (one (1)) and four (4) section twenty-nine (29), in township one hundred and fifty-two (152), N., Range forty-three (43) W., containing 153 10-100 acres, and was given to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten (10) cent. per annum, payable annually on the 28th day of December in each year, according to the conditions of one principal note and interest coupon attached thereto, and the second (2nd) parcel of which (1902) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) of section (one (1)) and four (4) section twenty-nine (29), in township one hundred and fifty-two (152), N., Range forty-three (43) W., containing 153 10-100 acres, and was given to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten (10) cent. per annum, payable annually on the 28th day of December in each year, according to the conditions of one principal note and interest coupon attached thereto, and the third (3rd) parcel of which (1902) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) of section (one (1)) and four (4) section twenty-nine (29), in township one hundred and fifty-two (152), N., Range forty-three (43) W., containing 153 10-100 acres, and was given to secure the payment of the sum of two hundred dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten (10) cent. per annum, payable annually on the 28th day of December in each year, according to the conditions of one principal note and interest coupon attached thereto, and the default has been in the payment of said principal sum and interest on said mortgages for the space of more than one year next before the commencement of this action, and the whole sum of principal and interest having become due and payable.

And whereas, there is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice on said principal notes and mortgages and for taxes paid by the mortgagee the sum of Two hundred and three (2) and 39-100 dollars.

And whereas, because of said default the power of sale in said mortgages contained has become operative and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law to recover said mortgage indebtedness.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided I will on the mortgaged premises above described, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said County of Red Lake, in the front door of the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls, in said County, on the 28th day of March, 1903, at 10 o'clock A. M. of the aforenoon, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, taxes and costs of sale and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year thereafter, as provided by law.

Order of Hearing on Petition for License to Sell Land.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, COUNTY OF Red Lake, ss.

In Probate Court,
Special Term, February 25, 1903.

On reading and filing the petition of Minnie Hall, praying among other things that said C. N. Hanson at the time of his death was seized of certain real estate which is described in the petition herein, and that prior to his death he had entered into a contract in writing for the sale of said land to said petitioner, Wm. Lindekugel and covenanted to convey the same to said Lindekugel by sufficient deed with usual covenants as full number, that said Lindekugel has often and at about to pay in full the purchase price of said land, and that he is now a resident of Red Lake County, Minn., and that no person has been appointed by the proper authority to execute such deed, and it appearing by such petition that said instruments are true and that it is necessary and proper to carry out said contract that a deed be made by the heirs at law of said real estate, and that it will be for the best interests of said estate and of all persons interested therein that the said estate described in the petition herein should be so conveyed.

It is Ordered, That all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court on Friday, the 24th day of March, A. D. 1903, at 2 o'clock P. M., at the Probate Office in the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls, in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why order should not be made to said administrator to convey said real estate according to the prayer of said petition.

And it is further Ordered, that this Order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake County Courier, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls, in said County.

Dated at Red Lake Falls, Minn., the 25th day of February, 1903.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $3.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

EFFORT.

'Tis not enough to tune the lyre
And wait for harmonies to come,
God sendeth not celestial fire
When humanitarts are cold and numb.

'Tis not enough to calmly wait
That quickening dew should on us fall,
To vaguely long for what is great
While still pursuing what is small.

'Tis not enough with tears of woe
To weep for all the world's distress,
The drops that from inaction flow
Nor us, nor other lives, will bless.

'Tis not enough the love to take
That other hearts on ours outpour;
The soul is only kept awake
By giving something from its store.

'Tis not enough with drooping wing
And aimless feet to walk this earth;
Effort alone can blessing bring:
And crown the soul with ser'enest worth.

A PESKY WHALE.

"THERE'S whales an' whales," said the captain, suddenly. - "Some of 'em is peaky critters, an' some ain't so pesky."

Smoke went up in clouds, and there was silence for five minutes.

"Reckon you've got something on your mind, cap," said the doctor.

"Oh, nothin' very partickler," said the captain, "but when whales was introdooced it reminded me. I had old Liz up Behring sea way two years ago—old Liz was my ship, her full name bein' Elizabeth J. Barker—an' we'd had a pretty good season. September we put around for the Horn, and, as things happened, didn't see another whale till we struck into the Forties. Then, sir, 'bout 11 o'clock one fine mornin', we-de in' about six knots, we raised a whale that was a whale.'

"Sligˌ, I bet," said the doctor.

"No, not so terrible big," said the captain, "but pesky. I was standin' about midships when one of the men sings out: 'Ol. Cap, look at 'er blow.' Sure 'nough, half a mile off and dead abeam to starboard, he was blowin'. He send up a good spout and then seemed to hinder settle himself, like he was agoin' give, 'bout a good bit of his length. I hove old Liz to, and we put over a couple of boats. Rowin' in the small boat was a Dutchman named Frank. I mention him, 'cause he comes into the yarn pretty prominent. Frank was a good sailor, but one of them fellers that has dreadful little to say. He tended right to business and kept his hatch battened close. Well, as it turned out, the little boat licked the big one and got first whack at the whale. They put a harpoon into him just over his port fin and down he went.

"I stood a-watchin' things through a glass. I waited an' waited for the boat to start off in tow, but she didn't do nothin' but set still, which was puzzlin'. In about five minutes somethin' big an' black broke water 'tween us and the boat, an' there was old blower, not more'n 200 yards from the place he went down. He wasn't up long, but enough to git his hearin's, I guess, for down he went again, an' I could see the bow man gettin' ready to give him all the rope he'd take. Then the boat started, slewed a bit an' come dead for the ship at a 4-knot clip. I never see a boat travel so! We watched 'em, an' when she got within a quarter of a mile I thinks to myself: 'This bg little' blamed interestin'. I wonder is that whale goin' to skver off or is he goin' to give us a ram? That boat, sir, traveled for us as true as a hair, an' I could see the men was gittin' excited. On she come, throwin' spray like a liner, and I calklated if she held her course she'd hit us no near 'midships it wouldn't be worth measurin' the difference. Then I see the man in the bow make a pass for the rope with the hatchet, but he was nervous like, an' missed it, for the hatchet went overboard an' he, losin' his balance, along with it. The rest of the men wasn't long deelgin' what they'd do. It was go overboard or git smashed to flinders, and when they got within 50 yard of us they all went over but Frank.

"'Jump, you idiot,' yells I 'do you want to git stove?' Nobbs he didn't want to, but I reckon it wouldn't make no difference, for as I'm livin', Doc, that Dutchman lay himself out on his starboard oar in the bottom of the boat, grabbed a foot stock with both hands and hung on for dear life. Well, old whale kept steam on. I could see the boat go down a little by the head as she got close to us, an' I knew the rope was seraplin' the ship's keel. We was all holdin' breath and waitin' to see Frank splatter his brains against the ship's side, when the boat went none down, stern up and under the water with a lurch-up. She missed reachin' us by about five yard.

"All hands aboard ship leant over to see Frank and the splinters come up, for the hoat would sure fetch again the keel and go to kindlin' wood. We waited an' waited an' waited, but by gum, there weren't no splinters an' there weren't no Frank. All of a sudden one of the men sings out: 'By the holy poker, look!' I whipped 'round and there 29 fathoms off our port was the little whalehoat, full o' water to the gunnel, an' Frank standin' up in her, waist deep, holdin' on to a revolver for dear life. So help me, Doc, that hoat was towed clean under old Liz, the Dutchman in her, an' come up sound on the other side.

"Yes, sir; under the ship as slick as a whistle an' the Dutchman in her. That whale was a scientist, sir. He exhibited all right to lose the boat; but, bless you, it's a bigger job than anyone wanted to tackle to stave that craft, an' as for floatin', she was loaded at each end an' couldn't sink. But that ain't the end of the story. We remembered the fellers that jumped an' we seen the big boat would pick 'em up before we could put another over, so we turned to look at Frank again. There weren't anythin' left in the boat to hail with an' he couldn't do nothin' but wait on the pleasure of that whale. He traveled away from the ship as fast as he come at it, an' he mark 'd gone a third of a mile before the boat sheked. Then we seen her slow down an' come to a dead stop. 'Line's busted,' says I; 'man a boat an' fetch in the Dutchman.' I hadn't-a more'n spoke the words when a big wave seemed to rise up near the boat an' old whale blowed 30 foot high. Then he got old Liz in range. Up his tail goes an' he under the water again. I could see Frank wade forrard in the boat an' try to pay out line, but it was jammed, an' before he could make it loose the boat gave a jerk 'round, almost a throwin' him out, an' come at us again. What I'm sayin's truth, Doc, that boat struck another two feet for us. I suppose, more properly speakin', the whale did. Gosh! How she did come kitin'! Frank quit foolin' with the line an' just hung on. I reckoned the boat was surely fast for keeps; but she didn't throw so much water, 'cause she set down almost to her rowlocks. We stood speechless while she was drivin' for us. When she got within 100 yards the mate took a big breath and let fly:

"'Jump, you Dutch lubber, or you're a dead man.'

"But he didn't jump, an' I could see him gittin' ready for another dive under old Liz.

"I grabbed up a bucket, climbed on the rail, an' when the boat come near enough I let drive at Frank, hopin' to knock him overboard if I his him. He seen it comin', dodged, an' just as the boat went tail up again yelled:

"JUMP, YOU IDIOT."

"'I can't swim!'

"Down went the boat like a soundin' lead, an' this time we all slid over to starboard to see her come up. Seven or eight seconds passed, maybe, an' then about 15 fathoms off our beam up come the boat, bottom up! 'Oh, Lordy!' groaned the cook, 'he's a goner!' But he wasn't. No, sir. The boat hadn't traveled 50 yard afore she righted, an' we seen Frank's head bobbin' over the gunnel. Well, old whale didn't run so far this time, for he knew water a few hundred fathom off. In about a minute he sent up a stream of blood. I seen then that the harpoon was a good throw, an' he wasn't goin' to fight long.

"I sent the second boat out after him, but they didn't git far 'fore down went the whale for the third time, an' in a second the little boat slewed again an' we knew he was comin' at us. There wasn't no way to make the Dutchman jump, an' there wasn't no way to stop the whale, so we just waited again while the little boat made tracks for us like she was goin' to ram. Just when I reckoned by the line out that the whale was passin' under us there was a tremendous hang an' every mother's son was throwed flat. Old Liz rolled to starboard an' then back to port an' lay rockin' while we got up. Reckon you guess what happened, Doc? That whale miscalklated. He laid his course fine as silk, but his elevation was off a couple o' points. He didn't fetch deep enough, an' hit old Liz a welt that'd like to rip the keel off her. That settled the business, too. We looked over the rail an' seen some bloody water, then a flipper and soon a big black body floated up alongside. There was our whale, sir, dead as a hunk o' salt pork, with the top of his head half torn off. He was a blue whale, Doc, and he measured close to 62 feet. When he come o' the Dutchman? Why, the boat slowed down when the whale rammed us an' the other boat took him off. Hurt? No. He went to work cuttin' up that whale singin' with the rest of 'em. I did hear afterward that he was grumblin' 'cause 'twas his hustest I throwed at him an' it warn't picked up. Right lively whale, wasn't it, Doc?"

"Right lively," repeated the doctor, absently.—Brooklyn Eagle.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, thus justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next few years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

2000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold on "hunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $5.00 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a 'no thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The report cards were handed to the high school pupils last Tuesday.

The civics class is entrancing, as it is now studying American history.

Some of the high school pupils are poetically inclined and they write short verses about every little mishap.

Some of the high school pupils were sick Tuesday from the effects of ice cream they swore they did not eat.

One of the Seniors, after translating three lines in Virgil, asked her teacher if she was not to be congratulated.

Dr. Watson was in school the other day for the purpose of examining some of the pupils' throats to see if they had diphtheria.

Some of the boys tried their hand at detective work this week and are well satisfied, but some of their unfortunate subjects are loud in their complaints.

The bust of Beethoven standing above the piano was observed to turn very fast the other night as two fairies were practicing a duet. He felt outclassed. See?

The pupils of the high school have just got through taking the quarterly examinations, and they all feel relieved with the amount of knowledge they didn't depart with.

"HOW BE YE, JIM?"

"How be ye, Jim?" That sunny voice
Comes back through the misty years,
And in the grace of an old man's face
Smile up through his happy tears.
Long time he strays down the quiet ways
Where the path is strange and dim,
But I keep the sheer of his love and hear
His words: "How be ye, Jim?"

There came to me as comes to all
The voice of Purpose when
I met the fee of a careless boy
For the bread, the world of men.
And the skies were glad or dark or sad;
My thoughts ran back to him
Till we met once more at the old home door,
And he said: "How be ye, Jim?"

Sometime in the far off by and by,
When the years are old and gray,
I shall wander down from the busy town,
Though that sweet and quiet way
I shall find the ribs from the rose-crowned hills,
And drink from their blissful brim;
And the best of all, I shall hear his call
And say: "How be ye, Jim?"

A BLACK MAMMY.

Pathetic Scene at the Burial of a Southern Colored Woman.

GRANDMA HOWARD BATTLEWS AND GRANDSON.

EASTHA—The relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Howard are invited to attend the funeral of their servant, Mastha, from their residence, 210 Richardson street, at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The pallbearers will be Mr. C. B. Howard, Masons, Warren, Chesley and Twogs, his grandson Howard Battlews, and nephews, Dodger and Bones.

The old black mammy was dead. The faithful service of nearly three score years was at last finished. One more remnant of the old south was gone.

In keeping with the death notice there came a funeral Sunday afternoon —an occasion worthy of record as a tribute of unselfish love, an occasion significant in the deep solemnity, pathetic in its observance, demonstrating in its highest sense the devotion of master to slave.

In the rush and turmoil of the present time, in the fierce struggle for existence, in the greed for gain, it has been said that the sentiment of the south has been sapped—that there exists no longer the fine feeling which characterized a civilization that has passed.

Be that as it may, a hiatus was made in the ceaseless rush in Atlanta, and over the remains of an old negro woman were shed tears of genuine grief, and gathered about her grave was the family which she had served. Her life was the life of many who lived in the past generation. Her history is the history of many families who flourished before the shock of war came.

Martha was born in Liberty county. Before the war this section of the state was the most aristocratic part of Georgia, and its historic scenes are identified with many well-known families. She was the property of Maj. Thomas Shackelford, and was given over by him as a maid to his daughter, Miss Caroline Shackelford. Both were the same age, and Martha became maid when she was about 12 years old. The little negro was, as was the custom in those days, the constant companion of her young mistress. The maid was generally lifted above the level of the common menial. She occupied the relative position of body-guard and handmaiden. It was in this capacity that Martha served, and when Miss Shackelford went off to school the young negro girl went also. Their lives were closely identified. Martha presided at the marriage, and was the happiest maid at the brilliant occasion when Miss Shackelford became the wife of Col. C. B. Howard. She remained with the family, constant in devotion and duty, attentive to every need, rendering valiant household services she could find to do.

Then the war came. Martha was not led off by the flattering cry of freedom. Her freedom was in the service of the family with which she had so long been associated. Her emancipation was in being allowed to perform the simple duties daily allotted to her. When others of her race went off in frenzied delight to enjoy that freedom newly found and reach out for new conditions, Martha remained quiet in her demeanor, undisturbed in her faithful devotion.

Soon afterwards Col. Howard moved to New York. Martha was carried with the family. She was one of the family; she shared its fortunes as would any other members of the household. She never received wages. She did not desire compensation. Her wants were supplied as were those of any other immediate member of the household. Her attachment to the children was equal to a mother's devotion. She presided at their birth. She nursed them in infancy. She watched them in youth. She saw them go out into the world and regarded their career with maternal pride. What success they had she attributed in part to her care. What misfortunes they met with called out sympathy and love. Their joys were her joys. Their griefs were her griefs.

Worn with age, shattered with the infirmities of many years, several weeks ago she sickened and it was soon seen that her malady was fatal. Those children whom she had nursed were in constant attendance upon her bedside, supplying every want.

She died Saturday at the home of Col. Howard, on Richardson street. Sunday came the funeral. It was a scene of striking pathos. Gathered about the grave in the special lot in Westview were those whom she had served in life. The services were performed by Dr. Davis, of the St. John's Methodist church, in a simple and impressive way. The pallbearers were the sons and nephews of Col. Howard. Tenderly they lowered the coffin into the earth, sadly they stood with bared heads while the last sad rites were read. Their grief was deep.

And so came the funeral of Marsha. It was simply a glimpse of old southern life—a strange scene in this busy world to-day.

She was one of a class of which few remain.

The "black mammy" will soon be an extinct type. The last of her kind is rapidly disappearing with the wane of that civilization upon which the heroic principles of the past were founded.

Who will forget her—the kindly black face framed with wrinkles of many years—years of peace and prosperity, and turmoil and strife, of adversity and misfortune. In the days when the south flourished, a goodly land, and the boundless acres of the planter groaned with the wealth of cotton and corn, the old mammy was supreme and deference due her exalted station was rendered by others of her race. Her authority almost equaled the firm dictates of the master, but her reverence for him was seared and her love strong.

In the day when came the conflict and the shock of war was felt, it was she who ministered with a comforting hand, and gave out the healing ointment of her huge heart to those who remained at home, weeping with those who wept and rejoicing with those who rejoiced.

In the days when darker trials came and the storm had swept away the labor of a lifetime; when the sky was dark, when the bonds of slavery were sundered, setting free the thousands of her own race, she remained unwavering in fidelity, unsullied in her devotion.

It was she who heard the natal squall and wrapped the swaddling garments about the diminutive form. Her strong arms were a cradle softer than the finest down, and more soothing than sleep itself. It was she who translated infantile prattle into language wonderful and wise, who taught infant feet to walk and extolled the first wisdom with more than a mother's pride. Her voice was sweeter than a siren's, and the fluted melody of her simple tones more magical than music—irresistible her lullaby, all powerful her hush-a-bye.

And in the bread-and-butter days it was she who knew the mysteries of the pantry and carried the keys to the secret stores and pan and jelly. What a wonderful old woman; wading through all the later rules-of-dress, invading the sacred confines of the confectionery bed, revelling in the shade of the fig bushes or pronouncing the death sentence upon a given number of "yeller leg" chickens doomed to be fried next day. Against strict orders from a higher source she would stuff "tween meals" the insatiable maw of the ravenous youngsters with the daintiest dish for dinner and swear him to eternal secrecy. She filled his huge pockets with red apples and prepared special orders of ginger cake, cooked as ginger cake was never cooked before. She presided at the Saturday night carnivals, when she wielded the wash rag with wonderful skill in the atmospheric depths of a pair of dirty ears, and her admonitions to "scrub behind" was inexorable.

At night her marvelous talent fasted in the glare of the lightwood fire, her cane bottomed chair pulled close up to the hearth, where the ashes were heaped over a choice collection of sweet potatoes. Then she regaled us the most marvelous stories of "hants" and "hugger-bears"—stories listened to with wide-eyed wonderment, frenzied of with dread.

After awhile, too old to work, she would sit by singing her plaintive songs or decorating upon the glorious days gone by.

Such a woman was Martha. Is it any wonder that the grief was great when she died, that her grave is this morning covered with the flowers of spring?—Alfred C. Newell, in Atlanta Constitution.

RED LAKE FALLS OFFERS INDUCEMENTS FOR A FLAX FIBRE MILL

We have a magnificent water power undeveloped. Red Lake Falls is tributary to all of the great flax fields of Northern Minnesota and North Dakota.

RED LAKE COUNTY GETS NEW SETTLERS

Large Immigration of Successful and Experienced Farmers to This Part of the Famous Valley.

The last few days of last week and the first few of this witnessed the coming to this part of Red Lake county of no less than ten to fifteen families of actual settlers, some of whom have already purchased farms for homes and others who will rent until they find what they want. Every one of the immigrants brought considerable stock and machinery and will do a whole lot toward helping sustain the already well-earned reputation of Red Lake county as the banner county of the state. Among those who have moved here since last Friday we can name the following, while quite a number of others whose names we did not learn have arrived:

Geo. Herr and family, of Dows, Iowa, arrived Saturday over the Great Northern. They will farm the old Hatten place in Lake Pleasant, have rented the same of the E. L. Healy Land company.

Chas. Elvidge and family, of Burt, Iowa, came on Monday's Great Northern. They will live on the farm they purchased through the Healy agency—the west half of section 34, Louisville.

J. W. Hastie brought his family from Ivory, Iowa, on the Great Northern and will farm the old Crawford farm in Red Lake Falls township. Mr. Hastie rented this place through the Union Land & Investment company.

Fred Kruse and family came from Gladbrook, Iowa, on Friday's Northern Pacific and will occupy the fine farm he recently purchased of the Union Land people—the northeast quarter of section 34, Louisville.

Peter Kumm and family, of Washington, Ill., were on Friday's Great Northern. They will live on the old Beausolel place in Lake Pleasant, which is now owned by them.

C. E. Jenkins, of Ripper, Iowa, was another to come on the Great Northern Friday, and has moved onto his farm, the northwest quarter of section 14 in Lake Pleasant. He purchased this of the Union Land company recently.

Every one of the above brought considerable stock and machinery and are all prosperous and well-to-do farmers. The immigration of actual settlers to this section this spring will be the greatest in its history, all of which bespeaks the excellent farming, dairying and stock raising possibilities of the banner county of the "bread and butter state."

"Not Wisely, But Too Well."

The following from the Crookston Times relates to a young man who has lived in Red Lake Falls for the past year:

"A warrant was placed in the hands of the sheriff's department Friday afternoon for the arrest of Benjamin Kirkvliet, who is charged with being the father of the illegitimate offspring of Johnna Beers, a young woman residing at Rodlid. Prior to four weeks ago the accused and the young woman in question were keeping company and the girl alleges that her ruin was affected by promise of marriage. When the girl confronted Kirkvliet and made known her condition he promised to right the wrong and make her his wife, but instead he skipped for parts unknown. Kirkvliet for some time past has been employed in the brickyards at Red Lake Falls. He left his job four weeks ago stating that he was going to Euclid to get married. He was last seen in Crookston. He is a fine looking young fellow about 23 years of age and is a native of Holland. The sheriff's department has no hopes of locating him."

A SUDDEN SUMMONS.

Philip LaBissonier, of this City, Dies at West Superior Tuesday.

A message was received here Tuesday noon announcing the sudden death in a hospital at West Superior of Philip LaBissonier, a son of Francois LaBissonier of this city. Peter LaBissonier, a brother of the deceased, who is living in the vicinity of Duluth, brought the remains home, arriving with them on this morning's Northern Pacific.

The young man had been away from here for nearly three years, having been employed at different points in the eastern part of the state, and was on his way home for a visit when he was stricken suddenly with appendicitis, death resulting within four hours. He was an exceptionally bright, healthy young man and the news of his untimely taking off came as a great shock to his many friends here.

The deceased was but little past eighteen years of age and had resided here with his parents most of his life. He leaves his parents, several brothers and sisters, and numerous other relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

The funeral will be held from St. Joseph's church at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Fred Leppert took advantage of the good? roads yesterday and made a trip to the county seat.

C. H. Sletten, the insurance man of Crookston, made his brother-in-law, a short visit last week.

Messrs. Swanson, Leppert, Sletten and Todd took in the Theobaldi concert last Friday nightand all felt more than repaid for their trip.

Alex Malec returned from the hospital at Thief River Falls last Monday. He is still very weak from the effects of an attack of pneumonia.

Sam Leppert returned from Washington and Oregon last Friday without investing in any western land. Sam says old Minnesota is good enough for him and thinks there are more paying investments here than on the coast.

The first of this week M. O. Sortedahl closed a deal with parties from the southern part of the state for three quarter sections of land near Wylie, the consideration being $16,000 cash. The buyers will move here at once and take charge of the farms.

The election was very quiet here Tuesday, there being no contests at all. The following officers were elected: Supervisors, Fred Gother, chairman, C. Johnson and A. Draeger; clerk, O. T. Romsos; treasurer, P. E. Smidesang; assessor, G. Naplin; justice, Fred Leppert; constable, Peter Hansel.

FULL TEXT OF THE INDIAN RESERVATION OPENING BILL

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell, subject to the homestead laws of the United States, to the highest bidder at public auction, in tracts not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres to each individual, all that part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota lying westerly of the range line between ranges thirty-eight and thirty-nine west of the fifth principal meridian, approximating two hundred and fifty-six thousand acres. And the said land shall be sold for not less than four dollars per acre, and shall be sold upon the following terms: One-fifth of the price bid therefor to be paid at the time the bid is made, and the balance of the purchase price of said land to be paid in five equal annual installments in advance, payment to be made to the receiver of the United States land office for the district in which said land may be situated. And in case any purchaser fails to make such annual payment promptly when due, or within sixty days thereafter, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her purchase shall at once cease, and any payments made shall thereupon be forfeited, and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon declare such forfeiture by reoffering said land for sale. And no title to said land shall inure to the purchaser, nor any patent of the United States issue to the purchaser, until the purchaser or his or her heirs shall have resided upon, improved and cultivated said land for the full term of five years, without any commution of time, and shall in all respects complied with the terms and provisions of the homestead laws of the United States: Provided, That such purchaser shall make final proof conformable to the homestead laws within six years from the date of sale; that allens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become purchasers under this act, but before making final proof and acquiring title must take out their full naturalisation papers: Provided, That in consideration of the benefits to be derived by said Indians from the acceptance of this agreement they expressly grant to the State of Minnesota for school purposes sections sixteen and thirty-six of each township.

All of the Indians residing upon the tract above described shall remove therefrom to the diminished Red Lake Reservation within six months after the ratification of this act; and there is hereby appropriated from the proceeds of said sale the sum of twenty thousand dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid those thus removing in addition to their respective improvements, which payment to said Red Lake Indians shall be in full for all improvements which they shall abandon and also for the removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they are now buried to the tract above described. The proceeds of said lands as, realized from time to time shall be paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians belonging on said Red Lake Reservation. Of the amount realized from the sale of said lands the sum of three hundred thousand dollars shall be cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman and child belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation within ninety days after the sale herein provided for and the receipt by the United States of said sum from such sales, and the remainder of the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be paid in cash, per capita, in fifteen annual installments, the first installment to bepaid in the month of October of the year following that in which the payment of the three hundred thousand dollars is made.

In consideration of the Indians hereinafter referred to ratifying this act, the said Indians shall possess their diminished reservation independent of all other bands of Chippewa Indians and shall be entitled to allotments thereon of one hundred and sixty acres each of either agricultural or pine land, the different classes of land to be apportioned as equitably as possible among the allottees. And nothing in this act or its acceptance by said Indians shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make such rules and regulations as to the time of notice, manner of sale and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, and with authority to continue making sale of said lands until all of said lands shall have been sold. The register and receiver shall receive the usual fees for making final proof under this act: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, or to dispose of said land except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall not as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received, as herein provided.

This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its ratification by the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, a majority of the male adults of said Indians assenting thereto, and the evidence thereof to be made by the proclamation of the President to the effect that this act has been duly ratified.

THE NEW GRAND JURY.

List of Names Drawn for the March Term of District Court.

The following persons have been drawn to serve as grand jurors at the term of the district court in Red Lake county, commencing March 23, 1903:

LAMBERT.

"I have the grippe," is the talk of the town. Nobody has escaped it.

Paul Sorenson was reported seriously ill last week. He is suffering for asthma.

Louis Doucet was attended to business at Red Lake Falls the latter part of the week.

The boy baby of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Lambert died yesterday. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the entire community.

Mr. and Mrs. Dupont of Terrebonne attended mass here Sunday, and visited with Mrs. Dupont's son, D. A. Bernier, who, it is reported, will soon move to Washington.

Quite a few of our farmers expect to move to northwestern Canada this spring. Wonder if they find that it is considerably colder up there and be glad to get back to Red Lake county?

MAYOR FRANK KRATKA BACK FROM THE CAPITAL

Talks to a Reporter About His Sojourn In That Interesting City, and Tells About the Reservation Bill.

Crookston Times: Mayor Frank H. Kratka of Thief River Falls passed through the city this morning en route home from the national capital. He has spent several weeks at Washington lobbying in the interests of the bill which provides for the opening of the Red Lake Indian reservation. The genial mayor looked rotund and happy, as if the atmosphere of the capital agreed with him, and the fare had been good among the legislators. Mr. Kratka was scarcely recognizable by his friends, his silk hat and all the trappings of the "higher civilization" of the east having so transformed him. When seen by a Times representative at the depot this morning the mayor discussed the situation relative to the opening of the reservation with freedom.

"Yes, they treated me royally. I have nothing to complain of in the manner in which I was received by the officials at Washington. The wonder to me is not that they are short and crusty, but that they are not more so, they are so continually besieged by men who are seeking some selfish end.

"The bill which went through was not what I wanted, but it was the best I could get. My plan was to have the land sold at auction, and then require the purchaser to live on it about fourteen months instead ief of the full five years, but Cannon and the Republican leaders would not stand for that for one moment. The best we could do was to get the bill through requiring a man to live on the land five years after he had made the purchase, and meet all of the land office regulations.

"No, a man does not have to have a homestead right to take land. It does not make any difference how many times you have used your right before, you can take a homestead, but you would have to go through the proving up process. The land will be sold at auction, one-fifth down and one-fifth each succeeding year until paid for.

"I can not tell when the land will be thrown open to settlement. I tried to have Major McLaughlin come up with me and negotiate a treaty with the Indians, but he could not get away. I insisted on this with the secretary, but he informed me very plainly that there were other states in the union besides Minnesota. As we had troubled him not a little, I thought it not best to urge the matter. The major will be up and open negotiations for the land within a month or six weeks, and possibly he will come this month, but we hardly hope for it.

"If we could get the treaty with the Indians ratified during April, the lands will be thrown open to settlement this fall; if not, not until next summer. The tribes have six months in which to remove their dead, get off the ceded lands and find homes on the diminished reservation. The treaty must be ratified by May 1 if the lands are to be opened for settlement this fall. The secretary thought, and I agreed with him, that a better price could be gotten for the lands if they were sold in the summer when they could be looked over.

"If the Indians fail to ratify this treaty, it will be the last chance they will have to have any voice in the matter. The lands will be sold and the changes made in the reservation without their consent. We will have the reservation opened, Indians or no Indians. The department is tired of the way in which they have acted."

LAMBERT.

"I have the gripe," is the talk of the town. Nobody has escaped it.

Paul Sorenson was reported seriously ill last week. He is suffering for asthma.

Louis Doucet was attending to business at Red Lake Falls the latter part of the week.

The boy baby of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Lambert died yesterday. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the entire community.

Mr. and Mrs. Dupont of Terre bonne attended mass here Sunday, and visited with Mrs. Dupont's son, D. A. Berwier, who, it is reported, will soon move to Washington.

Quite a few of our farmers expect to move to northwestern Canada this spring. Wonder if they find that it is considerably colder up there and be glad to get back to Red Lake county?

MAYOR FRANK KRATKA BACK FROM THE CAPITAL

Talks to a Reporter About His Sojourn in That Interesting City, and Tells About the Reservation Bill.

Crookston Times: Mayor Frank H. Kratka of Thief River Falls passed through the city this morning on route home from the national capital. He has spent several weeks at Washington lobbying in the interests of the bill which provides for the opening of the Red Lake Indian reservation. The genial mayor looked rotund and happy, as if the atmosphere of the capital agreed with him, and the fare had been good among the legislators. Mr. Kratka was scarcely recognizable by his friends, his silk hat and all the trappings of the "higher civilization" of the east having so transformed him. When seen by a Times representative at the depot this morning the mayor discussed the situation relative to the opening of the reservation with freedom.

"Yes, they treated me royally. I have nothing to complain of in the manner in which I was received by the officials at Washington. The wonder to me is not that they are short and crusty, but that they are not more so, they are so continually besieged by men who are seeking some selfish end.

"The bill which went through was not what I wanted, but it was the best I could get. My plan was to have the land sold at auction, and then require the purchaser to live on it about fourteen months instead jof of the full five years, but Canton and the Republican leaders would not stand for that for one moment. The best we could do was to get the bill through requiring a man to live on the land five years after he had made the purchase, and meet all of the land office regulations.

"No, a man does not have to have a homestead right to take land. It does not make any difference how many times you have used your right before, you can take a homestead, but you would have to go through the proving up process. The land will be sold at auction, one-fifth down and one-fifth each succeeding year until paid for.

"I can not tell when the land will be thrown open to settlement. I tried to have Major McLaughlin come up with me and negotiate a treaty with the Indians, but he could not get away. I insisted on this with the secretary, but he informed me very curtly that there were other states in the union besides Minnesota. As we had troubled him not a little, I thought it not best to urge the matter. The major will be up and open negotiations for the land within a month or six weeks, and possibly he will come this month, but we hardly hope for it.

"If we could get the treaty with the Indians ratified during April, the lands will be thrown open to settlement this fall; if not, not until next summer. The tribes have six months in which to remove their dead, get off the ceded lands and find homes on the diminished reservation. The treaty must be ratified by May 1 if the lands are to be opened for settlement this fall. The secretary thought, and I agreed with him, that a better price could be gotten for the lands if they were sold in the summer when they could be looked over.

"If the Indians fail to ratify this treaty, it will be the last chance they will have to have any voice in the matter. The lands will be sold and the change made in the reservation without their consent. We will have the reservation opened, Indians or no Indians. The department is tired of the way in which they have acted."

CHAPTER I

It was still steady rain of the fall afternoon had chilled into the mountains and made the trail, at best a narrow and dangerous, into the bed of an erratic brook. Down this Craig Oliver's fine mare slipped hopelessly, while his sharp herd dog, a mass of disconsolate wetness, trotted sullenly behind, his ears drooping, his tail between his hind legs.

Oliver's cowboys were soaking, from his sombrero a stream of water dripped down his back, and the damp unease of a defunct antelope swung to his saddle because painfully colorifferous. That very antelope had lured him to the top of Sixty's peak, and his bitter revenge for the fine shot which had brought its demise.

Craig, naturally hot-tempered and impatient, swore audibly. He wondered why a man should want to go hunting in the Rockies; why, if he did, he could not tell when it was going to rain—or did anybody ever know Colorado weather; why, if a man knew enough to go to the top of a pole, he could not find his way down? He had no idea where he was, but night was near at hand; under the aspens, that shaped him unevenly with odd branches to be passed, it was already dark.

He wondered where Dr. John was. That ass would make a jest of the matter: he was offensively personal in his jokes. He would not think of going to look for a comrade—not he, the busiest man in the world. Why, then, should Craig Oliver take meat to Dr. John, antelope steak to be served, brought from the summit of a cloudy peak? Yet that invidious doubt of Dr. John's! There must be evidence, or he would tell the story of an imaginary antelope and imaginary shot.

It grew darker—invisible, wetter. The sodden antelope flounced about, and the dog whined disdainfully.

"Confound you, Mac," cried Oliver. "If you are hungry, why don't you bite? Do you think I'm doing this for pleasure? Besides, you can shake the water all over the fire now with that infernal pipe of mine, and Mike is cleaning his boots—the doctor's boots. I pay Mike, but he cleans the doctor's boots first, less and then mine. Some men have a faculty of imposition."

The more uncomfortable Oliver became, the more he thought of his guest smugly ensconced in his hunting cabin miles away on the Trombosome—an untrustworthy little stream that meandered through the mountain park, irrigating the crops bountifully in the spring, but often annihilating them in midsummer.

"He's coming like this shanks at my hearth, smoking my tobacco, ordering my servant about, and he would have me out here to perish. He knew it was going to rain; that is why he said he had the toothache. I swear he hasn't one of his own left. I believe it is just like him. And Mike hasn't sense enough to go out with a light. Ha! there's one!

The two mare widely scattered shoved him a sudden glimmer of light across the murk below, like a fallen star. He urged the mare forward down a steep hill, and found from her quickened pace he was on a traveled road. Then she shied and stopped, and he was close to a shut gate. He dismounted, opened it, and, mindful of cattle, closed it after him. After a short walk he saw the dark outlines of buildings, a house with corrals and barns, from the last came the savage barking of dogs and the clank of their chains as the animals as they leaned from their kennels. Mac, in duty bound, set up a challenging uproar, silenced only by his master's whip. From the lighted windows Craig saw the house proper was built of logs and raised considerably from the ground, with a wide veranda approached by a long flight of steps. A door in the L that was on a level with the ground suddenly opened and a man came out with a lantern—an unbleached sun, with a white face, deep-set eyes, blond eyes, and a scrubby beard around his chin of such a blue-black color that his face looked deathly pale.

"What a state's-prison mug!" Craig thought; but he said, politely: "I have lost my way."

"Well, this is not it," said the man, holding his lantern rudely near Oliver's face.

"I do not need your assurance of that, my civil friend; but if I insulted you with a bribe could you put up my horse and give me shelter for the night?"

"No."

"Western hospitality is evidently out of your line. I fancy New York or the adjacent islands are more to your taste than a rush in the mountains. Perhaps you could direct me to Lord Morris' shooting box; it's on the Trombosome, about five miles from Parkville. I am a stranger here, as I only bought the lodge this spring."

"I don't know where it is."

"Ah! a stranger too. You own this place?"

"I don't see that that is your affair."

"I might make it mine, if the odds were not against me," Oliver muttered, beginning and tightening his saddle girths. A door in the house suddenly opened, and in the flood of light streaming out Oliver saw a slight girlish figure peering into the darkness.

"What is it, Louie? Not M. de Restaud? Is—is he hurt?"

"Only a tramp. Go back into the house," called the man, rudely.

A fat little woman in a cap and cut, seized the girl's arm, and tried to drag her in the door; but the young woman defended her rights vigorously, and, freeing herself, ran down the steps.

"I have entered a romance," thought Craig, advancing to the steps. "After traveling in extremely beaten paths for forty years, I have suddenly achieved an adventure." "I have lost my way," he said, lifting his hat. "I am not a tramp at all, but a neighbor —even a landed proprietor. I did hope for shelter, but I will only ask a direction—"

"But I don't know any directions, sir, and I wouldn't trust Louis; he'll like to get anyone into trouble. I am thankfully ignorant of this horrid country; I want to be; I hate it. But you must come in and get dry and have your horse rubbed down. Whats lovely dog!"

The fat woman, who had descended the steps unobserved, here interposed an objection, clutching the girl's arm tightly, and talking hastily in what appeared French that sounded like a prolonged hiss, so great was her agitation.

"Hush up, hag!" said the singular young woman, again freeing herself. "And now do come in for a little while."

She was bareheaded, and wore some kind of a sleazy gown. As she rais ed her opaque wetting her shoulders, Oliver was forced to go up under the roof of the veranda.

"You needn't be shocked," she went on, merrily, "at what I said to her; she does not know a word of English, and she's gone and won't come any more. Half the time she is calling her names and saying things to her she would not like to know. Louis, take the gentleman's horse and give her good care. None of your tricks, for monsieur might this once like to be friendly, you never can tell; he and Lord Morris never. Monsieur can be agreeable, if quite lovely, to strangers, if he wants to be."

The man, grumbling to himself, led the mare to the barn.

"I don't fancy leaving her to his mercies," said Oliver, uneasily, as he watched man and horse from the porch. "Somehow I have not overmuch confidence in your servant."

"Isn't he evil-looking? Annette, though, thighs he is beautiful. But Louis will be good to your horse; he is fond of them, and a thoroughbred, too, like that one, will delight him. His liking for horses is the only human trait he has. Do come in, just a little while, we're not robbers or Banders, though things are funny. Bring your lovely dog. Will he fight a little mite of one?"

"DO COME IN."

"If he did I'd disown him," smiled Craig.

She stopped and picked up a fluffy Skye terrier, and, holding it in her arms, led-the way into a luxuriously-furnished room with piano and fine pictures, a bright open fire, and evidences of travel and culture in the scene. It was strangely at variance with the wild and lonely country outside, but oddly natural in Colorado, in the Rockies the unexpected is always happening; a day laborer sacking a college graduate waiting for a stake, or a cowboy may be the son of an actor acquiring experience.

"If we tried to snare travelers," said the young lady, coolly, "Louis would rather hurt our business, his manners are so bad. This is the den of Monsieur de Restaud, who came here to avoid the war with Prussia; he was only a young lad then, but a born coward, and his brother is a colonel in the French army, his father a general. He doesn't go back to France. Sit down, here's a chair for your coat; you will feel better dry. I'll excuse your shirt-sleeves."

Talking all the while; she set a chair for his coat, one for himself near the hearth, and then, kneeling down by the big dog, she put the little one on the floor and proceeded to make them acquainted. Skyo instantly became a fluff of growl and fight; but Mac, an amused sigh, stretched himself and lay down to rest. He realized he was intruding, but meant to make the best of it in peace. She jumped up, the dog caught her arm, and flung a log on the fire.

"There; are you comfortable?" she asked, standing and smiling on him, a lovely flush on her face.

"Delightfully so."

Oliver looked at her in wonder. Was she child or woman? A slight, girlish figure, but beautifully formed, tiny hands and feet, a mass of short reddish curls around the neck, parted smoothly in the middle, hazel eyes with dark lashes, a nose retroussé, piquantly so, and a rosebud mouth that showed small white teeth of pleasingly brilliancy. Her skin was almost unnaturally pale; and a dimple in her left cheek drew attention to its soft roundness. Her gown of yellow China silk clung to her beautiful curves, and the wide ruffle of the yellow around her throat was like the petals of a flower. He looked at her left hand; there was no ring; in fact, all the jewelry she wore was a bunch of silver bangles on her right arm.

"Do you live here?" he asked, lamely, as she knelt again on the rug to pat his dog. Skye is her name.

Instead of replying, she made her dog sit up on its hind legs and beg—an accomplishment Skyo disliked showing, as he desired getting more intimate with the new dog, and this circus business seemed derogatory to his dignity.

"Skye makes a confession, bravely, lessly: 'isn't he cunning? But he does it better when there is not company—he never will show off. Can your dog give lessons?"

"I don't think I ever asked him," stammered Oliver, who was thinking what a pretty picture the girl made.

"Well, he is too tired to tease now. Oh!" jumping up and standing by the fire, "you asked who I was?"

"Yes; if you don't mind."

"Do you think," half sadly, "a person could live here?"

"I don't know."

"I do," said the young woman, emphatically. "I have tried it two years and whiters, all the long shutin months. I eat, sleep, breathe, but I don't live. I am called Minny—three-legged Minerva, after my father's ship as a young man, that does not suit me. Children ought to be allowed to name themselves, don't you think so?"

"I might be better, but Minny is a pretty name, and," with a smiling glance of admiration, for Oliver liked a pretty woman, "suits delightfully. I was named Peter—think of that!—but luckily had a middle name. Allow me to introduce myself: Craig Oliver, of Denver, and your neighbor in the valley of the Trombosome."

"I am"—she hesitated a moment and looked at him defiantly—"Mrs. de Restaud. I never you'd have to know, I put it off on purpose. Now please don't look at me out of the corner of your eye and wonder! I am not more dignified and stop being pleasant to us because I am married."

"I don't see," said Oliver, uneasily, "what your marriage has to do with your being married makes any difference."

"I am glad; for up here they don't talk politely to me because of monsieur: in fact, for weeks I only have Skye to talk to. I know I am unsociable, but I am like an exile meeting a neighbor from the home country. No gentleman come here Lord Morris was not he—who have been once, but kept changes everyhy. Since Aunt Hannah was sent away, six months ago, there has not been a living soul here I even endured. By the way," smiling again, "are you hungry?"

"I breakfasted this morning," answered Oliver.

"Well, I'll get you something to eat. Please let me; it's such fun to have a visitor. And don't you mind if you hear growls from the kitchen."

She ran out before Oliver could object; so he sat and watched his steaming coat, wondering if the proprietor would shoot on sight. He remembered now seeing the "crazy Frenchman," as he was called in the valley, a small, wizened creature, looking as if he took morphine, from his strange color and the unnatural brightness of his eyes. The pity of it the girl—a child, almost—was his wife. "This is only," he thought, "an adventure, and Doctor John will never believe a word of it." Unfortunately, Mrs. de Restaud had left the door ajar, and Oliver became painfully aware of her conversation.

"Annette dear—how I wish the Diet would carry on off how tired they'd be, though, of their bargain!—let me get that low. Don't you touch me. Where they'd hang you in Paris, days. I am getting this for the stranger who looks like a hero out of a book—a big, broad-shouldered man; and I think, evil thing, like your dear monsieur or your own pet Louis with his Sing Sing manners. Such a charming stranger, with the kindest smile, and eyes that smile too, and a gentleness that I used to know before I was shut up here. Cat, let the waiter alone! I hate your monsieur his own father called him a coward. Oh, wait, my love, until I practice shooting some day I will put a little round bullet hole in your lovely cagefill."

A crash of crockery, the slam of a door, and Mrs. de Restaud came back, flushed and triumphant, with a loaded waiter and a conquering air.

"Cold ham, fresh bread and tea," she said, setting it on the table. "It is better than nothing. I have been on a foraging expedition and outgeneraled the enemy. Now, do eat! Perhaps you ought to have whisky; but monsieur has the keys."

"I have a flask," smiled Oliver, "but this tea is much better."

"I think so. And are things nice, truly?"

"The very best, and how good you can imagine to a man who has fasted since seven this morning. You see, I was bound to have that antelope; I was on his trail the whole day."

"It seems cruel to kill the poor little things," she said, wistfully; "they have such a hard time in the winter, and the elk are so starved then they come down to the corral and eat hay with the cattle. I would like to put my foot on them, but I am not allowed; and just think! my money has bought him much; it was mortgaged for all it was worth—monsieur spent everything, you know; but you don't know, and think I am dreadful." She ran to the window and looked out. "You would not mind," she said, suddenly, "hurrying a little? Monsieur ought to be back any moment. If he and his friends have been drinking very much they are ugly—especially monsieur. Oh, I did not mean you should stop!"

"I am through," said Oliver, uneasily. "it was very nice, indeed; but I am afraid I have made you trouble, will do you harm by being here. You must know where Morris' place is."

"Down the road here somewhere, but I don't know just where. I never was there. I was not to fit place. Don't you think," she went on, feeling his dog creeping from the water which he spoke, "that it is funny of me to talk to my husband a stranger?"

"I don't want to be a stranger," said Oliver, gently, "and you know one could not live here without hearing something of—of—"

HE RESTAUD'S WIFE STAGGERED INTO THE ROOM.

"The crazy French man."

Oliver put on his coat in silence. The big shepherd dog leaned his beautiful head against the girl's knee while she fed him, and little Skye, jealous, contented with a stray bite now and then, looked on in approval. Never thought he would like to take her in his arms, as if she were the child she looked. That pretty little yellow gown, the bright girl's face, with its saddened look, touched him strangely. He was not wont to be interested much in women; those he met were of two classes, and this child was of neither class—a different being—a pathetic, haunting one; a child in grief, and yet two years a wife, and of such a man. She glanced up and saw his pitying face. Her lips quivered.

"Don't think me dreadful," she said, piteously. "I am so lonely, so forsaken, and you brought back the old days. You look so kind, the words just came; I could not help it. Suppose you were my father, my brother, or I met a son, my mother dead two years ago, and only only friend, I would confide in you; it was my duty" (a sob) "to live here for ever and ever. I wish that you would try to like me, and that I could feel there was somewhere in the world a friend to whom she would be a friend—me ant pity me."

He took her little hand in his big one and looked down on her sunny head.

"I am sorry for you, child," he said, softly. "I know your life must be hard; I cannot bear to think of it. I will be glad to be your friend; I haven't many. When one has a friend long in the world he has sorted the wheat from the chaff; and I can count my friends on my fingers—on one hand, indeed."

"Then let me be the little finger," she said, shyly.

The sound of horses' hoofs outside made her withdraw her hand suddenly, and a frightened look came over her face. Oliver picked up his riding whip, bit his lower lip, and waited. Mac, with a growl, shook up to his master's knee. The door was flung rudely open, and a man stepped in the room, so overcome with liquor he could at first form no words—a little man, with a dark evil countenance, sunken eyes, and long black beard. His corduroy suit was dripping, and the hat he flung on the table soaking wet. He had the air of one who had ridden fast in an evil mood.

"Are you keeping a hotel, Madame de Restaud, to be biased. "Truly this is a very pleasant surprise for a man."

"The gentleman asked shelter, Henri," the girl said, trembling. "He lost his way, and Louis would not tell him how to find Lord Mor-li- ig-e—"

"You can of course give me the direction," the man said, contemptuously, though his hand clinched the whip-handle tighter. "Lord Morris told me of your hunting exploits. I thought we should have met before this, but Doctor John and I are unsociable sort of men and don't go about much."

"The road you came, straight down two miles, turn to the left," said De Restaud, coldly. "My man has my mare ready."

"Thanks. Mrs. de Restaud, you have known rare western hospitality. I shall always remember it. Good night."

He could not look at that shrinking figure, with its frightened eyes.

WHY?

The reason De Witts Witch Hazel Salve cures piles in every case is because it is the only pile remedy or remedies right where the cause troubles—in the throat or deep-seated on the lungs, destroying the disease or germ germs and eradicating the plague.

De Witts Witch Hazel Salve not only destroys the disease germs, but heals and builds up the parts. It gives strength and stability to the diseased membranes which prevent the throat and lungs. Opens the air passages, and prevents consumption resulting from neglected coughs, colds, bronchitis, hay fever, la grippe, the unbearable the pulmonary troubles with such rewards and ease that the throats and bronchial tubes become helpless against the inception of disease. O. THOMAS AGENT.

W. O. SMILEY

BIG D. WATCH AND DRAUGHTSMAN.

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA

Four years experience as U. S. Hydrological Draughtsman, Washington, D. C. Complete outfit with mechanical and surveying instruments. Satisfactory ground of Minnesota, Farm and check surveys. Maps and plats.

"Good-by," sue said, sadly. "I hope you will find your road."

As he closed the door, he heard her give a cry of pain, as if she had been rudely seized, and he almost stopped, then went hastily down the steps. He wished one of the ruffians dismounting before the porch would speak to him, he would have liked to silence him. No one spoke, however. Even Louis led the mare up in silence. Oliver loaded her over as he pretended, tossed the man a dollar, and said, as he started off:

"I trust you and I will meet again, my civil friend."

The gate was open, so he went easily past all pitfalls and, the mare being rested, she went at a brisk trot, right from his own cabin, and with an odd sense of comfort, too. A lost, homeless man is a pitiful object the world over. Mike rushed out to take the mare, he was just going to look for him; the doctor had worried. But Oliver, without a word, went into the house. He went to his cigar box, lit a cigar, then stood before his own hearth with a queer air of possession. It was just as he thought. There sat Dr. John in that ridiculous flowered dressing-gown and embroidered cap, with his eternal pipe, as unconcerned as possible.

"Had at last, old man?" said Dr. John, cheerily. "We were getting worried about you."

"Thanks," growled Oliver.

"We waited supper," continued the other, a little, elderly man, with bright blue eyes, close-cut gray hair and long gray beard. "Mike was bound to go for you."

"And you to prevent him," sneered Oliver.

"Well, I did think it nonsense. Where could he hide? Safe as that."

"I am not hungry. I had supper."

"Where?"

"At a house," Oliver answered, briefly, as Mike entered with the supper things. However, he sat down and found himself eating heartily.

Neither man spoke, Dr. John being used to Oliver's moods. The meal over, they sat before the fire. Oliver took a cigar, while Dr. John lit his pipe.

"I was at the summit of Sluly's peak to-day," said Oliver, after a long silence.

"Ah?" interrogatively from Dr. John.

"I followed an antelope—a splendid shot, the best I've had for a buck."

"Too bad you did not bring it. We're out of meat."

"But I did. I know you." Oliver smiled. "The evidence is on my saddle."

"There's a butcher-shop at Parkville," said Dr. John, meditatively.

"Is there?" said Oliver, indifferently, "I was not that way. I had supper at De Restaud's."

"The crazy Frenchman's? Honestly, Craig?"

"I give you my word. His wife is a sweet little woman."

"They all are to you, my boy. Your weakness. You don't, say!—at De Restaud's?" Dr. John smoked awhile over it. "Actually put in his sweet Wily, they say he is the very devil. You were lucky you didn't lose your life instead of your way."

Craig looked into the fire. He thought of the little girl in the yellow gown. How plainly he remembered seen the bangles, the fair corner, the dimple in her cheek! perhaps he had lost his heart.

CHAPTER II.

Though fifty miles from a railroad; the valley of the Troublesome was well settled by ranchmen, and the little village of Parkville, a few miles from Oliver's cabin, was the metropolis for a large section of country. Here gathered once and for all from distant peaks, prospectors, cowboys and sheepherders from nowhere, with the drift around such a place, gamblers and men with no visible means of support. In the rough mob that congregated in the two saloons at Parkville Oliver often saw De Restaud. He was generally to intoxicated, always the wildest of the merrymakers. He met him and Louis riding late at night at a road race with other ranchmen held at from the town, and he heard of orgies at De Restaud's home that reeked of city sin. Oliver himself never ventured towards De Restaud's house; the road was a private one, and he had no wish to come in contact with the owner. Sometimes he pitied the young wife when he thought of her, but as the days went on her image faded. He had never spoken to her and ceased to think of her. Indeed, he hoped before he went away from the Troublesome to see her again. He had promised to be her friend.

Mike had told him the story in the valley was that she had come to Colorado Springs with a distant connection of her, and that the Frenchman, who was more careful than, and hoarded at the hotel with them, wormed himself into the mother's confidence to such an extent that on her deathbed she desired to leave her daughter in De Restaud's care and prevailed upon her to be married then. A sentimental little creature like the girl could not refuse; Oliver had an uncomfortable feeling that she would be very too easily led. De Restaud had brought his wife to the lonely ranch after her mother's death, and had kept her a prisoner. He was maddened by jealous of her, and went brain invagining all sorts of things she never dreamed of doing. Then it was also thought that he had entire control of her money, he kept her away from her friends for fear that they might question his guardianship.

Oliver was thinking of her one night two weeks after his strange visit. He was alone by the fire, for Dr. John had gone to see the sick wife of a ranchman. The doctor said he felt the errand hopeless, as the man had told the wife's condition, but if they thought he might help he would go.

"He is a good old chap," Oliver said, aloud. The shepherd dog, thinking the compliment intended for him, gently thumped his tail on the floor. "There's his gown and cap; he'll make a gay of himself because his old landlady made them for him. Wish I had told him more about the girl at that ranch; he might have suggested something. Perhaps she can't get letters to her old aunt. If half the stories I hear are true, she ought never to stay there. Man is crazy."

Mac whined uneasily, and went to the door, standing listening, his head down.

"Washing for the doctor, Mac? He won't be back for hours yet. Hark!"

The dog growled, then barked loudly. There was the sound of hurrying footsteps on the hard ground, and the door was opened without ceremony. In her yellow gown, bareheaded and dust stained, her little dog held to her breast. De Restaud's wife staggered into the room, her face ghastly in its pallor, her eyes wild with weeping, even the dog cowering with fright and pain.

"My God!" cried Oliver, leaping to his feet. "Is he out there?"

"No, no! I am alone."

"Child, how could you come here? how could you come?" he cried, recalling. "Why, he would murder you if he knew."

"Don't send me away?" she screamed; "oh! please, Mr. Oliver! I thought all the way you would send and would help me. Look at the marks on my throat! he choked me; and there are welts on my arms, paining me dreadfully; and he—he kicked my dog. I think his leg is broken. Don't mind me. Look at Skye; is he hurt much?"

Oliver took the shivering little beast in his arms.

"Only bruised," he said, gently; "but you—" He was sick with the horror of it! to strike that child! "You look so ill. Sit down in the big chair. Indeed you shall not go back. Dr. John and I will take care of that; and if he comes, you know," with that sweet smile of his, "your husband is a little mad."

"I don't know what I did," she said, dazedly. "Perhaps because I rode my pony down past here, and Louis told him, or Annette. He was drunk and ugly when he struck me and kicked Skye out of the way. Skye tried to bite him, and I interfered. Then I think I fainted, for I woke on my bed all hurt and bewildered. Annette came creeping in, sort of scared, and said he was sorry and had gone off to the village, but I pushed her out and locked the door. When he came back and they were playing cards I climbed down over the roof and ran here across the fields, for in the road—a long, dreadful way. Now you seem as if you were sorry I came." She reached down, lifted her dog to her lap, and hid her face in its coat.

"I only cared for your sake," he answered, softly. When she bent her head he could see the cruel marks on her throat, and she still sobbed as she spoke. Was ever man so pitiful? He almost wished the coward who had struck her would come, that he could meet him then; reason told him he had no right to settle this woman's quarrel. He did not know her husband; but did he in his heart? How girlish and fair she was in the flelth room! For a moment a fierce desire to keep her there, to defend her, swept over him. Then he said, almost coldly:

"Will they not miss you, Mrs. de Restaud?"

"Not that!" she cried, piteously. "Call me Minny. I don't want to hear his name. He never comes in my room when he has them there, you know, and he has told me never to open my door; so I am safe until morning. I prayed all the way you'd be here and alone. I knew you could tell me how to get to the railroad. I saw away across the hills your lights and how I ran them! I knew your dog would not hurt me, for I was afraid of cows; there were some lying down, and they got up as I ran past, and I screamed right out, I was so scared. I watched you sitting here through the window, your dog at your feet. You looked so good and kind, I felt I could go right in and tell you, perhaps you had a sister who died, or some one you knew you would have to think that should go back to that dreadful place, and you would think of me alone and friendless, and help me."

She went to him and clung to his arm, trembling and sobbing. "You will not send me back? you will not send me back?"

"NOW, SIT DOWN AGAIN," HE SAID.

"You know I will not; but what shall I do, if anyone should see you here? Don't cry like that; I can't think I want to do. Try to be quiet."

She lifted her tear-wet face. "If you knew my life for two years, Mr. Oliver, you would think I had been brave. It is not fear that makes me cry now, only that you are kind and there is some one in the wide world who will help me."

Tragedy Averted.

"Just in the nick of time our little boy was saved," writes Mrs. W. Watkins, of Panama City, Ohio. "Pneumonia had played havoc with him and a terrible cough set in besides. Doctors treated him, but he grew worse every day, at length we tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and our darling was saved. He's now sound and well." Everybody ought to know it's the only sure cure for coughs, colds and all lung diseases. Guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggist. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

More Riots.

Disturbances of stirkers are not nearly as grave as constipation and disorder of the system. Overwork, loss of sleep, nervous tension and indigestion, do not collapse unless a reliable remedy is immediately employed. There's nothing so efficient to cure disorders of the liver or kidneys as Electric Bitters. It's a wonderful tonic, and effective nervine and the general assistant around medicine to run down systems. It dispels nervousness, insomnation and neuralgia and expels malaria germs. Satisfaction guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggist.

Organize Italian Churches.

Italians are organizing Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Congregational and Episcopal churches in this country in connection with the work of missions. The Italians were Waldensians when at home, but most of them were reared as Roman Catholics.

Itching Skin Diseases.

Eczema, tetter and all eruptions and torturing skin diseases are quickly relieved and permanently cured by Cole's Carbolisalve. It cures chapped and cracked hands and sore lips in one night. Keep a box handy. 25 and 50 cents. Sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

German Bridge Has Record.

In the valley of Petrafle, in Luxembourg, Germany, stands the largest single span of any masonry bridge in the world, with a length of 277 feet and a height of 102 feet.

Mrs. J. A. Arries, Portage, Wis., writes: "I have used Cole's Carbolisalve for years. I have never found any soap equal to it for curing irritations of the skin and for keeping it soft and smooth. It is most desirable and refreshing for the nursery and the toilet." Cole's Carbolisalve always pleases. Sold by all druggists.

A Remarkable Case.

One of the most remarkable cases of a cold, deep-seated on the lungs, causing pneumonia, is that of Mrs. Gertrude E. Fenner, Marion, Ind., who was entirely cured by the use of One Minute Cough Cure. She says: "The coughing and straining so weakened me that I was down in weight from 148 to 97 pounds. I had a number of remedies, but as a last resort, I used One Minute Cough Cure. Four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me entirely of the cough, strengthened my lungs, and restored me in my normal weight, health and strength."

Bringing It Home.

When Horace Mann made a famous speech for the dedication of a building that had cost enmy thousand dollars, and in the reformatory for bad boys, he said: "If all this which has been spent upon this building results in the reformation of one boy, I is money well spent." Somebody said to him: "Mr. Mann do you think one boy is worth all that money?" He replied: "Yes, if that boy is my boy or your boy."—Primary Education.

It Saved His Leg.

P. A. Danforth of LaGrange, Ga., suffered for six months with a frightful running sore on his leg, but when that failed, Bucklen's Arnica Salve wholly cured him five days. For ulcers, wounds, piles, it's the best salve in the world. Cure guaranteed. Only 25c. Sold by W. A. Schreiter druggist.

Waltz of French Origin.

The most unsavory legend, controversial papers as to the origin of the waltz was settled by the discovery that the waltz was first danced at the French court on Nov. 9, 1178, when it was announced as the composition of a French courtier who called it "Volta." Dancing as it has been generally assumed that the waltz originated on the line Danube or thereabouts.

What's in a Name?

Everything is in the name when it comes to Witch Hazel Salve. E. C. DeWitt & Co., of Chicago, discovered, some years ago, how to make a salve from Witch Hazel that is a specific for Piles. For blind, bleeding, itching and protruding piles, eczema, sores, burns, bruises and all skin diseases, DeWitt's Salve has no equal. This has given rise to numerous worthless counterfeits. Ask for DeWitt's the genuine. A. L. Reidhert.

White Girl's "Burden."

At the Hampton Ala., industrial one of the attractions was an indian girl orchestra from one of the government schools in Arizona. Some of the girls were full bloods and some were half blood; each "I am but one-half of a red breeds. Two of them got to quarreling over some email matter, and one part of you, if I am half enough."

The Stomach is the Man.

A weak stomach weakens the man, because it cannot transform the food it eats into nourishment. Health and strength cannot be restored to any sick man or weak woman without first restoring health and strength to the stomach. A weak stomach cannot digest enough food to feed the tissues and revive the tired and worn out nerves and organs of the body. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cleanses, purifies, sweetens and strengthens the glands and membranes of the stomach, and cures indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. A. L. Reidhert.

Exactly So.

"It's curious," said Uncle Elvin. "Nobody would think of tryin' to play de banjo without takin' a few lessons, but everybody thinks he could step in an' run de gov-ment without no preparation whatever."

It Makes mother eat, makes father eat, makes grandma eat, makes grandpa eat, makes the children eat. Rocky Mountain Tea does it. A great spring tonic. 35 cents. A. L. Reidhert.

Encouraging Employes.

Six employees of a Boston (England) engineering firm have received prizes, ranging from £5 to £25, for suggestions tending to the more economical production of work.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer one Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address: F. J. THE legislature has decided to quit April 15, and up to date no protests have been filed.

IT is hoped the returning sun will soon thaw out enerrgy enough to start the annual spring clean-up.

COLUMBIA and Clearwater counties got in just in the nick of time. The legislature has passed a law requiring a majority vote for county division.

THE Belcrami County Advocate is now published in Clearwater county and it hasn't moved away from Sherbin either. These new counties force considerable readjustment.

HALVOR STEENERSON'S salary commenced last Wednesday, but he will not be sworn in as congressman until next December. It is evident that somebody at Washington has heard the election returns from the new Ninth.

Loss of Flesh

When you can't eat breakfast, take Scott's Emulsion. When you can't eat bread and butter, take Scott's Emulsion. When you have been living on a milk diet and want something a little more nourishing, take Scott's Emulsion.

To get fat you must eat fat. Scott's Emulsion is a great fattener, a great strength giver.

Those who have lost flesh want to increase all body tissues, not only fat. Scott's Emulsion increases them all, bone, flesh, blood and nerve.

For invalids, for consumptives, for weak children, for all who need flesh, Scott's Emulsion is a rich and comfortable food, and a natural tonic.

THE discovery of a serum cure for scarlet fever will be hailed by parents with a sigh of relief. The reported success of a new serum used in New York is encouraging, but until further tests are made, doubt will naturally linger.

FRANK DAY, the genial president of the Minnesota editorial association, is getting plenty of bouquets from his brethren these days. Frank is admitted to be a hard hitter politically, but he fights in the open, and his political adversaries bear no grudge.

THE Crookston Journal will keep up with the world in all respects. The latest metropolitan feature is the addition of an expert cartoonist, and each day's paper will contain an important happening in Crookston or the world at large pictured out for its readers.

IN looking over one issue of an exchange the Bloomington Star finds that the editor hopes, is glad, is sad, is pained, is pleased, is delighted, has regret and has heartfelt sorrow. Nobody could stand such a combination but the country editor, who generally has an elastic conscience and an india rubber stomach.

AN Indiana exchange notes the coming of Cole Younger's wild west show and runs a two-column picture of "the pardoned bandit," who, it is stated, will sell tickets for the show. Cole may not be violating the letter of his pardon stipulations, but it is inconceivable that there could be a greater violation of their spirit. It is evident that a great deal of sympathy has been wasted on the ingrate.

THE remarkable attitude of Judge Adams of the United States district court of St. Louis in restraining the ordering of a strike on the Wabash railroad, illustrates the possibilities of "government by injunction." If judges have the power to say that a body of employees cannot organize for mutual protection and are not allowed to quit work when they please there is cause for alarm. Strikes are bad, but it is often the only weapon of defense the laborers have, and to take away that right strikes a blow at the fundamental principles of personal liberty.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The Spartans were given 38.31 points for their program last Friday. They received so many points because they took up full time.

The chemistry class had an oral recitation Tuesday.

The seniors had a rehearsal of their play last Saturday. The next rehearsal will be Friday afternoon.

The high school girls have shown how desirous they are of learning, and this week they organized a sewing club. They held their first meeting last Tuesday. From now on we suppose the girls will spring a joyous surprise on their fathers by sewing buttons on their coats.

Wanted: a pair of suspenders for the breeches bt promise; a mosquito bar for the bed of the sea; n dentist to work on the jaws of death; a few seeds from the flower of speech; a pen that will write with luky darkness.

Last week one of the boys of the senior class was asked what part of speech woman was. He refused to answer. He must have concurred in the prevailing opinion that woman is not a part but the whole of speech.

From now on the chemistry class will be given more recitations and not so much laboratory work.

He studies his lessons home at night
And then goes to bed to sleep quite light;
At early morn he rolls out from where it is warm;
And sighs "'Tis the early bird that gets the worm!"
He never has any excuse to bring
For he's always in school at the bell's ring,
And as the late girls file in each morn,
He sighs "'Tis the early bird that gets the worm!"
While the other kids are having fun
He gets to work and studies some,
And as he gives his last lesson a turn,
He sighs "'Tis the early bird that gets the worm!"
Examination soon comes around
And the playful kids can be cramming found!
But he always gets through without a burn,
For "'Tis the early bird that gets the worm!"
Now, you kids that study books,
You can't get through on your good looks;
Remember your motto, if you want to learn,
"'Tis the early bird that gets the worm!"

The best pill 'neath the stars and stripes;
It cleanses the system and never gripes;
Little Early Risers of world-wide fame.
Ask for DeWitt's and take no substitute.

A small pill, easy to buy, easy to take and easy to act, but never failing in results. DeWitt's Little Early Risers arouse the secretions and act as a tonic to the liver, curing permanently. A. L. Reichert.

More Riots.

Disturbances of strikers are not nearly as grave as an individual disorder of the system. Overwork, loss of sleep, nervous tension will be followed by utter collapse unless a reliable remedy is immediately employed. There's nothing so efficient to cure disorders of the liver or kidneys as Electric Bitters. It's a wonderful tonic, and effective nervine and the greatest all around medicine for run down systems. It dispels pain, cures rheumatism and neuralgia and expels malaria germs. Only 50c, and satisfaction guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggist.

A Masonic lodge will soon be instituted in Red Lake Falls. The members of the order hold weekly practice meetings, and they expect to occupy the hall over Reichert's drug store as soon as it can be put in shape for them.

Miss Rachel Taylor arrived home this morning from an extended visit at points in Wisconsin and the Twin Cities. She will take up her school duties for the spring and summer term in the same district in which she taught last year.

Ed Garceau and family will leave next Wednesday for Tacoma, Wash., where they will make their home in future. Mr. Garceau is negotiating for the purchase of a general store in that city, and expects to complete the deal in a few weeks.

We show the most complete line of shoes in the city. Why not try us for your spring shoes? Not only can we show you up-to-date goods, but you will find our prices very low, considering the quality of the goods.—Theo. LaBissoniere.

J. K. Johnson of this city has been appointed the contract to move a part of the Fisher mill and machinery to Crookston, where the material will be used in the construction of the new mill at that place. Mr. Johnson left Saturday to begin the work.

St. Hilaire chose the following officers at the election Tuesday: President, T. J. Thordelson; councilmen, D. Patterson, J. C. Dahl and A. F. Lang; recorder, K. O. Gigstad; treasurer, Leonard Holmes; justice, K. O. Gigstad; constable, Anton Anderson.

Mrs. Wm. Murphy went to Thief River Falls Saturday where she and her husband will again make their home. Her mother, Mrs. Henry Kaufer, accompanied her and remained until Monday, Mr. Kaufer going up Sunday to accompany her home.

Dr. J. C. Wilkinson will next week move his family into the Conrad Larson residence at the corner of Sixth and St. John street. Thedoctor will continue to use the rooms over Reichert's drug store for offices but for night calls will be found at the residence.

The town election in Louisville on Tuesday resulted as follows: Supervisors, F. P. Grenier, chairman, A. D. Roepello and Felix Bauchane; clerk, A. D. Berry; treasurer, Jos. Bauchane; assessor, J. F. Matherson; constables, Demarias Lizotte and Fred St. Michel.

Rev. Andrew Walker is again able to look after his pastoral duties after an illness of several weeks with stomach trouble. He returned from the Crookston hospital the latter part of last week and conducted the usual services at the Presbyterian church Sunday.

In printing the list of persons donating money to the famine relief fund two weeks ago the name of M. O. Sortedahl was in some incomprehensible manner omitted. Mr. Sortedahl gave $10 to the worthy cause and THE COURIER desires to make the necessary correction in order to give due credit for the generosity of the contributor.

Asthma

"One of my daughters had a terrible case of asthma. We tried almost everything, but without relief. We then tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and three and one-half bottles cured her."—Emma Jane Cottninger, Lexingville, O.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral certainly cures many cases of asthma.

And it cures bronchitis, hoarseness, weak lungs, whooping-cough, croup, winter coughs, night coughs, and hard colds.

Three sizes: 25c., 50c., $1. All druggists.

Consult your doctor. If he says take it, then do as he says. If he says don't take it, then don't take it. He knows. Leave it with him. We are willing.
J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

Joseph Lachance arrived home Friday morning after an absence of three months at Quebec and other places in Eastern Canada. Mr. La chance reports a most enjoyable winter's visit, but was nevertheless glad to get back to Red Lake county, the garden spot of the continent.

Fish Commissioner Fullerton has complied with the petition of Red Lake Falls people by ordering the owners of the Crookston dam to put in a fishway. Hereafter the fish from the Red and the lower Red Lake will have the opportunity of coming up this way to get caught.

The following officers were elected in Wyandotte Tuesday: Supervisors, David Haugo, chairman, Andrew Nelson, John Albin; clerk, O. J. Johnson; assessor, Louis Halvorson; treasurer, Haus Kolsch; justices, K. Henderson, Haus Kolseth; constables, Ed. Halvorson, Anton Lee.

V. M. Higinbotham and bride arrived home last Friday after a three months' sojourn at the home of V. M.'s parents in Forest City, Iowa. They will immediately go to housekeeping in their rooms at the R. H. Riordon residence, where they will be at home to their large circle of friends.

Attorney Thomas Germo has purchased the Ed Garceau residence property on Third street. Tom is careful to state that it is purely an "investment," but when such a splendid and eligible fellow as Tom invests in town property suspicions of matrimonial possibilities are sure to be aroused.

George McConnell left Friday on an extended tour of inspection to a number of the larger flouring mills in the northern part of the state. He will undoubtedly pick up ideas and information that will be of service when the Red Lake Falls Milling company enlarges the capacity of its plant this summer.

At its last meeting the city council refused to grant the petition of P. A. Kaufer praying permission to repair the building next to the opera house recently gutted by fire. It seems the fire limit ordinance means something, and that no more frame "sheeks" will be allowed to go up in the business district.

Red Lake Falls needs a great deal of new sidewalk, and efforts should be made to get this necessary improvement. For instance it is necessary for the pupils to wade through nearly two blocks of mud to get to the school house. This condition of affairs should be remedied as speedily as possible.

Grand Master C. A. Fosnes, of Montevideo, was a guest of the local lodge of Odd Fellows last Saturday evening, and during the session delivered an address which was listenstly listened to and thoroughly enjoyed by those present. An appropriate lunch was served and the evening made pleasant and profitable to those concerned.

J. A. Walker, Mrs. Con Shortand Miss Minaie, three of Equality township's prominent people, were trading as the county seat Tuesday. Mr. Walker will hold an auction on the 25th inst. and will leave Red Lake county shortly after that date. He has not definitely decided where he will locate, but is thinking of going to Western Canada.

The Knights of Pythias are arranging for a "big time" on the occasion of Grand Chancellor Robertson's visit on March 30. Supreme Chancellor Tracy F. Bangs, who, as his title implies, is the official head of the order, has been invited to come over from Grand Forks on that evening, and it is thought likely that he will accept.

Lewis Myren, who lives on Sheriff Sampson's farm in Gervais, called Tuesday to subscribe for THE COURIER. Several months ago Mr. Myren was induced by misrepresentation to take another newspaper said to be "cooperative plan," but found it a poor substitute for a real live local journal. Mr. Myren has recently purchased the Pisanli farm just north of the Terrebonpo mill.

Extensive improvements are to be made to the plant of the Red Lake Falls Milling company this spring. The mill and warehouse will be moved off of the race, and the contract for this work has been let to R. M. Eastman, of Litchfield, who has just finished moving the Presbyterian church. The capacity of the mill will be materially enlarged by the addition of new and improved machinery, and the company will also build a storage elevator with a capacity of 50,000 bushels.

The Red Lake Falls Milling company shipped 1,000 sacks of Mascot flour to a customer at Sydney, New South Wales, this week. C. P. Johnson, manager of the company, has been asked to name a price on twenty-five carloads to be shipped to the same point. There was a crop failure in Australia last year, and this is the first shipment made by any mill in the Northwest direct to that country.

This of all seasons of the year is the time when we should take the greatest of precautions against pneumonia. The warm weather coming on we are apt to be somewhat careless in the preservation of health as well as our wearing apparel. In the sudden change of heavy to lighter clothes colds are apt to follow which in a large number of cases terminate in pneumonia and we cannot be too careful in guarding against this the most fatal of all diseases.

The warm sunshine and springlike winds of Saturday and Sunday played havoc with the heavy blanket of beautiful(?) snow that has covered this section of the state for the past several months—or more, and as a result the sleighs and cutters have been consigned to the storehouse for a season of rest. However, we don't bear any complaints, and the coming of that joyous season of singing birds, budding flowers and warm sunshine will bring boundless joy to the multitude.

The following communication was handed in with the request that it be published. The Aborigine with the red front who occupied a conspicuous place at the Theobald concert and entertainment, the audience by eating peanuts and throwing the shells upon the floor, ought to return to the backwoods from whence he came or else get a book on etiquette and conventionalities and become posted before venturing into better company than he has been in the habit of associating with."

Red Lake Falls has now a city hospital, under the management of Mrs. Alexis Moquin. It is situated on Fifth street, in Westchamet's addition, and was formerly the residence of P. E. Hunt. It is roomy and well fitted to its new attainment. The board is excellent and the sick are assured of being well taken care of under the personal and experienced attendance of Mrs. Moquin. The hospital is surrounded by a beautiful park, from which much benefit will be derived by invalids. The rates are reasonable, and the public is respectfully solicited to encourage the new hospital.

The benefit concert given by Ole Theobald, the famous violinist, at the opera house last Friday evening was not largely attended, the proceeds being only $61. The entertainment, however, was excellent and it is to be regretted that more of our people were not present to hear the distinguished artist. Mr. Theobald is well-known and prominent in Old World musical circles, and is always a large drawing card wherever he appears. The famine relief fund was increased about $7.50.

To Die of Paralysis Like Father.

Helpless Invalid For Three Years.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Made My Nerves Strong.

"For many years I suffered from terrible headaches and pains at the base of the brain, and finally got so bad that I was overcome with nervous prostration. I had frequent dizzy spells and was so weak and exhausted that I could take but little food. The best physicians told me I could not live; that I would die of paralysis, as my father and grandfather had. I remained in bed off and on for three years, when I heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine and began using it. That winter I felt better than I had in five years, and I have not been troubled with those dreadful headaches since I first used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. My appetite is good and my nerves are strong."—Mrs. N. M. Bicknell, 2939 Oakland Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

"For many years I suffered from nervous prostration, and could not attend to my household affairs, nor leave my room. My stomach was out of order, headaches very severe, and I was so nervous that there was not a night in years that I slept over one hour at a time. We spent hundreds of dollars for doctors and medicine. I was taken to Chicago and treated by specialists, but received no benefit at all. Finally I heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine and began to use it. I was surprised that it helped me from the first, and grew well and strong. No other remedy ever benefited me like Dr. Miles' Nervine."—Mrs. W. A. Thompson, Duluth, Minn.

F. A. MIZEN, Agent.

A UNIQUE AGENT OF CRIME

ON the outskirts of Alameda, Cal., stands an old-fashioned house of ancient proportions, walled in by trees and shrubbery so that passers-by seldom get a glimpse of the dwelling itself. The house has a history, the owner being un-American enough to prefer a residence shrouded, leaving the homestead—an heirloom—to fall into disuse under the slovenly care of a Mexican half-breed, who had come into its service in her youth and had grown old in the place. The most of her days had been passed there alone, but of late years she had given a home to a vagrant relative, like herself a half-breed and as worthless as the nature usually is when of Mexican graft.

Now word came that Horace Logren, the owner of the house, was coming home, bringing with him on his way his nephew, Jack Logren, who was also his partner. There was consternation then on the part of old Malita, for it meant that she would be turned out of a home that had sheltered her since early youth, when she came from the foot of Mount Orizaba, which she had never again beheld. The half-breed relative was sent out of the way, for old Malita did not desire to have Manuel meet her employer, who was master in his own house, so she kept him apart from Mr. Logren, fearful that a quarrel might arise at any time between the two men, for the despotic spirit of the one and the sullen, insolent disposition of the other were temperamentally antagonistic. So in his brief visits at his own dwelling Mr. Logren saw nothing of the swarthy intruder. And if he knew or surmised that he was about, he asked no questions. There were reasons why on this subject he did not care to stir up dissension.

The house seems to have been stripped," the sucle had remarked to his nephew after a close inspection; "you must remember those tapestry hangings—not a shred of one is left."

"Have you asked Malita about them?" inquired young Logren, in a differently—he took little interest in the musty hangings of the old house.

"D——— Malita!" said the older man, savagely, and as he spoke the door opened and the head of the woman in question was thrust in.

"Yo call, senor?" she asked, in ranging tones.

"No! And if I catch you listening again at that door I'll wring your neck as if you were a parrot—you hear, Mexican?"

Malita looked at him with an evil eye. Her malignant black hair—un softened by a thread of gray, seemed to twist and writhe as she wagged her head and drew her fingers across her throat in a horribly suggestive manner. Then she gave a little cackling laugh and withdrew, closing the door with noiseless vigilance.

Later in the evening the old man and the young parted, after a game of cribbage, well pleased with each other. The bachelor uncle was as fond of his nephew as it was possible for him to be of anyone, and the young man liked his uncle without any greed of possession coming between them. He was a civil engineer in the employ of a government salary, and had no need of a dead man's shoes.

Yet there were not wanting people to shake their heads and look mysterious when on the following morning Mr. Logren was found dead in his bed, and Jack Logren's grief went for naught with them, and old Malita went so old but that her eyes were bright as beads—shook her veiled head, and muttered in choice Mexican argot, and crossed herself with pious insistence, while she looked as if she could tell much if she would. But the police found no evidence of a violent death, and the doctors said the look of horror on his face was the result of heart disease. And the coroner's jury gave that as a verdict, in which case there was no need of a jury. But the strict letter of the law must be observed.

Jack Lorgren was not satisfied. He felt sure that his uncle's death was the result of foul play. He had examined every inch of the room in which the dead man had slept the last sleep and found no evidence that it had been entered in the night. Doors were securely fastened on the inside. Noticing a few crumbs on the pillow, he had rolled them in his fingers mechanically, and found them to be crumbs of a rich cheese which his uncle was accustomed to eat with his dessert. He attached no importance to the discovery at first, but, thinking it over, an inspiration came to him. He called in the Mexican woman.

"Malita, did my uncle partake of any supper or lunch after I left him that night?" The thought that an more indigestion had killed him occurred to the young man.

"No, excellencia." She emphasized her words with a sign of the cross.

"Then what were crumbs of cheese doing scattered on his bed and pillow?"

"Cheo? Che? Me not know, senor. Me see not chee that day—it plenty make in house."

Her English, good enough at ordinary times, gave out entirely with the stress of the tragedy, and there seemed no connection between a few crumbs of cheese unaccounted for and the death of the master of the house. Jack Logren laid aside the puzzle as incurable and gave his attention to more important details.

One of these was having a photograph taken of his uncle for reasons of his own. When the funeral was over and his friend, Ross Morton, a young Englishman, a subaltern in the royal navy, was staying with him on the trip the two were about to make to Japan, Jack made a critical examination of the pictures with a magnifying lens. What he saw compelled him to drop it in alarm and call to his friend.

"Ross, for God's sake come here! Tell me what you see."

Morton took the lens and examined the photograph with the same care Jack had used. "The devil!" he exclaimed; "look at the eyes. Something not human or of this world. Do you see that frightful face? It your uncle saw that the shock must have killed him."

"I do not believe in the supernatural, and this is not a trick of the camera I shall find out what it is. Ross, I want you to help me to-night."

"Let me occupy the lounge—you may need assistance."

"No, I will keep watch alone. I cannot cope with supernatural powers, but if anything of this world attacks me I will down it. And I shall take all due precautions against secret assassins. This night—I can hardly wait."

Old Malita was ordered to prepare the room for its new occupant. Loading his revolver with unusual care, Jack bade his friend good-night and retired, locking the only door belonging to the chamber and making a careful survey of every nook and corner. The bed had been draped in the whitest of clean linen, and Jack rubbed his hand over the smooth surface in appreciation of the rest it promised. Something stuck to his fingers. A subtle odor greeted his sensitive nostrils. He touched his tongue to the substance on his fingers—it was cheese.

His first thought was to call Malita. She did not answer, and he found her in the kitchen of the house. She was startled by his abrupt entrance and uttered fear, although a man was with her. Jack had not seen him before, and in his heart pronounced him a picturesque rogue.and. He asked Malita who he was. She answered gallantly:

"Mine son, excellencia."

Jack was surprised. "I never knew you had a son," he said; "I did not know you ever married."

"No, senor—me much marry—yes, long time now." And Jack asked no question about the cheese as he intended the narrative was over to his taint in the background.

The bereavement is time enough, although its inception had cost a life. Ross Morton, waking for his friend's sake, hereby regret in case a revolver near down. He rushed to the reason, broke in the door, and found Jack standing in the middle of the room with his countenance as of the object in the eye of the photograph held at arm's length. There was the fiendish face, devilish with frightful devices, the eyes tricked out with horrid rings of fire, the pointed ears ablaze with spectral light, yet stripped of its phosphorous glow and with Jack's bullet in its heart it proved to be nothing more than one of the regular accidents of California, but Jack himself declared that his own senses had almost suspected with fear at the approach of the thing, which looked five feet high as it leaped about in its uncanny guise.

Nothing more was seen of Malita. The cat had been a pet of hers, and it was surmised that she had only intended to give the place the name of being haunted that she might not be dispossessed. It was recalled that a singular light had frequently been noticed moving in erratic shapes about the house. The affair, which was the talk of the time, is likely to come to notice again, as the San Francisco papers announce that Manuel Logren, who died a bachelor, is using the estate for a share of the property. — Chicago Record-Herald.

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and, as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:

"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all eminent and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

GOT THE MORTGAGE PAID.

We've done a lot of scrimpin' an' livin' hand-to-mouth,
We've dreaded, too, wet weather an' we've worried over drouth,
For the thing kept drawin' in'rest, whether crops were good or bad,
An' rainin' much or little, seemed it awful hard all we had.
The women folks were savin' an' there ain't a bit of doubt
But that things they really needed lots or times they done without.
So we're breathin' somewhat easy, an' we're feelin' somewhat proud
Of Providence's workin's, since we got the mortgage paid.

I wish I'd kept a record of the things that mortgage ate,
In principal an' in'rest, from beginnin' down to date!—
A hundred dozen chickens, likely fowls and roosters, great,
A thousand pounds of butter, an' twelve hundred dozen eggs,
Some four or five good wheat crops and at least one crop of corn,
An' cats an' pigs it swallowed in its lifetime, sure's you're born,
Besides the work an' worry, ere its appetite was stayed!
So we're feelin' more contented since we got the mortgage paid.

We've reached the point, I reckon; where we've got a right to rest,
An' had 'stead, an' visit, wear our go-to-meetin' best—
Neglectin' nothin' urgent, understand, about the place,
But simply stowin' down by bits an' restin' in the race!
In time I'll have a windmill I've been wantin' for years;
The girls can have their organ, an' we'll all wear better clothes.
For we've always pulled together, while I know an' scrimped an' prayed,
An' it seems there's more to work for since we got the mortgage paid.

—B. F. Grose, in Wall Street Journal.

The Famous Fullerton Forgeries.

WHEN a millionaire dies there's generally the dickens to pay. Two or three superfluous wives get spot to turn up, or a blackmailer comes forward with a bit of private history—or something. If nothing else happens the heirs fight over the estate. And then they spend it—spend quickly that which took years to accumulate.

In the case of Fullerton, however, there was nothing of that kind. He had no children, and his young widow—there being only one—succeeded to everything real and personal whereso-ever situate. After the funeral she started to settle up things systematically. It was her purpose to begin at the beginning and finish up at the end. One bright day she stepped successively into several banks in the town and addressed the paying tellers.

"These checks," she suggested at each place, "do not contain my husband's signature. They seem to be forgeries. Examine them, please."

They were examined. She was right. They were forgeries. And there were not a few of them, after all. When every check had been examined it was found that more than $100,000 worth of paper, forged with the utmost skill and cleverness, had been presented at the banks and paid. That much was clear. But the question was, who did it?

"We'll find out," said the bank officers. And they started in. They sent up three of the best experts in the town and examined all the recent papers of the millionaire.

One evening two officers in plain clothes stepped into the bachelor apartment of Chauncey G. Illingworth, where he was dining alone. Illingworth had been private secretary of Fullerton, the millionaire.

"We want you," said the men in plain clothes. Illingworth turned pale.

"What for?" he gasped.

"You know well enough," they replied, "Ils forgery."

Illingworth was lodged in jail, and although the prosecutor had made the complaint on three checks only, aggregating some $4,500, the court fixed the bail at a large sum, and Chauncey could not obtain it. So he stayed where he was and the county paid his expenses. The day of trial approached. A week before it came on Illingworth received a note from one of the well-known lawyers of the town. It was addressed to him, and this is what it said:

"You are accused of the forgery of checks aggregating $100,000. I have had some success in forgery cases, and I am somewhat of a handwriting expert. I will guarantee to acquit you, and that without charge. Your father once did me a favor and I am now in a responsible. Let me know. Yours truly, JOHN DORAN."

Landgraf's services were accepted, Landgraf was a man well known, and by some highly admired. The whole town respected his genius. Illingworth had transacted considerable business for the dead millionaire. Landgraf explained nothing to the prisoner—indeed, he hardly listened to what he had to say. But he assured him solemnly that he would see him cleared.

The prosecution based its case upon three of the checks. They held the rest in abeyance for future action. These checks upon the trial, the prosecutor introduced in evidence. Then he placed his experts on the stand and each testified without reservation of any sort that Illingworth had forged the checks. Landgraf asked the court if he might withhold his cross-examination until the morrow. The court assented.

"May—may I take the checks, the three exhibits, and examine them over night?" he then asked. The court frowned and looked at the district attorney. That gentleman thought for a moment or two. It was dangerous, placing this evidence in the grasp of his opponent, one who might be unscrupulous—one who, perhaps, might destroy it utterly. "But, by George!" he reasoned, with himself, "if he does that it ruins his defense, for the jury will call him then, worse than ever." He therefore smiled, and said of course he would accord the privilege to Counselor Landgraf. This with an air that meant that to anybody else he of course could not extend such a favor. Landgraf took the checks.

All that night Counselor Landgraf sat behind closed doors, with the three checks before him, and with five reputable men, men of prominence in the city, watching him do—what? On that night only he and the five men knew. At the trial next day, the first of the experts the state went to the stand for the cross-examination. To him Counselor Landgraf handed a small slip of paper. On it were the words:

"This is not my handwriting.
"CHAUNCEY G. ILINGSWORTH."

"Whose handwriting, is that?" demanded Landgraf.

The expert examined it. "It is the handwriting," he replied, "of the prisoner at the bar."

Behind Landgraf at the same time sat five men. One of these, a leading merchant of the place, leaned forward and handed a few pieces of paper to Landgraf. There were three of them.

"And now," continued Landgraf, "once more we have these three checks. Look them over carefully, please, if you had never seen them, and tell the jury in whose handwriting is the signature."

The expert again examined them, and again he repeated his former answer. The other experts corroborated the first in each detail.

"And now," said Landgraf, "I will take the stand myself." He did so, and was sworn.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, as he glanced at the first piece of paper on which was the written disclaimer signed by the name of Illingworth, "gentlemen of the jury, I am ready to testify that this paper is not written in the handwriting of the prisoner."

The district attorney jumped to his feet. "I object!" he exclaimed. "Counselor Landgraf is no expert. He cannot testify."

The judge nodded. "Mr. Landgraf," he said, "you cannot give your opinion unless you qualify as an expert. The district attorney is right."

Landgraf smiled. "Your honor," he returned, "I have ventured no opinion, have stated as a fact that this is not in the handwriting of the prisoner. Neither, he continued, unpressingly, "are these three checks in evidence. I state that also as a fact."

The judge looked puzzled. "How can you know that, Mr. Landgraf?" he inquired.

THE JUDGE SCANNED THE PAPERS.

"Here are the three checks," he added, handing them to the judge.

The judge looked puzzled. "How can you know that, Mr. Landgraf?" he inquired, "there are six, Counselor Landgraf."

Landgraf smiled again. "Exactly," he replied, "three that are in evidence, and three duplicates of them. The three duplicates," he continued, "I—I made myself last night in the presence of these estimable gentlemen."

The judge scanned the papers. "Which are the three, Mr. Landgraf?" he inquired.

"Cannot your honor tell?" he asked. The judge thought he could, and so did the experts, who finally picked out the three that had been marked in evidence. These three were then handed to the five gentlemen. They examined them for secret marks.

"These," they testified, "were not in evidence. They were copied from the others by Counselor Landgraf in our presence at his office last night."

Landgraf rose and smiled upon the jury. "That is my case gentlemen of the jury," he said. "The case against the prisoner depends entirely upon the expert evidence. You see the value of it. None can tell the checks apart. Look at them." He handed over not six, but nine checks. The extra three no one but himself had seen made. Apparently each check was like the other, and no man could tell which was which.

Ten minutes later Chauncey G. Illingworth shook hands with the foreman of the jury and turned to receive the congratulations of his friends. But first he held forth his hand to thank his counsel. But his counsel had disappeared in the confusion incident to the sensational outcome of the trial, and had gone apparently from off the face of the earth. No man in town ever heard of him again. Hence saw Illingworth. He received a note a few days later.

"The obvious," it said, "of course, did not occur to the mind of my in the courtroom. But it will in a day or two. I am off, therefore, to enjoy what is left of a cool $100,000 of old Fullerton's cash. My advice to you now is to sue the banks for false imprisonment and then to marry Fullerton's young widow. You will find that it pays. In the meantime never forget the fact that the man that forged all of old Fullerton's checks was at the same time the man who got you free and clear, and that his name, my dear young friend, was once, but will no longer be forth, LLEWELLYN LANDGRAF."

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, that justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next five years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent commission. Why not buy at well know land in your own section?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

3000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well-settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $5,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid on time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

CASUAL OBSERVATIONS.

Discussion of the sugar bounty bill seems not to have aided in sweetening the dispositions of the legislators.

The Adrian Democrat reports several cases of "broncho-pneumonia" "in its midst." Say, old man, does it give a fellow the kicking sensation?

President Roosevelt is still complaining about the dearth of children. He ought to be invited to visit Red Lake Falls on the occasion of a high school field day.

Colonel Watterson declares that happiness does not depend upon the stomach. Now let the dentists of the Bourbon state prove it by cutting out their high-balls and mint juleps.

Editor Millard of the Lake Shetek Courier has at last figured out out why the average married man is a walking encyclopedia:

"The reason married men are better informed than single men is because their wives tell them everything."

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says:

"The country will observe that the Republican party is once more carrying out its promises."

To which the Louisville Courier-Journal aptly retorts:

"On a shutter."

The Willmar Tribune refuses to accept saloon or liquor advertisements. but we observe that this valued exchange is giving the blind piggers a lot of free notices. As a result all of the illicit liquor dispensers have either put up a $50 fine or are guests at Hotel de Sheriff.

The Imitator is informed that this page of THE COURIER is not copyrighted. The Imitator has our unreserved consent to continue the adaptation of our ideas. If you can't be a leader it is at least a mark of enterprise to follow in the footsteps of so good a paper as THE COURIER.

And now the country schoolma'am is to find out the degree of her popularity by means of a newspaper contest. We know of several young men who could tell which of the fair charmers are most worthy, but none of them care to advertise their choice until they get ready to consult Clerk Perrault.

Our friend Day of the Albert Lea Standard may be getting old and grey-haired, but his powers of observation and admiration suggest a perennial youth naturally to be expected of such a sunny and optimistic disposition:

"Fashion makers have decreed another summer of shirt waists—and that's nice. For no feminine wear is more fetching—they fetch admiration, beaux and love-knots."

If you want anything advertise for it. Bro. Schaeffer of the Adrian Democrat tells how a western newspaper publisher demonstrated the truth of this saying:

"An editor in Montana told his subscribers to help edit the paper. Said he: 'If you get married send in the particulars. If a baby arrives at your house, send it in. Three days after the paper came out two babies were left in front of his sanctum."

Mary McFadden, the bright paragrapher who has made the Duluth News-Tribune famous, in one of her serious moods, says:

"When one argues against the influence of religion in the moulding of a fine character, the mind of a boarding house pupil goes back to an old duraherd motto: 'Guard well thy thoughts; our thoughts are heard in Heaven.' That bit of painted cardboard had a telling influence upon every child who read it in our school, and left an impress on the after life of each of the students who took it to heart. That motto and sentiment should find a place in every school and home."

Bishop Mann complains of the open flaunting of the red light of vice at the state capital of North Dakota, a condition that is intensified during the sessions of the legislature. This may be alarming, but it is not surprising. A set of men corrupt politically cannot hope to keep their morality above suspicion, and if any commonwealth can show surer signs of political decadence than North Dakota or Delaware it ought to be quarantined against decent people.

Here is a story with a moral. The bare press dispatch needs no elucidation:

"Sioux City, Iowa, February 18—Lying at an undertaking shop are the remains of Colonel Schuyler S. Sessions, once a member of the governor's staff, in 1890 a member of the legislature from Kossuth county and formerly a prominent attorney at Algona. He died alone. He was deserted by his wife, formerly prominent in Des Moines society, because he loved liquor better than her. She procured a divorce and is now in Minneapolis. He appealed to a hotel proprietor here for something to do to keep him from starving and was given the night clerkship."

A writer in the Chicago Record-Herald relates the following interesting and profitable lesson:

"When I was quite a lad," said a wealthy and distinguished merchant to one asking the secret of success in his life, "I went to pay a visit to my grandfather, a venerable man, whose velvet cap, blue coat and huge silver buckles filled me with awe. On my bidding him good-bye he drew me gently to him, and, placing his hand on my head, said: 'My little grandson, I have one thing to say to you; will you try to remember it?' I looked into his face and nodded, for I was afraid to promise aloud. 'I want to give you a piece of advice,' he continued, 'which, if you follow it, will be a sure passport to success. It is this: IN WHATEVER YOU UNDERTAKE ALWAYS DO YOUR BEST.'"

The modern Casabianca appears to be a different sort from the hero mentioned in the Third reader, according to the Washington Star:

"The boy stood on the burning deck
And stamped to beat the band.
He was the most far-seeing boy
There was in all the land.

He knew he couldn't save them all,
But thought the ones he'd lack
Might be spot cards, then still he'd have
A perfect euchre pack."

We regret exceedingly to report that Red Lake Falls is to have but six new railroad lines this spring. It was Jim Hill's original intention to give us ten new trunk lines, but one of the traveling freight agents misunderstood the orders of his chief and gave away four of the new railroads as a rebate to a North Dakota man for shipping a carload of hogs over the Great Northern. It is understood the editor of the Gazette was greatly exasperated at the stupidity of the freight agent, and on the occasion of the latter's visit to our c.. last week took him to task quite severely for the blunder. The re.. ..rt is current that the forces of J. J. a. was thoroughly cowed by t.. ..atening attitude of the Oracle, and compromised the unfo.. situation by assuring us that in the event of Mr. Hill's resignation or death a Red Lake Falls man would be named as president of the road.

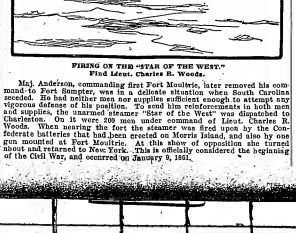
LESSON in AMERICAN HISTORY in PUZZLE



FIRING ON THE "STAR OF THE WEST."
Find Lieut. Charles R. Woods.

Maj. Anderson, commanding first Fort Moultrie, later removed his command to Fort Sumpter, was in a delicate situation when South Carolina seceded. He had neither men nor supplies sufficient enough to attempt any vigorous defense of his position. To send him reinforcements in both men and supplies, the unarmed steamer "Star of the West" was dispatched to Charleston. On it were 200 men under command of Lieut. Charles R. Woods. When nearing the fort the steamer was fired upon by the Confederate batteries that had been erected on Morris Island, and also by one gun mounted at Fort Moultrie. At this show of opposition she turned about and returned to New York. This is officially considered the beginning of the Civil War, and occurred on January 9, 1861.

The Cost of Success and the Cost of Failure

By WILLIAM F. KING,

Successful New York Business Man, and Formerly President of the Merchants' Association.

To young men, success is best taught by object lessons. They need to learn that it is just as easy to fill a good pair of shoes as a poor pair. This lesson was impressed upon me when my father took me to the closet where he kept his old shoes and offered me any pair I wanted. I took the best shoes there. "That's right, my son," he said, "you can fill good shoes as well as bad ones." If our young men bore this idea in mind there would be fewer failures.

The ideas of young men are all wrong. They say they do not count. They think the places at the top are for others.

The true attitude for a struggling young man is: "I must fill the place at the top and no other." If you are going to fall, fall from the top!

When I began to work for my living I was offered three dollars a week. My duties were to clean spittoons, sweep the office and run errands. I asked my employer if there was any chance of doing better later on. He said: "You can be president of the establishment if you have the ability." I made up my mind to do it.

There are two essential points that a young man should bear in mind:

NEVER TO FORGET THAT IT COSTS AS MUCH TO FAIL AS TO SUCCEED.

NEVER TO BORROW. NEVER TO TRY TO KEEP PACE WITH MEN WHO HAVE MORE MONEY.

As much vitality is used up in failure as in success. Effort is exhausted in worry for the future. The young man with a six-dollar-a-week salary struggling to pay a ten-dollar debt wastes in worry the energy he ought to put into work. How avoid it? Do not get in debt!

The great question of the day is: Have trusts and big combinations of capital left the individual without a show? Ask any man of affairs and he will tell you that there was never a better opportunity for BRAINS than at this very moment.

However vast Mr. Morgan's schemes, he is absolutely dependent upon the brains of others to carry them out. The man who formerly made $10,000 a year as head of his own enterprise now gets the same amount as manager.

The Railroads and the People

By CHAS. A. PROUTY,

Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

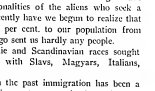
AS COMBINATIONS of railroads have grown in number and extent the alarmed public has been repeatedly assured that there was no danger of an advance in freight rates. YET RATES HAVE BEEN ADVANCED AND ARE STILL ADVANCING.

Within the last three years the combination of anthracite coal roads has increased the cost of coal from one dollar to two dollars a ton to the consumer. In four years the common stock of the Reading road alone advanced about 300 per cent.

The interstate commerce commission investigated the advance of the hay rates, and it decided that the advance was unjustifiable. NO ATTENTION HAS BEEN PAID OR WILL BE PAID TO THIS DECISION, FOR THE COMMISSION HAS NOT THE POWER TO ENFORCE ITS FINDINGS.

What should be done to better such conditions? We must create a commerce court. This tribunal should review and enforce the findings of the interstate commerce commission, and appeal from this body should be to the supreme court of the United States.

The railroad is the greatest and most dangerous of all monopolies. Every advance in rates levies a tax upon the whole country in favor of combinations of wealth. A commerce court, with compulsory powers, would certainly prove advantageous to the public.



The How Evil Effects of Immigration

By WILLIAM WILLIAMS,

Commissioner of Immigration at New York.

TO adequately restrict immigration there has been no recent legislation of any importance. We are now getting laws framed mainly in 1891 and 1893. Since that time vast changes have occurred in the character and nationalities of the aliens who seek a new home in this country. Only recently have we begun to realize that we are adding annually nearly one per cent to our population from portions of Europe which 20 years ago sent us hardly any people.

Formerly Anglo-Saxon, Teutonic and Scandinavian races sought our shores. To-day we are flooded with Slavs, Magyars, Italians, Greeks and Syrians.

It is generally conceded that in the past immigration has been a very important factor in enabling this country to attain the position of eminence which it now occupies. The northwest is under a particular obligation to the old world, and in some of its sections the voters of foreign extraction outnumber those of native birth. But development has not been caused by the mere fact that hundreds of thousands of foreigners have been coming here annually, but by the further fact that they have gone out into the agricultural regions, and that they came from countries whose inhabitants more closely resemble our people in blood, traditions and ideas of government than do the natives of the countries from which our immigrants now come. HAD OUR EARLY IMMIGRATION PROCEEDED FROM THOSE PORTIONS OF EASTERN AND SOUTHERN EUROPE WHICH NOW SEND SUCH LARGE NUMBERS OF ILLITERATE ALIENS INTO OUR GREAT CITIES THIS COUNTRY WOULD NOT ENJOY ITS PRESENT CIVILIZATION.

Out of the 700,000 foreigners who arrived last year about 3,000 were professionals, 80,000 were skilled workmen, 420,000 were unskilled laborers and 150,000 were women and children with no occupation. Only 70,000 were possessed of over $30 each. Seventy per cent. intended to settle in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

It is probably true that the United States needs all the able-bodied and intelligent laborers it can procure, and at present no steps should be taken to prevent such people from coming here. We must strive to so legislate as to secure these people and keep out those who are below a certain grade of intellectual and economic fitness.

VOLUME V.—NUMBER 24. RED LAKE FALLS, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 19, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER 232.

IMPORTANT CHANGE IN BUSINESS CIRCLES

Harry Healy Buys William Schwalen's Interest in Furniture Store and Opera House.

Harry B. Healy has purchased William Schwalen's half interest in the furniture business of Anderson & Schwalen and takes possession at once. The deal also includes the transfer of Mr. Schwalen's interest in the Metropolitan opera house building. The style of the new firm will be Anderson & Healy. They expect to carry a larger stock of furniture than ever before brought to Red Lake county, and will make a strong bid for trade, if good goods, low prices and fair treatment are inducements to the public.

Mr. Healy has had considerable business experience, and as this line is particularly to his liking there is no reason why he should not be successful in his venture.

Mr. Schwalen has not announced his intentions for the future, but his friends hope he will remain in Red Lake Falls.

Court Convenes Monday.

The March term of the Red Lake county district court will convene at the court house in this city next Monday, the 23rd, with Judge Watts on the bench. The calendar is an usually large one this term there being forty-six cases on the list, with probably a third as many appeal cases. From ten to fourteen days time will be required in which to dispose of the work.

Spelts for Sale.

I have a few bushels of seed emer, or spelts, for sale.—M. A. Baumgardner, 13 miles south of town.

COOPER'S LECTURE POSTPONED

Messrs. Anderson & Healy, managers of the opera house, desire THE COURIER to state that the lecture by Prof. R. Watson Cooper, advertised for next Tuesday evening, has been unavoidably postponed until after Easter. The date can probably be announced next week.

DEATH OF MRS. BURGDORF.

An Old and Respected Citizen Called to the Higher Life.

Mrs. Louise Burgdorf, one of the oldest settlers in Red Lake Falls, died early Tuesday morning of old age. Mrs. Burgdorf was born in Germany, August 16, 1823, and at the time of her death was nearly 80 years of age. She came to Red Lake Falls with her family in 1882, and has lived here continuously since then. Mr. Burgdorf died February 7, 1901, a few months after the celebration of their golden wedding anniversary.

Deceased was the mother of ten children, eight of whom survive. The eldest daughter, Mrs. Cetta Sutter, died Jan. 6, 1902, at Lake City, and a son, Charles, died April 1, 1884, at Fergus Falls. The surviving children are Mrs. Mary Hennings, Mrs. Emma Matthies, Fred and George, Red Lake Falls; Henry, Washburn, N. D.; Mrs. Gusta Haverstick, Fergus Falls; Edward, St. Paul; and William, Minneapolis. All of them, except Henry, were present at the funeral.

The funeral service was held at two o'clock this afternoon at the Northside opera house, Rev. Andrew Walther officiating. The remains were interred by the side of the husband and father in the Red Lake Falls cemetery. Mrs. Burgdorf was known to a large circle of friends and her death will be universally mourned.

PLEASING BAND CONCERT NEXT THURSDAY NIGHT

Another Evening of Delightful Musical Entertainment in Store For Red Lake Falls Citizens.

The regular monthly concert by the band will be given at the Metropolitan next Thursday evening. The program will consist of eight band pieces, two vocal solos and a selection by Prof. Smith's month old organization, the Junior band. There will be no dancing at this concert, but the program is well selected and quite lengthy and it will be time and money well spent by attending. The following numbers comprise the program:

TOWN VS. RAILROAD.

Citizens of Dugdale Will Sue Great Northern Road for Damages.

Residents of the hamlet of Dugdale, on the line of the Great Northern, twenty miles east of Crookston, will bring suit against that road for damages. The company platted the village and sold lots to the residents, who have improved the place and started a flourishing trading point.

It is alleged that the company promised as soon as a stated amount of business was done a station house would be built for the accommodation of the villagers. The required limit was passed something like a year ago, and the promise was recalled to the company. Instead of carrying out the terms of the agreement, the company erected a small station at the crossing of its track and that of the Northern Pacific, at a point one and a quarter miles west of Dugdale and ordered that its trains discontinue stopping at Dugdale.

The case has been placed in the hands of a Crookston attorney and suit will be brought.

LIKES RED LAKE FALLS.

A Southern Minnesota Editor Talks of Our Advantages.

People from the other localities who come to Red Lake Falls are always favorably impressed. Last fall E. C. Huntington, editor of the Windom Reporter, and paradoxialist, it may appear, a leading capitalist of his section, paid our city a visit, and in the last issue of his paper has this to say:

"You know that most everybody is well acquainted with St. Paul and Minneapolis, and are as unacquainted with the rest of the state. I must plead a little guilty of this ignorance myself, but I have traveled in the state somewhat and have something of an idea of her resources. Every time I get away from the regular paths I find something new and worth seeing and knowing. For instance, last fall I made a little trip into the northwestern part of the state, visited Red Lake Falls, and found a better town than Windom, which I don't like to admit, but you know it. If I am guilty of anything it is always telling the truth, (thhurts the devil like the devil. If, however, there is any lying to be done I would lie for Windom the quickest of anything.

"It is a mistake people make in not learning more about this great state. There is the northwest, of which we read considerably, but we can only get a small idea of what it is without going up there. Red Lake Falls is a town on the Red Lake river, with splendid water facilities, and two of the largest flouring mills in the state outside the cities, as well as lumber mills. Its shipments of freight amount to a dozen or twenty cars a day, and little of it is wheat, for most of the wheat marketed at the Falls is shipped out in flour. The possibilities are great for the city, and still not half the land in the county is settled. The streams in the county make splendid water powers, and not half of the dam sights are improved. We think of the Des Moines river when talking of streams, but the rivers up there are rivers, not little half dried up streams hardly worthy the name of a stream."

NEW LAND COMPANY FOR RED LAKE FALLS

The Johnson-Van Sant Company Opens an Office This Week in Boughton Building.

The Johnson-Van Sant Land company, with offices at St. Paul and Morris, Minn., and Langdon and Bottineau, N. D., opened an office at Red Lake Falls in the Boughton building this week, with E. H. Brevoskracht, of St. Paul, as local manager. Mr. Brevoskracht has been in the land business for a number of years and is familiar with all sections of the Northwest. He has visited a large number of places during the past month and decided that Red Lake county offered better prospects for development during the coming year than any other section.

This company has a capital of $250,000. Governor Samuel R. Van Sant is president, Grant Van Sant vice president and attorney, J. A. Johnson secretary and treasurer. The company owns and controls upwards of 29,000 acres of Red River valley lands, and will doubtless be the means of bringing many settlers to Red Lake county.

Thro' Picturesque Wisconsin

By daylight is a memorable and delightful trip when made on the famous Badger State Express, the popular day train between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago, via the North-Western Line. A luxurious Observation Parlor Cafe Car is attached to the rear of this train, affording exceptional opportunities for viewing the beautiful scenery. Hot meals are also served at any time at a la carte—pay only for what you order.

Grover Cleveland emerged from the seclusion of his Princeton home last week to attend a public meeting at New York in honor of Henry Ward Beecher, and made one of the finest speeches of his life. In the course of his remarks the ex-president said:

"Let us believe that there is no sadder symptom of a generation's bad moral health than its lack of faith in its great men and its loss of reverence for its heroes, truly great, and that the heroes challenging our reverence shall be truly heroic, measured by standards adjusted to the highest moral conditions of man's civilization. We cannot have the least misgiving concerning the completeness of the hero whose name is on our lips at the present time."

The worst trait of the average American is the inability to concede to others the right to hold and express opinions on political, religious or social questions. How often we blight a friendship because of views that run counter to our own! And how necessary, if we would live happily and maintain amicable relations with those about us, is the teaching of the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would be done by!" Along this line Deacon Caldwell of the Worthington Globe tells the experience of many a poor unfortunate:

"If you want to find how deep is the current of friendship, just try to run counter to the wishes of the one who is making professions of esteem, etc. You are all right—an honest man, one to be respected, etc., until you see things from a different standpoint. It is hard for the average man to be just and generous at the same time."

The Saturday Evening Post is the latest publication to break out with an editorial on our new ambassador to Germany and the unfortunate stripes on his official pants. Why, in the name of American horse sense, does not the State department prescribe a suitable diplomatic uniform and settle this fool argument forever? "The simple garb of an American citizen" is a pretty and catchy phrase, but, really, is evening dress the simple garb of an American citizen? Most American citizens are more familiar with overalls and jumpers than with the tail coat. Then shall our diplomats wear denim? It is to laugh! It strikes us that "the simple garb of an American citizen" is that most suited to his occupation. Does a policeman wear evening dress in the line of duty? Does the major general commanding usually review troops in a Tuxedo jacket? Does the farmer pitch hay in a white waistcoat? Why, then should our ambassadors wear the uniform of the household servants at foreign functions under the delusion that they are arrayed in "the simple garb of an American citizen"?

LESSON IN AMERICAN HISTORY IN PUZZLE

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA. THE FIRST CONFEDERATE CAPITAL. Find Jefferson Davis.

Delegates from seven southern states met at Montgomery, Ala., on February 4, 1861, for the purpose of forming a southern confederacy. Howell Cobb, of Florida was chosen to preside. On the ninth of the same month an election was held for a provisional president and vice president, and Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, was chosen for the former and Alexander H. Stephens for the latter office. The provisional government existed until March 11, 1861, when a permanent constitution was adopted and the permanent government was established at Richmond. Mr. Davis, the president of the confederacy, was a graduate of West Point; had commanded a regiment of Mississippi troops in the war with Mexico, and had served in the regular army with considerable credit to himself.

Answer to last week's puzzle—Right side down in waves of ship.

Municipal Ownership as a Public Policy

By MONROE FULHERSON,

President of the General Organization of the Municipal Ownership Clubs of Chicago.

Are the American people and the American cities ready for municipal ownership of public utilities at the present time? The growth of public sentiment in favor of this question is like that which has culminated in all great reforms—a slow, tedious struggle through many years.

After a careful study of this question, there appears two principal reasons why the American people have been so slow in adopting municipal ownership. First, they have looked upon such measures as socialistic, and a departure from conservative existing conditions, and secondly, because a majority of the articles on this subject appearing in the newspapers and magazines of the country have been written by those who at some time in their career were connected with transportation lines, light plants or some of the properties commonly known as public utilities, whose personal interests and prejudiced minds have sought to discourage rather than advance municipal ownership, and to confuse rather than make plain the basic principles underlying this great economic problem.

There is to-day, however, in the larger cities of the country, a manifest awakening and public demand for a taking over by the municipal body, such industries as street car lines, gas plants, electric light works and telephones; while a number of European cities have in addition to the above included tenement houses, public baths, laundries, cemeteries and slaughter houses to their successful list of operations; but the sentiment of the American people is content with the first named utilities. A majority of the people of this country have come to the conclusion that municipal ownership is no longer the visionary creation of an erratic mind, but a practical, conservative business proposition, wherein the whole community are benefited as against the few under the present method, as fully demonstrated in Switzerland, Germany, England, Scotland and France.

It is often urged by those who have given this subject but little thought that with the introduction of municipal ownership would come a more powerful political machine than now exists, and with it, corrupt methods; those holding such views should not lose sight of the fact that the occasion for the present reference to aldermen and municipal officers as "boodlers" is due to the letting of franchises to private ownership, where corporations are pleased to pay three or four million dollars for a franchise grant, worth ten or fifteen times that sum, and thereby not only robbing the public of their just rights, but debauching the manhood of the country as well.

Under municipal ownership no franchise would be at the disposal of the city council, and no temptation to allure a soul to the darkened shoals of sin.

In addition to the above advantages to be derived from such a change in our municipal affairs, does it not seem reasonable that there would be an incentive for those having charge of municipal functions to give a high standard of service and equipment, inasmuch as the money for the same would not come from their pockets as it does from the private owner, who, in order to maintain a large dividend, finds it expedient to reduce the amount of light and heat in street cars or keep in service those which have outlived their usefulness; as a poorly lighted ear without heat will hold many passengers, and return to the barns with as many nickels as the most modern creation of sanitary science and artistic elegance. Therefore, there is an incentive for individual avarice and corporate greed to give a poor service, while the same selfish motive in the municipal office holders would be to give a high degree of service in all the departments for the reason that they wish to court favor with the people at the polls.

With these outlines of thought, may the people set to work to realize the possession of their unguarded rights, thereby increasing their comforts and savings, as well as bettering society by removing the powerful temptations to those in power incident to the disposal of franchises.

The Future of Stage Scenic Effects

By DAVID BELASCO.

TO speak of "stage effects 50 years hence" is by no means an unreasonable proposition. The subject is not one for the prophet or the dreamer. It is rather for the practical man who observes what is going on about him in the fields of art and science, and who has wit and discretion, backed up by ability, to adapt the world's great achievements to his own uses.

Read in the light of recent accomplishment, therefore, the line of development in stage effects during the next half century may be determined with considerable certainty.

In "Du Barry" Mrs. Leslie Carter rides to the guillotine through flakes of falling snow—light, feathery, airy—all but real. The effect is gained by the use of lights. In "The Darling of the Gods" are shown a river of sulphur, the murky flames of purgatory and banks of fleecy drifting clouds—perfect in their illusion, yet all made by an original use of the electric calcium.

A dozen years ago the manager who would have dared conceive such effects would have been laughed at as a dreamer. His ideas would have been scouted as visionary and impossible. YET, WITH ELECTRICITY'S AID, THESE THINGS HAVE BEEN DONE, AND WILL BE DONE AGAIN and again until all the beauties of the natural world shall seem as real on the stage as in actual life, and the mysteries of the supernatural more vivid than imagination can paint them.

Though such wonders have already been accomplished, it is still true that this new art, this "poetry of light," is in its infancy. Fifty years hence will see a complete revolution. All the miracles that electricity has wrought, all that it may yet achieve, will be seized upon by the dramatist. Let him have only soul and imagination; electrical science will step in and paint his pictures for him. Sunsets, drifting clouds, sandstorms, flowing rivers—these, and more, have been reproduced to the life. If so much can be done with electricity in its comparatively undeveloped state, who shall say to what ends this marvelous force may not be carried in its uses on the stage. PAINTED SCENERY, AS WE KNOW IT TO-DAY, MAY BECOME A THING OF THE PAST. The whole stage picture may be a light picture, and the scenic artist may yet be required to do with lights all that to-day he does with brushes and paints.

The Little Florist

THEY were neighbors.

He was a florist, and had hopes of making a good living. She was making a prosperous living by managing an inherited nursery. He was young. She was younger. There similarity ceased. He was rugged, uncultured, plain, though with a certain charm of virile, forceful homeliness difficult to analyze. She was pretty, college bred, artistic, artistic. He believed in brawn and brain. She believed in blood and breeding.

They were not neighborly. She called herself a "horticulturist." He was merely a florist. Of course, Dick Russell was a bachelor, and in love.

"Why don't you stick up a house on your grounds?" asked Uncle William one night as he and Dick sat smoking a good-night pipe in the porch.

"Can't afford it," said Dick, curtly.

"I'm putting every penny I can raise into that gas machine I'm building in the nursery."

"Foolish, too!" grunted Uncle William.

"Mebbe so," assented Dick, grimly.

The months passed.

Dick said little, but read a great deal. One day he horrified Uncle William by requesting permission to put in a telephone.

"What for?" demanded he in a breath.

"'Cause I want it," said Dick.

So, in spite of opposition and dire predictions, the telephone was installed, connecting the house with the distant village of Prettiewell. His point won, and his crop money safely deposited in the bank, Dick threw himself heart and soul into the completion of his queer plant. He bought miles of slender iron piping, and many tons of hard coal. He dug ditches and laid a portion of the piping around his orchard and at regular distances across it, until the ground looked like a gigantic gridiron. The unused piping (by far the larger portion) was stored away in the gas house. When the work was finished and the ditches filled in, curious neighbors commented on the "queer nozzles" which showed above the ground at intervals along the straight rows of buried pipes.

"Goin' to irrigate?" they asked.

"Mebbe," said Dick, grimly.

"How'es you goin' to plow an' harrow with them things a-stickin' up in that way?"

The gas machine itself, situated in the center of the orchard, was, by aid of a stout building, stout shutters and a portly padlock, made curiously proof. No one went into this building except Dick and two trusted workmen.

"It's perfectly scand'lous!" sniffed Aunt William one bitterly cold evening, as she sat by the kitchen fire mending a pair of Dick's socks.

"Which?" asked William, looking up from his newspaper absent mindedly.

"Dick's goin's-on."

"Where's he goin' now?" he asked, his mind still on the paper.

"Don't you know," she demanded, looking at him severely, "that Dick is a-spending e'ery penny he's got in the world for a big black machine an' a lot o' rusty pipes?"

Uncle William looked crushed.

"Listen!" she said, suddenly, holding up one of Dick's socks warningly.

Borne on the crisp night air there came the distant ringing blows of hammer upon steel.

"Just then the telephone bell rang loudly.

"Goodness me!" exclaimed William, almost dropping the lamp. Stepping to the instrument, he put the receiver to his ear.

"Is Dick Russell there?" asked an unfamiliar voice.

"No. He's away at work on his gas engine."

"Will you take a message to him at once?"

"Who're you?"

"Never mind me. Here's the message—it's important. Tell Russell that the weather clerk writes: 'Severe frost to-night. Good-by.'"

Uncle William gasped and turned to his wife.

"What's it all about?" she sputtered.

"Severe frost to-night," repeated he.

"What!"

"That's what the man said," persisted he.

"He's crazy," snapped Aunt William.

"Mebbe so. Mebbe. Folk says Dick's crazy, too. Mebbe we're all crazy."

And Uncle William reached for his boots.

"What are you goin' to do?"

"Do? Why cart this message over to Dick afore it gets frore on the way."

A tramp of about 200 yards through the snow brought Uncle William to the "gassy machinery" (so Dick's neighbors politely called the structure).

"Who's that?" asked Dick's voice from within.

"Me—Uncle Bill."

"What's up?"

"There's to be a severe frost to-night, Weather expert says so. Ah' I'm a-freezin' out here."

Dick swung the door wide open.

"Come in," said he.

"So there's going to be a big frost to-night, eh?"

"That's the telephone message."

"Much obliged," said Dick. "Did you notice what the thermometer said when you left home?"

"It said five below zero."

Picking up the lantern, Dick hurried outside the door and consulted his own thermometer.

"Six below now," said he, thoughtfully.

Then, hastily giving some instructions to the workmen, he put on his coat and hat, took up the lantern again and turned to Uncle William.

"Uncle Bill," said he, earnestly, "I've been working and waiting a long time for this night. Sit still and get warm till I come back."

Dick went out.

Where had Dick gone?

Straight to Helen Remington. That is, as straight as a detour around the fence would permit. As he marched up the walk to the house (wherein he had never been but once in his life) he swung his uncle's lantern and stamped his feet to keep up his courage. He knocked on the door softly. His heart pounded fiercely.

"Who is there?" asked a puzzled, half-frightened feminine voice through the door.

"It's only Dick Russell," he said, quietly. "There's an important matter I must see you about."

Then she opened the door—haughtily, fearlessly.

"Come into the sitting-room, Mr. Russell," said the girl, frigidly.

"There's to be a big record frost to-night," said he, blushing like a girl.

"How do you know?"

"I've just had news from the weather bureau; and I've come to warn you."

"Have you warned the other neighbors?" she asked, quietly.

"No-o. That is, I—I—"

"Why haven't you?"

"Because I—well—bother it all!" he stammered, suddenly getting warm all over—"because I thought of you first. And I only got the news a few minutes ago. And I couldn't, if I wanted to, save all the orchards around here. But I can save yours—and my own—and Uncle Bill's."

"How?"

"With the gas plant I've been building, and—and—"

He hesitated, stopped.

"Never mind the details, Mr. Russell," she said, hurriedly, as she arose to her feet; "it is late, and there is your own garden to think of. Hasten and take it always, as it always has done. I thank you—"

"But," interrupted Dick, as he stood up and faced her—"but"—he began again—"I—I—"

Then a sudden comprehension swept through him; he understood her strange expression. The words he would have said died upon his lips. He marched out.

There was in an unusually hard frost to-night," she thought.

She looked at the thermometer. Eight degrees below zero!

She began to feel afraid; she had heard of the damage wrought by cold only a trifle more intense than this.

Looking out in the direction of Dick Russell's farm, she saw that his orchard was encompassed and crossed by systematic rows of yellow light-jets, blazing and smoking unevenly in the still air.

Then the truth came home to her. He was not insane. He was merely a genius. He was right; she was wrong. He had come to her in manly helplessness, and she had—

The tears came to her eyes. But not for long. Hurrying to the hall, she put on her heaviest boots and warm wraps, and stepped outside. But one thought possessed her—to find Mr. Russell and ask his forgiveness. The rest did not matter.

She found him, as fate would have it—alone.

Hearing footsteps, Dick raised his head.

"Helen!"

They looked into each other's eyes hesitating, incredulous, mute.

Words came at last. "I misjudged you," she said, simply, humbly. That was all.

That night Dick "did things"—many things, rapid, clever things. He hurried Aunt William and the two men, Uncle William hurried two horses, and the two horses hurried load after load of spare iron piping to various places on Miss Remington's farm. But first, with great joy (and a file), Dick cut a wide opening in the fence. Under his vigorous strokes the wires parted with a vicious, resentful snap, and the victorious besieger passed through into the promised land.

Quickly and deftly the men began coupling the lengths of pipe together; while Dick, with one hand almost frozen, went back to find his lost mitten. Finding it, the pipe-laying progressed with greater rapidity. Soon the Remington orchard was encompassed and crossed with lines of black tubing laid upon the snow-crust, each pipe-length pierced in the center with a tiny drilled hole.

Ten degrees below zero!

Wearied and cold the men stag gered to the gashouse and sank exhausted on the floor. After a short rest Dick consulted the thermometer again.

Five below!

"I've done it!" he gasped, triumphantly.

As weeks and months went by the wisdom of Dick's "foolish idea" became more and more manifest; and, when crop-time came, the only orchards which bore fruit crops in that village were the three farms at Prettiewell. Dick's bank account grew prodigiously. The last remnant of Miss Remington's mortgage disappeared.

The breach in the fence barrier, once open, slowly widened; the murdered wires, once parted, refused to reunite. The way into paradise remained open. One night he asked a question—that question which has receded in the universe since time began—and Miss Remington, blushingly, archly said: "Yes, Dick."—Loudon Answers.

THE senate has passed a bill to repeal the corrupt practices acts, there being only four dissenting votes. This is the act that requires statements of candidates' expenses during campaigns. The law appears to have done no good, and it is claimed that it has fostered considerable perjury.

A BILL to prevent teachers from giving up one school in order to accept a more desirable position has made its appearance in the house. It provides that the state superintendent may revoke the certificate of any teacher who fails to keep a contract with a board of education, the revocation being for six months for the first offense, one year for the second, and permanently for the third.

FIFTY-FOUR years ago, March 3, 1849, President Polk signed a bill which made Minnesota a territory, and a few days later Alexander Ramsey, a young Pennsylvanian, was appointed governor of the new territory. The territory of Minnesota at that time comprised not only the present state, but also the states of North and South Dakota. The population was 4,887 and the principal town in the state was Mendota. On May 11, 1858, the state was admitted into the union. Gov. Ramsey still lives in St. Paul and is hale and hearty, although nearing his ninetieth year. He has seen the state develop from a wilderness to one of the most flourishing commonwealths in the union, with a population, as shown by the government census of 1900, of 1,751,394.

THE immigration act which passed both houses of congress provides that a tax of $2 shall be collected for every alien immigrant who enters the United States, the tax to be paid at the port of entry by the master or owner of the vessel on which the immigrant arrives. The classes excluded from admission are idiots, insane persons, epileptics and persons who have been insane within five years previous, paupers, persons likely to become a public charge, persons afflicted with a loathsome, dangerous or contagious disease, persons who have been convicted of crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of all government or the assassination of public officials, women of bad repute and persons who attempt to bring in such women, and persons whose tickets or passage is paid for with the money of another or who are assisted by others to come.

When a man gets the grip he can drink a quart of whisky to cure it, but all a woman can do is to cry because blowing her nose makes it red.

Capital Intelligences.

Washington, Dec. 1, 1872.—The Cabinet adjourned today on account of death in the family of the Bookagent General. The department of Book Agency was closed all day.

The Secretary of Matrimony announces that hereafter no clerk in his department, except in the Bureau of Experimentation, will be allowed to marry.

The necessity of still further enlargement of the Cabinet room is pressing. Even now the Secretary of Christian Science and Historical Painter have to sit in the hall. With the assurance that Congress will pass bills creating departments of Poetry, Haying and Pink Teas, the situation becomes quite acute.—Puck.

Guard the Judiciary.

Roseau Region: There is every reason to believe that the bill providing additional judges in the 14th judicial district will become a law. It will then become the duty of the governor to appoint a judge to hold office until the next general election. There is much talk of this one and that one, and we are sorry to notice that the principal reason advanced for the candidates is; service to the Republican party. This is wrong. While political services are deserving of reward at the hands of the administration, the judiciary should never be appointed for such considerations merely. The judicial department should be free from partisanship. What is wanted is a man of high legal attainment, unquestioned honor, equable poise of mind and experience in court. Given these qualifications a judge will be worthy of the ermine, no matter what his politics aphay be; without them he cannot be a successful judge, we care not how high he may stand in the councils of politicians. The Region has every confidence in the governor, and believes that he will appoint such a man as we have designated.

For Mutual Benefit.

Minneapolis Journal: The Cannon Falls (Commercial club has issued a call for a meeting of the representatives of the various municipalities of Minnesota to form a state municipal league for mutual advantage and improvement. The idea is a good one, and we can see no reason why it should not bear good fruit. In view of the fact that the call suggests among other things, that the different cities and villages of the state work together for cheaper freight rates, not many of the delegates are likely to travel on passes, but that fact ought not to prevent the gathering of a goodly convention. The fact that Mr. Rosing, Democratic candidate for governor last fall, is gathering the movement, is pretty good proof that it will be pushed to a successful conclusion, if there is any public spirit in the municipalities that respond to the Cannon Falls appeal.

BEST KIND OF WHEAT.

"Minnesota 169" is the Result of Labors of Farm School Professor.

One of the most staple and useful products of the world is wheat. Each year there are 2,500,000,000 bushels of it produced in the world, and one-fifth of this enormous sum is produced in the United States alone. Moreover, Minnesota produced more wheat than any other state in the Union. Is it any wonder then that this state has a world-wide reputation for that one thing alone?

And in Minnesota it is that the very best kind of wheat in the world has been discovered and is most grown. This bread is what is known as "Minnesota 169," and it was discovered by Prof. Willis M. Hayes of the state agricultural school experimentation. Its kernels produce 25 per cent more wheat than any other kind of kernels and the product is better and bigger and heavier than the product of any other variety.

It is interesting to know how it came about that this sort of wheat, with such wonderful potentialities was discovered and what processes were used in order to find out what are the best things in nature. The method used by Prof. Hayes to learn about this wonderful kernel of wheat is still the process of selection. It is the method by which all the triumphs over the ordinary course of nature are brought about, and it really is nothing but an aid to nature in that constant struggle which results in the survival of the fittest.

Prof. Hayes went about the matter in this way:

He collected several of the best specimens of the best wheat he could find in the state. This bread is called the "Blue Stem." He planted these specimens by themselves and allowed each one of the 400 samples to grow by itself and about a foot away from all its neighbors. From this crop he selected all best plants and planted the seeds from each one separately the following year. He began in 1892. The second year he did the same thing, planting only the crops from the best plants and keeping them separate all the time. Each year as this process continued Prof. Hayes would find that one crop in particular exceeded all others in quality and quantity and in every way. So it finally developed that the professor had one particular crop that bore 25 per cent better than the original "Blue Stem" had borne.

The latter is the kind of wheat that was given the name "Minnesota 169" and it is through the results of this series of experiments that almost all the Minnesota farmers are now growing "Minnesota 169."

Calla-Lily Roots a Delicacy.

Florida farmers are raising Calla-lily roots in large quantities for table use. The plants grow readily in swamps and so thickly that the yield of a single flooded field is enormous. The roots look like an ordinary potato, only longer. They must be fried, washed or baked with satisfactory results. The idea is popular merely because it is new, but for real delicacy of flavor and lasting pleasure the average man will stick to golden-grain belt beer. Scientifically brewed, this beer is a splendid tonic, as well as a table delicacy. You will enjoy it in your home. Order of your nearest dealer or he supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage, dated the 15th day of December, 1900, made and executed by T. N. Brown, her husband, mortgagors, to R. F. Thompson, mortgagee, which mortgage bears date the 18th day of December, 1900, was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 18th day of January, 1901, at 8:00 o'clock h. m., in Book 79 of mortgages, on page 23, and is now recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, in Book "O" of mortgages, on page 201, to which said mortgage and the records thereof reference is hereby made for a more particular description of the premises therein mentioned, which said premises are described as follows, to-wit: East one-half (E½) of Northeast quarter (NE¼) and East one (1) acre of Southeast quarter (SE¼) of Southwest quarter (SW¼) of Section twenty-nine (29), Township one hundred forty-five (145), Range forty-two (42) West of the 5th P. M., and by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative, and no action at law or to equity having been instituted to recover said mortgage debt, or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale and pursuance to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said County of Red Lake, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls, in said County, on Saturday, the 11th day of April, 1903, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year thereafter, as provided by law.

Dated at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, February 25th, 1903.

New goods for the Surprise clothing store are arriving on every train, and people in need of goods in their line will find a choice selection at prices that are guaranteed as low as the lowest. Read the big announcement of this popular house on the front page of this paper.

C. F. Case, of Marshall, editor of the Lyon County Reporter, is the guest of his old friend, Ed L. Healy this week. Mr. Case is looking over the country with a view to investing in real estate and will probably return home with the deed to a Red Lake county farm in his pocket.

Noel Delorme and H. J. St. Marie have rented the Beaupaid building on the city hall corner and will in the near future put in a new and complete stock of staple and fancy groceries. Both the young men are energetic and capable and will no doubt enjoy a good trade from the start.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Garceau and children left on the N. P. last evening for Tacoma, Washington, where they go to make their future home. Mr. Garceau will engage in business in that city within the near future. The family has the best wishes of the community for success in their new home.

Rev. C. Nauman and family, of Washington, Ill., arrived in the city yesterday, and they will live on the big farm just west of town which Rev. Nauman purchased last year through the Healy agency. He is a brother of J. C. and S. C. Nauman and the family will receive a cordial welcome to Red Lake county.

T. E. Tenney came up from Ada Monday and took charge of the St. Hilaire Retail Lumber company's yard at this point, in place of Robert Raney, who will be given another situation. Mr. Tenney comes well recommended as a hustling young business man and will be a valuable to the social and business circles of Red Lake Falls.

Peter Vold was down from St. Hilaire on business. Mr. Vold has just returned from an extended trip to points in the western states but does not speak in glowing terms of the desirability of that part of the country as a place of residence. He traveled over much territory on the trip, but failed to see any section that compared with Minnesota.

The meeting of the Red Lake Falls grange this week was largely attended, and an instructive and interesting program rendered. Much business of interest to the farmers was transacted. Brothers Grenier, master of the Louisville grange, and Remi Fortier, director general for the Northwest, were visitors. The next meeting will be held on Wednesday, April 1.

George Hennings will return to this city about April 1st, and shortly after that date will take a position with the First State Bank as bookkeeper and stenographer. George has attended the Hess business college at St. Paul during the winter and his many friends here will be pleased to learn that he has secured as good a situation as the one which he returns to accept.

Crookston Times: Mrs. Thomas Sampson, mother of William Sampson, of this city, and her daughter, Mrs. Harry Collett, both of Minneapolis, accompanied by Mrs. William Sampson, returned Friday evening from Red Lake Falls. They were called there by the illness of Charles Sampson, a brother of William Sampson. The sick man is reported to be much improved.

Conductor Ingalls is temporarily in charge of the passenger train on this branch of the Great Northern, Conductor Lockman having been promoted to a run on the St. Vincent line. Both of the old conductors on the St. Vincent line have lately been relieved, one of them being Hank Murray, an old-time favorite with Red Lake Falls people. No reason for the dismissal is assigned.

The county commissioners will meet in special session at the auditor's office next Monday. The most important matters before the board will be the action on the Lambert-Garnes road petition, hearing on the petition for a new ditch in Reeksburg township and the consideration of the Phena ditch bonds. Other county business of minor importance will also be looked after at this meeting.

The trustees of the Presbyterian church have decided to build a brick basement under the church and put a 30-foot addition to the rear of the building. A portion of the basement will be fitted for a Sunday school room, and the remainder is intended to accommodate a heating plant. When completed the edifice will be one of the best in this section, and a credit to both the city and the congregation.

Crookston Times: S. M. Sivertson of Red Lake Falls came down last evening and spent the night in the city. He completed arrangements with Architect Strassburger for the plans and specifications for repairs on the Presbyterian church at that place. The church has been removed to a new site, a new basement built under the parlors, a study and Sunday school rooms. An addition will also be built to enlarge the audience room.

An exchange in southwestern Canada is responsible for the following: An Indian owed one of our merchants, and the other day he came in and paid him a receipt. In vain the merchant told him a receipt was unnecessary. "No must have to show me owes white man nothin'," said the Indian. "Me go to heaven, the Lord ask Injun he pay debts. Injun says yes. Lord ask Injun for his receipt. Wasp Injun do? Can't go all over hell to look for you." He got the receipt.

Mrs. Robert Raney was taken to the hospital Sunday last Saturday to undergo a surgical operation. It is expected that it will require at least three weeks to recover from the operation, but it is stated that comparatively little danger is apprehended. Mrs. Raney has endured a long siege of illness, and her many friends will hope for a speedy and permanent cure. [Letter—Reports today indicate that Mrs. Raney is getting along so nicely that it is thought an operation will not be necessary.]

Last week began the quadrennial weighing of mails as a basis for rates for payment of railroads for transporting them. On each run are appointed who weigh for thirty days all the pouches received at stations along the line on which he is employed, for which service it is said they receive $3 per day. The companies furnish mail cars, light and heat and receive a compensation for the amount carried as fixed by act of congress, the present tariff being a graduated scale of from $47.76 for every 200 pounds carried over the whole length of the route, up to $200 for 2,000 pounds.

Messrs and Mesdames Frank E. Hunt and James I. Wyer entertained about twenty couples of their friends at the home of the former Tuesday evening in honor of their guest, Mrs. Letebour. Progressive euchi furnished the amusement, the honors being won by August Reichel and Mrs. William Findeisen. The hooby prizes went to Prof. Whiteley and Mrs. J. W. Riordon. The decorations, refreshments and prizes were all symbolic of St. Patrick's day. The party was thoroughly enjoyable, and the hosts and hostesses were eminently successful in making their guests feel at home.

A dispatch from Park Rapids to a daily paper states that a well-planned elopement has recently come to light there. The dispatch says: "About a week ago Roy Petrie, son of Sheriff Petrie of this county, went to Sank Centre to attend school as he claimed. Wednesday morning Miss Hazel Johnson left home to attend the local school as usual. She did not return at noon, but nothing was thought of it, as she frequently went to dinner at school friends. When she did not return at night inquiry brought out the fact that she had taken the 6:28 a. m. train for Sank Centre, and it was later discovered that she and Petrie were man and wife."

J. H. Fortier has purchased the Shagnon grocery stock, and is moving the goods to his place of business this week. The stock invoices $2,200, and will pay about 80 per cent. of the claims against Mr. Shagnon. The failure was due entirely to inability to collect outstanding accounts. Mr. Shagnon has acted honorably and in good faith toward his creditors, and voluntarily turned over practically all of his property to them. As an evidence of his anxiety to do right, after the failure he paid to the relief of his deceased partner, Mrs. Benoit, every cent owing her on the purchase price of her interest in the business.

The Crookston Journal: As predicted in yesterday's Journal, the members of the surveying corps that will prepare the Thief River extension of the Great Northern for the work of the graders and tracklayers, arrived this morning and proceeded to the end of the line to make camp and prepare for the spring campaign. A large amount of supplies were taken along in addition to that sent up yesterday, and the crew will live on the top shelf while the work is in progress. The party numbered seven, and the work will be taken up at once. A report gained currency while the members of the party were in Crookston that the work would be continued beyond the limit set in yesterday's article, but this could not be confirmed. It is altogether likely that the road will be continued, however, to Bemidji, or a junction with a branch leading into that village.

Grant Van Sant was in the city Friday making arrangements to start the local office of the Johnson Van Sant Land company. Mr. VanSant is just back from a month's visit to Washington, New York and other eastern cities, and reports an enjoyable and profitable trip. While, according to Mr. VanSant, general financial matters are not looking well, the prospect for a large sale of Northwestern lands was never brighter, and this section of the country will not share the business depression in store for the eastern and middle states. Speculation and over-capitalization have caused adverse reaction, and the banks and other financial institutions are not loaning money as freely as they were a few months ago. There is little likelihood of a panic this year, but times are bound to be hard, and conservative people are preparing for it. However, the demand for cheap farm lands for actual settlers is as great as ever, and Mr. Van Sant expects this to be the banner year in the development of northern Minnesota and North Dakota.

THE TROUBLESOME LADY

BY PATIENCE STAPLETON.

COPYRIGHT 1895 BY J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

"Now sit down again, Mr. Reynolds," saying the chair up for her. Let us plan what to do. Where is your aunt now?"

"In Newcastle, Mo., my dear old home. She is my father's sister, and lives there all alone. She was out to visit me, but she and Henri quarreled; she is a great big woman and she slapped him—oh, I was so glad!" vindictively—"and he just went into fits about it, the insult to the family honor. She thought, though, because I was married I must make the best of things; she's a member of the orthodox church back there, and they are very particular. I thought you could take me to the railroad and lend me the money to pay my fare; he has all my money, you know, and never gives me any—for fear, I suppose, I would run away.

But Aunt Hannah will pay you; she's awfully honest, but she wants her due to the last farthing; that's the New England, you know."

She half smiled, and leaned back in the chair comfortably. The ridiculous big cross-bill sailing over the ten trials. Oliver thought it not unlikely Mrs. de Restand would take a nap too.

He went swiftly down the gulch to Mike and sent him for his horses and the buckboard. Mike looked out of the corner of his eye at the young woman he knew who had come to the vicinity in such a very youth, and he whistled softly to himself while he harnessed the mettle-some horses. He took a second look, and felt the first cold water of the world's criticism.

"Now, the nonce question need not bother you at all," he said, coming back to her side. "You see, I'm a well-to-do old bachelor, with no demands upon me. When you get to Maine you can send it back or not, just as you please. I owe you something for that supper, you know."

That supper! Mrs. de Restand trembled for fear of Henri? Wasn't it funny?"

"A case of buy and trade," he said with fun to put you wealth to use."

"You were not afraid a bit," she said, looking up with admiring eyes. "I have thought of you so much since that day, and what a protected one afraid of nothing and doing all sorts of brave acts."

Oliver had a very uncomfortable feeling that he was decidedly afraid this moment of what the world would say. He could even fancy Dr. John's cool Herculanean sneer, and his "Craig, haven't you had lessons enough in the past?" and "It's a dangerous path, old boy."

"You are very kind to think of me at all," he said, distantly. "Well, now, haven't you a hat?"

"No, nor a shawl. I'll be a queer-looking traveler."

"That Turkish dressing-gown of the doctor's—could that be used as an alstory?"

"It might, by a lunatic. Perhaps I could play that," she said, hopefully.

"Leave that for me, Mrs. Minny," laughed Oliver; "Dr. John will think after this, I need not play it. That cap of his—he don't look human in it, but you might try—"

"I have been looking at it. Does it do?" putting it coquettishly over her curls.

"Very becoming. You could be eccentric, you know, and prefer to make your own hats. I think that has a home made look. There, I believe he has a shawl. Dr. John is a regular old maid, hardly for use."

He brought her a thick gray shawl which he draped over her shoulders. It quite covered her, and she looked very well indeed.

"You look like a child in its big sister's clothes," Oliver said, abruptly leaving her. He was not made of iron, and she kept looking at him with happy, affectionate eyes. "Haven't you a shawl-pin?"

"How could I, when I had no shawl?" she laughed. "Do you think women are pincushions?"

He departed and rummaged around in his room, but returned in triumph with a diamond scarf-pin.

"Some woman gave me that atrocity, it will do well for the shawl."

"I am glad to take it away because a woman gave it to you. I hate to think of anybody else liking you. Is Dr. John a young man?"

"No, Mrs. Minny; he is an old chap, like me."

"' do not think you old," with a tender glance. "Besides, I'm twenty myself."

He put on his overcoat in silence and turned out the lamp. "Must the dog go?" he asked, resignedly.

"Of course. I would die without him."

Mike was waiting with the horses. "Where will I be affther tellin' the doctor ye've gone, sor?" he asked, calmly, as if a midnight elopement was not unusual.

"Tell him," said Oliver, thoughtfully, "that Mrs. de Restand came to me for assistance to get to the railroad, and I took her there; there was nothing else to do. He must say nothing if De Restand comes, and keep him from finding out, if possible, that I helped his wife. I trust to your Irish wit, Mike, to send him away from the cabin in the dark. If I am missed I will be back here by noon to-morrow."

"The greaser livin' forenimst the the horses' heads and they started down the road at a gallop.

The night was warm and pleasant; the chinook blew from far sun-warmed plains, and myriads of stars pierced the darkness. The road was fairly good, though seldom traveled, and lay mostly on an incline towards the plains. It took all Oliver's strength to hold the horses, shut in for a day or two and headed for Denver, where they keenly remembered the comforts of oats and a city stable. Mrs. de Restaud, as the buckboard swung around often touched him; she caught his arm once with a little cry as they plunged into a hollow; but he talked distantly of her journey, restraining any affectionate confidences on her part with reference to the absent Aunt Hannah.

She would go to Colorado Springs; the train passed through there; she had a friend—a poor woman—who their washerwoman when she and Jeanne lived there that winter and this washerwoman was really a nice lady, who could buy her some proper clothes.

"But the money!" she cried, in dismay. "Have you got any with you?"

They were going up a hill, the horses panting heavily. Oliver took a roll of bills and put them in her hand. As his eyes met hers, every nerve in his frame thrilled.

"This seems a great deal," she said, timidly. "Perhaps Aunt Hannah would not like to pay so much."

"You need not spend it all, Mrs. Minny, then; and, besides, the bills are small; that's what makes them seem so many. Now please put them carefully in your pocket, and don't let the dog chew them."

She laughed merrily: "Of course not, you goose! Oh, this ride is lovely! I never saw horses go so fast. Even if he should follow us you could not hit him take me." She clung to his arm but he freed himself, gently.

"I have to drive, you know," he said, coolly. He meant to do or say nothing that the whole world should not know, but it was very hard to be distant, she seemed such a child. He felt she coveted away from him at his words, hurt and frightened, but he forced himself to be silent. At last she said, timidly:

"I know you hate me, and I seem to realize it at once you are almost r stranger; and I have asked of you more than one should even require of an old, old friend."

"Please, Mrs. Minny, don't. I am silent because I am thinking of your journey. if we should miss the train, if the week-overrun should be dead or moved—for washerwomen are migratory—if even Aunt Hannah should fail you."

"But the town will be there, and Mr. Perkins, the postmaster, is a neighbor—his wife takes care of Aunt Hannah's cat and parrot when she goes visiting."

"That, of course, alters things."

"The only thing I fear from Aunt Hannah," she said, dubiously, "is a long moral lecture about the duties of married women and their having chosen a path—she says parth; they do down there—and ought to walk in it. She wouldn't let me run away with her."

"Show her your bruises," Oliver said, bitterly.

"I will; for she told me if he struck me I could come to her, and sometimes, honestly, Mr. Oliver, I used to tease him so he would and I might have my chance."

Oliver whistled softly under his breath; he would not have lived Dr. John to hear that last speech. "You must not tell her," he said, quickly, "about this ride and coming to my house."

"Why not? I would like her to know how good you were."

There was no need, but he shaken his horses angrily; then he said, curtly: "I am sorry you cannot understand. Could you explain it satisfactorily to Mr. de Restaud?"

"How cross you are! and I know you look just as you did when I talked mean about him—a sort of disgusted impatience. But he is not a reasonable being. Other people may be."

"Would you have gone to those amiable friends of his for assistance to get to the railroad?"

"Of course not. You know that."

"Well, how is the world to know I am any better?"

"I suppose being a lawyer makes you so smart," she said, in a melancholy tone; she assured her dog in a whisper he was the only being who loved her, her only friend; that she was silly and frivolous, Aunt Hannah said, and seemed to be a great trouble to more strangers of good dispositions. Oliver said never a word; a little smile curved his lips, but he did not turn his head. Soon she grew quiet, and her head dropped against his shoulder, the soft wind lifting her curls to blow across his cheek. The dog, ornamented with the doctor's cap, slept in her lap.

Across the level land before them crept the gray glimmer of the dawn. Rose-colored light flamed in the far east, reflecting on the new snow on distant mountain-peaks. Prairie dogs hopped out of their holes and sat on their hind legs discussing local politics and happenings, the hill to obelisk free rents for rattlesnakes, and the excursions of horned owls. The Skye terrier disgustedly flung off the doctor's cap and barked angrily at the small dogs. Mrs. de Restaud lifted her head with a little start, blushed and clapped the Skye terrier.

"Do be quiet, Sigre. I am afraid I tired you, Mr. Oliver."

He would have liked to say a sweet thing to her—to assure her he would not—but his role now was that of benevolent friend; so he only answered vaguely: "Not at all," as if he did not know to what she referred. The horses dragged themselves wearily forward; it was six o'clock, and they had come fifty miles over a difficult road in less than seven hours. Two parallel lines of iron stretched far in the distance; the blustery outline of a water-tank loomed up just ahead. The goal was reached, and away in the north a ribbon of smoke outlined on the sky proclaimed the coming train. Oliver lifted Mrs. de Restaud down. Skye rushed down to the hole of a westernmost prairie dog who had taken up a residence near the tank and was out enjoying the morning air. The terrier found only a vanishing, and vented his annoyance at this and all the other vagrant dogs in shrill barks. His mistress was easily amused; the strangeness of her undertaking had quite gone out of her head.

Oliver, in some concern, gave her advice regarding her journey; he was ignorant of its business about the train, and had to stand by their heads; so Mrs. Minny frisked about with her dog, entirely confident her difficulties were over.

"You must send me word to Denver when you get to Maine," he said, "and be sure and make no acquaintances on the cars."

"One would think I was just out of boarding-school."

"The primary department," he said, gravely. "I wish you would be reasonable and listen a moment. I will let the conductor and the one on a camping-party and your mother will at Colorado Springs—that you had to leave in such a hurry to catch the train you had no time to get ready. If I must tell wrong stories for you, Mrs. Minny, please don't make me act a lie in the first thing."

"How good you are!" she said, softly. "I shall never, never forget what you have done for me. I shall say to myself: 'Ginny' you may be frivolous—Aunt Hannah says so unstables as water—but one big, handsome man is your friend and always will be.'"

"Always, Mrs. Minny, to the end of my life."

The rush of the near train terrified the horses almost beyond control, and he was obliged to send her for the conductor when the train stopped for water. The obliging official showed no surprise at Oliver's ingenious story; he was used to camping parties. He imparted the welcome news that the stateroom was vacant—one could have that—and accepted two fine cigars.

"My daughter is unused to traveling alone," Oliver said, gravely: "so will you telegraph for a carriage to meet her in the Springs, and see that she gets out at the right place?"

The conductor would be very happy to oblige. Then the young lady asked modestly if a dog, a very little one, might also ride in the stateroom.

"He might," said the official, "if hidden under a shawl, for, if this precaution is not taken, on the next trip all the women in the train will be bringing along their dogs. And I guess it's time to get aboard."

"Good-by," said Oliver, holding out his hand.

Mrs. Minny picked up her dog; with it under one arm, she took Oliver's hand, reached up, and shamelessly kissed him, a ghost of a kiss touching his cheek.

"Good-by, papa," she called, running to the car, and from the step waved and blew kisses as the train vanished in the distance.

Oliver, as he drove along the road by the track in search of the Mexican who had the good horse, was almost dazed. He could not forget that farewell. He was haunted by the presence of the little lady of the Troublesome. He had not returned the kiss—well, there was no time—but how thoughtless in front of the train! and was there ever another woman like her? He had never seen one. Trying as she was all that long way, could any man have placed the head of honest friend before "God even Dr. John," said Oliver.

CONCLUSION.

M. De Restand looked up from his cards as the chill gray of dawn stole in at the window.

"Heavens!" he muttered, "what a night I've had!"

He pushed the chips away, for he had been a lucky loser, and stagnered to his feet. He flung the banker at the game a roll of banc notes and fumbled in his pockets for gold. The villainous faces of his four companions looked shiftier and more sinister after the long hours. His own head was aching, his mouth dry and parched. He leaned out the window, drinking in the fresh chill as he lay voter. The room behind him was foul with cigar-smoke and the smell of dregs of liquor in many glasses.

"Go to bed," he said, wearilcdly; "you know your rooms. I've played enough, and you're all winners; you ought to be content."

One man muttered about giving him

n chance, but De Restand shook his head impatiently, and they all went away.

"It was ugly to the little girl last night," De Restaud said, half aloud. "What did I do? Did I can't remember her. I wish she would keep away from me when I'm not myself. She has no more sense about some things than a child. I'll go see her."

He tried her door; no sound. not even the angry bark of her inseparable companion.

"I wonder if I killed the dog when I kicked it. I hope I had, but she'd never forgive me. She riding down the road to see that fellow—thinks of him all the time. I know in my heart she's as innocent as a child about it, just out of school when I married her, but he will think she's like other women and take her nonsense in earnest. A man of the world, evidently. He had better keep out of my way. Those horrid Americans—he has a fist like a blacksmith."

He went muttering down the corridor to his own room, and flung himself, still dressed, on his bed. The house was silent for hours. Annette in the kitchen, the Mexican in the corral, Jeanne in her own room, no sound was so dreadful if awakened. Louis carrying the horses in the corral scarce spoke above a whisper, but tac-tinuity had become a habit with him. The poultry, however, clucked merrily over their nests; the rabbit gave his views, and the hens, women-like, cackled well, too, while the ducks enjoyed the bonanza of deep mud and pools after the rain. The cows, loath to go to the fields, stood near the house for Annette, round-faced, bendy-eyed, neat as a pin, stood in the door, her hands on her hips. She looked with pride on her house—how well the plump darlings repaid her care—then she glanced across at her husband, ten years his junior—the handsome man who had spent her dowry and told her so charming tales, married her for that reason, and who had brought her to this wild country. She smiled to herself in satisfaction; in this wilderness no girl could take him away. Those Paris girls were such pretches, brazen things. The ranchers' daughters here, however, were well behaved—no matter what eyes Louis made, they would have none of him. The young girls of the mountains were brave and good. How they must suffer, though! for Louis was so fascinating.

"Louis," she called, softly, stepping out on the plank walk, "madame is not yet awake, nor the little dog. It is a strange silence for there are no ar usually out so early. You climb up on the roof of the corral and look in her window. She never would open her door to us."

The man hurriedly obeyed. He had been thinking all the morning something was wrong. If she were dead—monsieur was wilder than common last night, and so hasty; he had been gambling and losing all day. The door must be dead; he hated Louis, and generally made his appearance at the window early to hark at him. Louis stood up on one of the seats of the wagon, crouched and looked in the open window. Annette watched him, shading her eyes with her hand.

"She is there, Louis?"

He shook his head and dropped to the ground at her feet. "No; she is gone." The bed hasn't been slept in."

"Heavens!" cried Annette, wringing her hands. "Monsieur will be terrible."

"He ought to kill her, the little cat. You need not pity her; she makes game of you always because you cannot comprehend her English tongue. I must wake monsieur."

Followed by Annette, who prayed in a whisper, he knocked at monsieur's door. No answer. Then he went in and shook the sleeper gently.

"Monsieur," he said, tremulously, as De Restaud started up dazed and haggard-eyed, "I hate to tell you, but I must; madame is gone."

"Gone!" cried the other, leaping to his feet. "She would not dare. Get my coat. Good Heavens! Who would take her in? Ah, I know. I was not too wrong all the time. It is a cursed thing. Break in her door, Louis; I have no strength."

The man burst the door open with one powerful thrust, and they entered. The room was tumbled, an impress of a head, and there was a dog's head indented, still damp from tears. A little round depression at the foot of the bed showed where the dog had lain. De Restaud looked in her wardrobe. He knew she wore three yellow silk; she perished in that since the stranger had been there. Her every-day dress was still in place—an untidy one at that. She had worn her little bronze slippers. And here, close to the bed, were her veil and all her hats and wraps. She had no money, he was sure of that. Did not Hannah Patten tell him she had refused to give Ginny money, for fear the child might run away and get into trouble? He hated Hannah Patten, but he knew he could trust her. There was one man who would dare aid her—that stranger, with his cool gray eyes and contemptuous glances. It was all the sense Minny had, to go to this entire stranger for help; and he would help her; was she not young and pretty and a fool? De Restaud was very white now, and oddly cool. He went to his room for his pistols. His friends, awakened by Louis, were looking at the loading of theirs. Annette had hurriedly prepared coffee which the men drank standing up. Louis brought the horses around.

"Shall I come, monsieur?" he asked, eagerly.

"No; you would be needed if I did not return. You will tell the general, if my assistance is true, I shall ask that man or he billed myself. But I will be sure and all of you wait until I tell you to act. I intend to make no mistakes."

The five men galloped down the road in a haze of golden dust. It was eleven o'clock, and Nme. de Restaud had been gone as many hours. She had a long start in her way, and they might ride far and fast to find her. Dr. John, in his flowered dressing-gown, but without his embroidered cap, which had mysteriously disappeared, sat before the closed door of the log cabin. He was smoking peacefully, and seemed to regard the fire strangely-acting men in the road as a pleasing part of the landscape. De Restaud, leaving his companions some little distance away, rode close to the cabin.

"Mr. Oliver is, of course, within?" he said, politely.

The doctor looked up at the pallid face with its blazing eyes, the workings of the clinched hand, the rigid, fateful controlled passion of the man, and answered, calmly, withdrawing his pipe: "Of course."

"He is alone?"

"I think so. His man is cleaning the guns back of the house."

"Mr. Oliver is sleep very late," hissed the Frenchman, forgetting his English in his wrath and muttering something in his own language.

"He do," said the doctor, ingratiatingly, with a twinkle in his eye.

"I must ask you, sir, to wake your friend. I have business with him."

"And I must answer, sir, I am very sorry, but I know his temper, and I do not care to wake my friend. He is not, as your nation say, tres aimable when awakened from slumber."

"I do not come here to quarrel with you," cried the Frenchman, "but with him."

"It would require two to quarrel, Mr. de Restaud, and I am a peaceable man. Therefore I may say I do not wake Mr. Oliver for business."

"It is my belief, old man, you are lying. Oliver is not in your house."

"It is his house; fot us at least be correct. Suppose you question his man; he may be willing to wake Mr. Oliver. You may settle your business with him. 'Mike, 'Mike, I say.'"

As the big fellow came around the house, grinning sheepishly, the doctor picked up his book.

"Here, or, as your nation say, voici le hired man. He is yours, monsieur. With your pardon, I will resume my chapter."

He received no answer. De Restaud, seeing Mike had a fine rifle in his hand, went back to the waiting men, and they had a conference which ended in all riding closer to the house.

"Go tell your monchmare sl.e." Lunney. "There is my coffee at last. desires to see him," said De Restaud, angrily. "If I will endure no impudence. Do as I tell you."

"I'm sorry, sor," said Mike, humbly, "shood I am, for I'd loike to oblige yees, but him an' me set up till late last night waitin' for the doctor, who'd gone doctorin', an' I was ordered to tilt whether Oliver have his shpoy. The doctor's the only man as ivver I see as could go without shape an' appear the broader for it."

"Don't lie to me. Stand a-way. I'll find out if he's in the house. We'll break in the door and search it."

"He might think yes robbers and shoot," said the doctor, calmly. "Besides, you are not treating him fairly. Why go you wish to search the house?"

"Because," cried De Restaud, hoarsely, "my wife is gone—and he is the only one who would dare to help her in this country."

"Your pardon, monsieur. Of course you are naturally upset, but Mr. Oliver has only met the lady once; is it not making a story out of nothing?"

"I know how," hissed De Restaud, "and, if he is your friend, he is a blackguard as he is. I know, the only one about here who would offer to aid her."

"Not the only one," said the little doctor, rising. "I should have been there very soon to have helped the lady, only some from your corps; any true man would have been. You are ruling the settlers here very low, monsieur. Unfortunately, all we hear of you does not point to your making either a happy or a safe home for a good woman. But we protect women if we are not at all afraid; the ranchmen here are friendly to me. Now, if you desire, dismount, and I myself will show you through the house."

"Humph! you've changed all of a sudden," grunted one of the men.

"I have always held," said the doctor, pleasantly, "that a man who could not change an opinion was a bigot. Obstinacy is often ignorance. Your errand here by such a serious one has quite convinced me that it is not only right but my duty to wake Mr. Oliver."

In his heart the doctor was thinking: That certainly was Craig I heard in the house; he has got back, and must have heard what I said. His window is open."

"I shall wake Mr. Oliver, then," he said, loudly, as they dismounted and went into the house, "but I shall not be responsible for his profanity. You open your door, please."

The doctor rapped, but his heart stood still. If Oliver should not be there! The bolt shot back, and the man, half dressed, with bloodshot eyes, disordered hair, and a flood tide of rage, appeared in the doorway.

"What in ——— is all the row?" he said, angrily. "You must keep me up all night and wake me in an unearthly hour in the morning. What do they want?"

Mr. de Restaud's wife is missing. They desire to search your house. Here, gentlemen, is a sample—a trunk and one chair. The lady is not here. Shall we keep on?"

Craig lay back on the bed and drew his traveling-rug over him.

"They have my permission," he said, sleepily. "There's a cellar underneath, and one small barn. Look well under the hay. So your wife has gone, Mr. De Restaud? Perhaps her only relative has had feeling enough to save the poor little thing and has taken her from your questionable care. I fancy you would not care to have that locked into too closely; and if I were you speaking now as a lawyer, I would not advertise this affair too widely. Your wife might, you know, be persuaded to come back."

The doctor, fearing the consequences, shut the door hastily and led his visitors away. They searched the premises closely, but, not knowing of the hatchboard, did not miss it, and de Mexican's good little beast, a lather of foam, was hidden in a grove of pines a quarter of a mile away.

Shortly after his guests had mounted their horses in sulky silence and galloped away, Oliver, newly shaven and carefully dressed, came out in the sunlight. He was ghastly pale, and stargered as he walked.

"I've had MIke make me some coffee," he said, sinking in a chair. "God, I'm played out. I wasn't three hours sonnig back; and I'm a heavy man for the horse. I'd like to own him. I can't sleep; too tired, I suppose. Besides, I was a little scared. Where has our friend?"

"Gone," said the doctor, laconically. "And now, Craig, as questions are in order, where is the Troublesome lady?"

"On her way to Maine, I hope."

"If you are not honest in the matter that man will kill you."

"I have lived long enough on the frontier, too, to know that threatened men live long—are safe. I did help Mrs. de Restaud escape; you'd have done the same. She came with pretty purple marks on her throat, in a piteous state of terror. She is as innocent as a child, utterly ignorant of the world. Only such a woman would have stayed here so long. Any nachman here with daughters of his own would have helped her. They know what he is, and they are chivalrous men. She came to me because—because—"

"Craig, it's the old story. I don't doubt you're in the right this time—I'd have helped her too—but you had to say sweet things and make love to her. You needn't shake your head; you can't lie to me."

"On my honor, Dr. John, all that long way I thought of her as of my little sister sleeping in the silo at the graveyard of the village I left twenty years ago. The man who remembers a child sister would have thought only of her, of the days when, with little Minny. She has your embroidered cap, old chap, and you will treasure it as a relic of lovely woman if ever she returns the loan."

"But you're not a married man, Craig," said the doctor, plaintively, "and women can be surprising, especially little ones with red hair as Mike says she's got. There must be something in the Frenchman's side."

"Lunney. There is my coffee at last. We'll go for ch tomorrow instead of to-day; I hear there are some on Sixty's peak."

"But, Craig," said the doctor, as the other stretched out his tall length and walked wearily to the house, "there's the Mexican who will bring back your mare and whose home you had to might tell."

"I have bought him at a good price," said Oliver, carelessly. "Still, if he does tell, if the Frenchman pays more, why then the Frenchman and I will settle it. I've come to put to sleep to-day or a half century hence, what matter is? I like life, but I am not shirking death."

CHAPTER IV.

"If I ever become poor and friendless, and should be walking along the highway, and you should see me one night and the smell of fried onions were wafted towards me, I should become a criminal. I would steal," said Doctor John, firmly, "so that I also might have them."

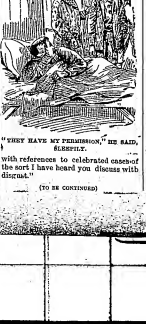
"Rather a lowly taste," said Oliver, lazily. They had risen to the top of Sisty's peak for elk all that day, but found no sign of one, only a young antelope, the chops of which, with the kidneys, Mike was cooking for supper.

The doctor, radiant in his flowered dressing-gown, and Oliver, clean and beautifully-embroidered cap, stirred the tobacco in his pipe and looked more fortably back in his chair.

"Your appetite is curious, Craig. I know you better. Here in this desolate region, miles away from womenkind, you positively revel in food."

"Womenkind?" Oliver asked, vaguely.

"The vegetable, fortunately. Your thirst for tobacco, your senseless haste to return to Denver, your restlessness, are bad signs. Ere entered our paradise, and back we go to civilization to-morrow, because we expect a letter from her. I shall prescribe for your case a dose of moral reflections.



"THEY HAVE MY PERMISSION," HE SAID, SLEEPILY.

with references to celebrated cases of the sort I have heard you discuss with disgust."

A Cure for Croup.

"I have never found a remedy for croup equal to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," writes a Wisconsin woman, "and I have used many different kinds, for my children are subject to severe attacks of this disease. It gives immediate relief, always cures and I have no hesitation in saying it is the most matchless remedy for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and all diseases of the lungs and throat diseases. Guaranteed to relieve. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by all druggists.

Comets Have Little Weight.

Sir John Herschell estimates that the very largest comets, with tails often millions of miles in length, do not weigh more than a few ounces.

Adjusting Glass Globes.

In fitting on globes it is a common error to screw them on to the gas fixture as tightly as possible. This is a grave error, for if the globe has not room to expand it will surely break when the gas is lighted and the glass becomes hot. These mysterious breakages are due to too tight screws.

Mrs. J. A. Arries, Portage, Wis., writes: I have used Dr. Wade's Scarlatina for years. I have never found any soap equal it for curing eruptions of the scalp and for keeping it soft and smooth. It is most desirable and refreshing for the nursery and the toilet." Cole's Carbolized Salve always pleases. Sold by all druggists.

Wedding Gifts in Turkestan.

In Turkestan every wedding engagement begins with a present to the substantial consideration to the girl's parents. If the girl jilts her lover the engagement gift has to be returned unless the parents have another daughter to give as a substitute.

Japan Exporting Coal.

The export of coal is becoming very important in Japan, amounting in value as it did in 1900 to 10,241,742. A large proportion of that has been sent to China, with Hongkong second and the remainder to other countries in the eastern seas.

More Riots.

Disturbances of strikers are not nearly as grave as an individual disorder of the system. Overwork, loss of sleep, nervous tension will be followed by utter collapse unless a reliable remedy is immediately employed. There's nothing so efficient for sore disorders of the liver or kidneys as Electric Bitters. It's a wonderful blood purifier, acts directly and gives the greatest all around medicine for run down systems. It dispels nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia and expels malaria germs. 50c. and $1.00 at satisfaction guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

A Young Biblical Student.

One day my little brother Willard was asked how many apostles there were and he replied, "Eleven." On being corrected, he said: "No, there wasn't twelve, 'cause Judas resigned." —Little Gazette.

Statue of Sheridan Completed.

Augustus St. Gaudens has completed his equestrian statue of Gen. Phil Sheridan at West Lebanon, N. H. It is ready for shipment to New York, where it will be erected.

Tragedy Averted.

"Just in the nick of time our little boy was saved," writes Mrs. W. Watkins, of Pleasant City, Ohio. "Pneumonia had played havoc with him and a terrible cough set in hopeless. Doctors treated him, but he grew worse every day. At length we tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and our darling was saved. He's now sound and well." Everybody ought to know it's the only sure cure for coughs, colds and all lung diseases. Guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggist. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

Legal Blanks.

THE COURIER job department is printing a complete line of the standard forms to legal blanks, and has now in stock the following:

Warranty deeds,
Contract for deed,
Mortgage deed,
Quit-claim deed,
Tenement lease,
Chattel mortgage,
Chattel mortgage, (crop clause),
Satisfaction of real estate mortgage,
Farm contract, (on shares),
Chattel mortgage foreclosure sale,
Garnishee summons, (with notice to defendant),
Bill of sale,
Transcript of judgment,
Justice summons,
Certificate of judgment,
Notice of protest,
Notes, receipts, etc.

Any form not in stock will be printed to order, provided a reasonable number are taken.

A Remarkable Case.

One of the most remarkable cases of a cold, deep-seated on the lungs, causing pneumonia, is that of Mrs. Gertrude E. Fenner, Marion, Ind., who was entirely cured by the use of One Minute Cough Cure. She says: "The coughing and straining so weakened me that I run down in weight from 127 to 97 pounds. I tried a number of remedies to no avail, until I used One Minute Cough Cure. Four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me entirely of the cough, strengthened my lungs and restored me to my normal weight, health and strength."

Last Shakespeare Descendant.

A memorial window commemorative of Shakespeare's granddaughter, Elizabeth Barnard, wife of Rev. John Barnard, has recently been placed in the church at Abingdon, Berkshire, where she was buried. She was the last direct descendant of the poet. Her death occurred in 1669.

Possibility of Error.

On one occasion Voltaire spoke highly of Haller and then was told he was very magnolimous to do so, as Haller had spoken in quite the contrary way of him. "Perhaps," replied Voltaire, "we are both mistaken, and after a pause, "perhaps, we are both mistaken."

It Saved His Leg.

P. A. Dunbeth of Cumberland, Ga., suffered for six months with a frightful running sore on his leg; but writes that Bucklen's Arnica Salve wholly cured it in five days. For Boils, Burns, Wounds, piles, it's the best salve in the world. Cure guaranteed. Only 25c. Sold by W. A. Schreiter druggist.

Only the Edible Kind.

Statisticians assert that the lobster will soon be as extinct as the dodo. Species of lobster not stated. The dry land variety (known as the chilblains) will never die out while chorus girls continue to make 400-foot eyes at the stay door at the forward rows. —The Gentleman's Magazine.

What's in a Name?

Everything is in the name when it comes to Witch Hazel Salve. E. C. DeWitt & Co., of Chicago, discovered, some years ago, how to make a salve from Witch Hazel that is a specific for Piles. For blind, bleeding, itching and protruding piles, eczema, cuts, burns, bruises and all skin diseases, DeWitt's Salve has no equal. This salve gives rise to numerous worthless counterfeits. Ask for DeWitt's—the genuine. A. L. Reichert.

Consistent Better Than Style.

A man went into a men's furnishing store in Grand Haven recently to buy a shirt, and the clerk inquired if he wanted one with or without a collar. "Give me the kind without a collar," the purchaser said, "the collar business is played out for a good while when I go to bed."—Grand Rapids Press.

The Stomach is the Man.

A weak stomach weakens the man, because it cannot transform the food it eats into nourishment. Health and strength cannot be restored to any man or weak woman without first restoring health and strength to the stomach. A weak stomach cannot digest enough food to feed the tissues and revive the tired and run down limbs and organs of the body. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure cleanses, purifies, sweetens and strengthens the stomach and other organs of the stomach, and cures indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. A. L. Reichert.

Switzerland's Liberal School System.

The public schools in Switzerland are operated by the government, and every person who can afford it attends. The teachers, who are mostly women, are very well paid and never discharged except for cause. When they get so old they can't teach they are pensioned liberally. The result is that the country has an excellent corps of educators.

Newest Fad in France.

France seems to be the center of the pictorial postcard fad. It is estimated that 88,000,000 are handled by the postal service of that country annually.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address: F. J. GOOD SEEDS.

Farmers Are Paying Particular Attention to What They Plant.

We are glad to learn that the farmers of this section are casting especial attention this year to the matter of planting only reliable and tested seeds. A great many of them are sending for the catalogue of Northrup, King & Co's. The reliable Minneapolis seedmen, which is sent free to all who send a postal card requesting it. These seeds are sold in the local stores generally in the northwest and a catalogue is handy and will save much needless information. The advertisement in this paper gives the address.

Life

Renewed. Left Side Badly Affected. Liable to Paralytic Stroke.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Gave Me New Life.

"This is to certify that I have used Dr. Miles' Remedies quite extensively, especially the Restorative Nervine, which I have given wonders for me. Six years ago I had nervous prostration and again three years ago, at which time I began taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. I kept taking it for six months and have taken no medicine since during the last two years. I am practically a new man and feel that I have been given a new lease of life. I used to have very bad attacks of stomach trouble, but since using Nervine have not been troubled in this way with impunity. I am now living in Omaha in a hotel German doctor three years ago. He told me I was liable to a paralytic stroke any moment, that my whole left side was badly affected. That was just before I began taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. My work for two years and a half has been very trying on my nerves. I am a presiding elder, traveling my district at the rate of ten thousand miles a year, preaching on an average of four times a week, besides attending meetings, and I am well pleased to say that the Nervine has done me more good than all the medicines I have ever taken." HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The high school boys spend their spare moments in playing basket ball. But this often takes the form of foot ball.

Last Friday occurred the election of officers of the high school organization, resulting as follows: Clara Allison, president; Ralph Healy, vice president; Jessie Luxenburger, secretary. Society spirit ran higher than ever and everybody was electioneering for their favorite candidates.

One of the high school girls was heard to say that "there is not as much wear and tear on a girl's mind as on a boy's." Probably not; they change it oftener.

The high school had more visitors this week than ever before in the same period. Among the visitors were Misses Rachel Taylor, Katie Berthiaume and Anna Sutter and A. M. Dunton.

The Athenians had a debate last Wednesday after school on the subject "Who is president of the Athenian society?"

The debate on the subject, "Resolved, That Canada Should be Annexed To The United States," will occur next Friday.

Some of the high school boys are planning on skating to Terrebonne—a distance of forty miles by river—next Sunday.

We entreat the high school pupils to do something extraordinary next week so we can write high school items about it.

The chemistry class was given a test last Wednesday.

WYANDOTTE.

News is scarce this week.

More surprise parties. Look out!

John Holten went to Park River last week.

Anton Lee was at St. Hilaire one day last week.

Miss Clara Berg made a short visit at Grand Forks last week.

The party at Halvorsen's was well attended and everyone had a good time.

The Misses Bertha Steen, Katie Johnson and Mary Domberg left for Grand Forks last Friday.

GARNES.

Snow is going rather slowly, but better slowly than not at all.

Ole Svenson and wife went to McIntosh Saturday, returning Tuesday.

S. R. Walbaug has returned from the lumber camp where he has been working for the past two months.

A dance was given by the Woodmen Tuesday evening, and a good time is reported.

E. K. Gjernes, the Garnes merchant, is busy nowadays hauling lumber and rock for an addition to his store.

E. K. Gjernes' store is now located on the south side of Main street, and O. H. Olson, his clerk, is busy handing out goods.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

How Can I Keep Up with the Times?

IT is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says:
"I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND says:
"I consider it a very valuable addition to my library."

THORPE BROS. GET THE DITCH BONDS

$81,000 Worth of Bonds Sold at 5 Per Cent., With a Premuim of $810.

At a special meeting held the fore part of the week the board of county commissioners sold $81,000 worth of ditch bonds to Thorpe Bros., the Minneapolis investment brokers. The bonds run for a period of ten years and draw 5 per cent. interest. A premuim of one per cent was paid, so the net proceeds to the county will be $81,810.

The board also ordered the construction of two new ditches—Garnes No. 1 and Garnes and Lambert No. 1. Both are short ditches, the former being two miles long and the latter three. The petition of a large number of farmers for another ditch in Rocksburg was granted. The taxpayers will, however, severely criticize the action of the board in appointing George A. Ralph as engineer for these ditches. County Surveyor Smiley, who was an applicant for the position, is not only as competent an engineer as Ralph, but moreover, is believed to be honest and trustworthy, and it would seem that a home man ought to be favored. The vote was 3 to 2—Sutor, Demann and Falardeau voting for Ralph. Mr. Falardeau's vote was given in pursuance of a promise made under misapprehension, and it is stated that Ralph has received his last "endorsement" at the hands of the present board.

A hearing was had on the Lambert-Garnes road petition, and the road was ordered established. It begins at the south west corner of 36, Lambert, running north to the northeast corner of 29, Garnes.

The bond of H. W. Lee as court commissioner, in the penal sum of $2,000, was approved.

Auctioneers' licenses were granted to H. M. Hicks and Joseph Laframboise.

SALE OF RED LAKE LANDS.

Government Takes Cognizance of Major Scott's "Roar."

A special to the Sunday papers says that Commissioner of Indian affairs Jones had a conference with President Roosevelt Saturday regarding the sale of the Red Lake Indian lands in Minnesota and the reported declaration of Agent Scott, of the Leech Lake reservation, which includes the Red Lake, that he will advise the Indians not to accept the the amended term of the treaty made with them by the government. Senator Nelson has asked for Scott's report.

The original treaty called for the sale of 256,000 acres of the Red Lake lands at a flat price of $3.00 per acre, but the law as finally passed provides for the sale of the lands at public auction at not less than $4 per acre and about 14,000 acres are reserved to the state for school purposes, for which the Indians will receive no compensation. The agent, it is said, objects to the passing of twenty two sections of land to the state without any compensation to the Indians and to some other features of the law.

ANDREW GRINDELAND IS NAMED FOR JUDGE

The Warren Attorney and Politian Wins Out Over a Field of Eight.

Andrew Grindeland, of Warren, is the new member of the bench in the fourteenth district.

Governor Van Sant on Tuesday signed the bill creating the new judgeship, and immediately announced the appointment, thus relieving him of a tremendous pressure.

The new judge will serve until after the next general election, when an election will be held for the six-year term. His salary is $5,000 a year, the same as his colleague, Judge Watts, of Crookston.

Judge Grindeland is a native of Iowa and was graduated at the University of Iowa law school. He is 44 years old and has served as judge of probate of Marshall county. He was a member of the last state senate, where he stood high as a hard-working member and a man of strict integrity. He was a candidate for congress in the ninth district last fall, and at the primaries came a close second to the winner, Halvor Steenerson.

Marshall A. Spooner, of Bemidji, is the new judge for the fifteenth district.

Found Dead in His Home.

Adelard Boileau, a Gentilly widower, was found dead in his bed Monday morning. He lived alone on his farm and had been dead several days when discovered. Mr. Boileau has relatives in Red Lake Falls. The funeral was held yesterday from the Gentilly church.

FRED. RUX INDICTED FOR MANSLAUGHTER

Well-Known Sanders Farmer Alleged to be Responsible for Death of His Wife.

This morning the grand jury returned an indictment against Frederick Rux for manslaughter in the second degree.

Mr. Rux is a wealthy farmer of Sanders township, and it is alleged that in April, 1902, his wife died in confinement as a result of criminal carelessness on the part of her husband, who refused to call a physician or assistance. Mr. Rux is 60 years of age, and has heretofore borne a good name among his neighbors and acquaintances.

Chas. E. Boughton has been retained as counsel for the defense, and it is expected the trial will be commenced Monday.

Playing for Notoriety.

Crookston Times: The remarkable convulsion which Major Scott of the Leech Lake Indian agency is throwing with regard to the opening of the ceded towns of the Red Lake reservation makes us suspect that the Major is playing for notoriety. He declares that the poor Indian will not average $4 per acre for his lands. The lands of these townships are among the finest in the valley and if they will not bring $4 an acre it must be that farm lands are no longer in demand in this country. The rush for these farm lands, already begun, notwithstanding the fact that they may not be opened for a year, shows that the bidding will be keen and that the average price for which they will be sold will be greatly in excess of $4 per acre.

WATER POWER POSSIBILITIES.

Government Engineers Making a Survey of Our Rivers.

The prospects of Red Lake Falls becoming a manufacturing center of importance are brighter than they were a year ago. Manufacturers are learning of the vast amount of undeveloped power the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers afford, and inquiries are frequent from persons contemplating a change of location or establishing a new enterprise. Concerning the tremendous possibilities of our water power, the Crookston Times says:

"M. S. Amy and C. M. Field, civil engineers employed to complete a topographical survey of the Red Lake river from Crookston to Thief River Falls, and who have been working up from Crookston, reached Red Lake Falls Saturday and the work is now being pushed. Mr. Amy, the head engineer, says the water powers in and tributary to Red Lake Falls are a revelation and that with the modern methods of transmitting electrical energy Red Lake Falls could furnish power to run factories a hundred miles distant and still have power to spare for local industries. A topographical map of the Red Lake river will be completed from notes secured by the present survey."

Examiner Gets Too Busy.

Windom Citizen: As a result of Public Examiner Johnson looking into the accounts of the railroads, it is learned that the roads are not paying their full gross earnings tax. Johnson has already caused them to pay over to the state treasurer $100,000, which they would not have done had Johnson not gone into their accounts. Besides this the state will annually get $100,000 more than it is getting under the old system. And now Representative Wilson has introduced a bill to repeal the clause making it obligatory for the public examiner to investigate the railroad accounts. Mr. Wilson's judgment has shown its heels to his bill. Any member voting for the bill should fall of re-election.

DISTRICT COURT IN SESSION THIS WEEK

Thus Far Three Jury Cases Have Been Disposed of—Term Will Last Ten Days.

Judge William Watts arrived from Crookston on the noon train Monday and the session of the district court was commenced immediately after dinner.

At the hour of going to press three jury cases have been tried.

Chas. T. Champeau was awarded $10 in a suit for wages brought against Nels Swanson, the Lambert merchant.

In the action for damages for assault brought by Joseph Lajambe against Conrad Lajambe, the plaintiff was given $25.

The replevin case of Rudolf Jahnke vs. Hellene Finsand et al. judgment was found for the plaintiff. The case involved eight head of cattle.

Della Whaley was granted a divorce from Charles Whaley. The parties live at Thief River Falls.

The session will last until next Thursday or Friday, and several important cases remain to be tried.

Made New Citizens.

Judge Watts issued final citizenship papers to the following persons this week:

Ole O. Lee, Norway; John S. Hanson, Norway; Ole Westad, Norway; Hans I. Loven, Norway; Ole P. CASUAL OBSERVATIONS.

Isn't it about time to get out a searching party for gentle Anna?

The calendar states that spring has arrived, but the thermometer persists in disputing the proposition.

Congressman Steenerson's woes have just commenced. He has three draw loads of garden seeds to distribute and two cadets to West Point to name.

The quadrennial appearance of the presidential candidate is about to be made. A year from now the most of them will be as hard to find as the lamented Charlie Ross.

Mr. Smythe wants to be elected mayor of Emporia, Kansas, but the Duluth News-Tribune predicts that he will lose some of his family vote because of the way he spells his name.

Every inhabitant of an Illinois town has the measles, and the Minneapolis Times notes that it is the first instance of an epidemic striking a whole town since the roller skating craze of the early '80s.

The Minneapolis Times voices the sentiment of all the people who suffered by reason of the coal strike:

"What a pity it is that arbitration cannot come at the beginning of a labor dispute instead of being instituted after a good deal of mischief has been done."

The Adrian Democrat states a truism in saying:

"When a firm advertises that it will give away a teapot with every pound of ten, it is natural to suspect the quality of the tea. A similar suspicion occurs when a newspaper or magazine tries to increase its circulation by offering prizes for guessing competitions. It would be much more honest to devote the trouble and money to the improvement of the paper itself."

The Duluth News-Tribune says:

"A Minneapolis woman ordered a gown at the dressmakers' convention and swooned when the price was named;"

and then the St. Paul News irreverently adds:

"It's a strange woman who can't stand a padded figure."

Major Scott, the Indian agent at Walker, makes the statement that less than one-quarter of the ceded Red Lake reservation will be sold under the present bill. Possibly if the genial Major would give up long range guessing and look the matter up personally he would stop talking back.

A local statistician figures out that if all the railroads the Gazette has constructed—on paper—during the past decade were built it would require 59,380 men sixteen years, four months and seventeen days to complete the job, and if the Northern Securities company cared to undertake the work the capital of the company would have to be tripled. And, yet, the "great family paper" prides itself on being conservative!

The Minnesota editors always go after the best in sight when they take an excursion. The Albert Lea Standard outlines the program for this summer's trip:

"The Minnesota editorial excursion this year will be to Washington, and several days will be spent there and among near-by historic places, about which it is the duty of editors—and their better halves, to be well advised. President Teddy will receive the gang in the blue room—and give them a wide grin—and all signs to 'keep off the grass' will be removed for the especial and momentous occasion."

The bartenders of Jersey City have organized a total abstinence union, and others in other cities are following their example. One of the leaders in the movement said:

"I think the idea a good one. Why should not bartenders be total abstainers? The interests of their employers demand that they shall at all times be steady, sober and industrious. Why should a bartender be obliged to drink every time he is invited to do so by a customer? It is a pernicious custom. I believe two-thirds of the bartenders are ready to become total abstainers."

Governor Van Sant will probably read this item from the Warren Register with a great deal of interest:

"The office of governor is not infrequently a stepping-stone to the United States senate. Both of Vermont's senators, Proctor and Dillingham, are ex-governors of that state. Both of Louisiana's senators, McEnery and Foster, served their state in its chief executive. Among the other ex-governors who are now senators are Nelson of Minnesota, Alger of Michigan, Cullom of Illinois, Deinrich of Nebraska, Foraker of Ohio, Culberson of Texas, McCreary of Kentucky, Clark and Berry of Arkansas, Stone of Missouri, Perkins of California, Wetmore of Rhode Island and Tillman of South Carolina."

Editor Eastman, of the Wadena Pioneer-Journal, expresses this view of capital punishment:

"If we are going to continue capital punishment, the bill which provides that all executions shall take place in the Stillwater penitentiary and that electrocution be substituted for hanging is an improvement upon the present method. The bill passed the house the other day, and will probably become a law. The old fashion way of publicly hanging criminals had a bad moral effect, and it cannot be successfully denied that the executions of the present day arouse a good deal of interest in the communities where held, and the morbidly inclined are ily affected. The civilized countries are gradually abolishing capital punishment altogether, but until Minnesota does the best way to do is to have all executions take place in the penitentiary."

EVIDENCES OF APPRECIATION.

Minneapolis Tribune: The back page of the Red Lake County Courier has a decidedly metropolitan appearance these days.

Fairmont Sentinel: The Red Lake Courier is running a "Casual Observations" department which sparkles with wit and wisdom. Ralph Wheelock will have to look to his laurels.

Duluth News-Tribune: The Red Lake Falls Courier will soon be opened to its last page first. Editor King has resurrected his special column there, only it is two columns wide and eighteen carats fine.

LESSON IN AMERICAN HISTORY IN PUZZLE

LOPEZ LANDING TROOPS IN CUBA.
Fired Col. Crittenden.

So many rebellious against Spanish rule in Cuba occurred before the island gained its independence that it is almost impossible to enumerate all of them, but one of the more important from a historical standpoint was that for which Gen. Lopez organized a military expedition in this country with which to go to the assistance. This expedition landed on the northern coast of Cuba in August, 1851. Leaving 160 men in charge of Col. W. L. Crittenden, son of the then attorney general of the United States, Lopez pushed into the interior. Both Crittenden and Lopez and their followers were finally captured by the Spaniards within a few days, and they and other leaders of the expedition were condemned without trial and shot in Havana in August, 1851. Col. Crittenden, refusing to turn his back and kneel, was shot to death facing his executioners.

Home Talent the Best

By WILLIAM H. SHERWOOD, Director of the Sherwood Music School, Chicago.

I have noted a condition of affairs in this country that is to be deplored. Generally speaking there is a lack of public interest in recitals given by local artists; and this condition is unquestionably due to the fact that the public has made its patronage of foreign talent a craze and a very ill-advised one. On this point the truth might as well be spoken. The public is too easily caught by a foreign fad or fancy. The craze for foreign musicians has resulted in an attempt to lower the salary scale of American musicians.

This suggests that we might put a tariff on foreign music as we are compelled to do on other imported things. Why not? The foreign musician has learned of the weakness of a certain portion of the American public; and he invades America with his prices several times higher than he receives at home for the same services. The American public takes him too often on his assumed face value. Very often he can lay claim to little more than a long name, and a clever press agent. There are notable exceptions to this criticism, of course.

In spite of this favoritism in certain quarters, however, I nevertheless have faith in the general intelligent music-loving public of America. The public is, after all, a just critic and will in time remember even an American musician, if he be worthy, and forget a foreigner if he be unworthy. Faddists, however, should learn the truth about our real musical strength and give proper support to American talent and methods.

There is a great future for the young American student of music, in spite of the fact that he is not now given the same opportunities as the foreigner who comes with a halo about him. Never before in the history of American music have our American musicians done better work. If they are sometimes hampered by the circumstance of having been born in Americn, nevertheless their brains and talent will find them a place in the world. But this will not be accomplished by meekly accepting a low scale of payment and of occasionally performing for nothing, while foreign musicians are demanding triple prices. For myself I am insisting upon proper remuneration for services and my refusal to appear for a low figure has occasioned the false gossip about me. From confidential talks I have had with many of our leading artists there will be a move all along the line to maintain a dignified scale of prices. No other course will lead the public and musicians alike to a just basis of work, such as exists abroad. I have found the plan very effective and the public appreciative of my efforts.

Growth of American Navy

By REAR ADMIRAL GEO. W. MELVILLE, United States Navy.

During the 42 years I have been in the navy, I have seen its development from the days of the old sailing sloops to the modern battleships. The immense strides that have been taken are marvelous to contemplate. After the sailing sloops and frigates came the auxiliary steam sloops and frigates, including the Minnesota, Merrimae, Roanoke and Wabash, known as the finest steam frigates in the world. But one of the famous quartette, the Wabash, has survived the half century that has elapsed since they were built. The Wabash was a Philadelphia product, built at the Philadelphia navy yard and engined by the Southwark foundry.

Following the vessels of that class came the monitors, the ninety-day gunboats and the magnificent screw sloops of the Chattanooga type. Then began the present line of vessels, commencing with the little iron screw sloops, the Ranger, Alert and the Huron. The latter was shipwrecked on the Virginia coast through careless or indifferent navigation, and all hands were lost. The Alert and Ranger are still used as surveying vessels.

The beginning of the new navy was the A B C D class, consisting of the Atlanta, Boston, Chicago and Dolphin. They were the first of the present magnificent fleet of steel vessels, having the highest speed, the heaviest armor and being the heaviest gunned of any fleet in the world. The American Navy to-day, in its material and personnel, man for man, ton for ton and gun for gun, has no equal on the face of the globe. It is true that there are larger and heavier navies in tons and personnel, but if the navies of the future will continue as the navy of the past has grown, if Congress will supply the money, the United States Navy will never have to change its standard of efficiency.

With the American people, a navy that will defend its rights, at home and abroad, is simply a matter of dollars and cents. As we have the largest population of any nation in the world, cosmopolitan in character, from which to draw officers and men, and of the greatest wealth with which to pay bills, our internal wealth gives us not only power to build vessels but the ability to maintain them on the seas longer than any other nation on the globe. As all nations have found, a navy is a very expensive plaything, in peace and in war, and is only supported by the great wealth of a great nation.

Why American Girls Win

By SIR J. R. ROBINSON, Editor Lgoden Daily News.

It is becoming almost impossible for a foreign ambassador successfully to perform his duties at Washington unless, like Count von Sternberg, who is representing Germany, or Sir Michael Henry Herbert, he shall have first, as a precautionary measure, forestalled criticism by securing an American wife. The Yankee believes at the very heart of him that every Englishman would like to marry an American girl, and that only those don't who can't. The Englishman is poor, no doubt, but he is so superior that the American lady is prepared to spend a large dowry upon keeping him alive.

Yet the explanation of the phenomenon lies not wholly in the greater attractiveness of England's sons. Indeed, the manners of the man are by no means so polished in the old country as in the new. The reason why Englishmen marry American women, while American men don't so often marry English women, is, in the main, a very, simple one. The American girl travels in England, while the English girl does not travel in America, and a young lady is always more open to attentions when she is away from home. A kind of halo envelops her. Her very imperfections begin to set a fashion.

Moreover, the American girl displays something of the French woman's facility for appearing neat on a moderate allowance.

But American girls certainly are attracted by the dazzling, if illusory, opportunities for social distinction, which are offered by a land where aristocracy is based upon birth rather than upon fluctuations of wealth. It is, moreover, extraordinary that American ladies of acknowledge charm and position should so frequently throw in their lot with Europeans who have nothing to offer them compared with what they enjoy already.

WANTED—A TRUSTWORTHY GENTLE man or lady in each county to manage business for an old established house of solid financial standing. A salary of $18 per week paid and all of $18 more paid by check each Wednesday with all expenses direct from headquarters. Money advanced for expenses. Manager, 340 Caxton Bldg., Chicago.

"You are a little severe on us," he laughed; "but I should be happy to advise you in any way, and to recommend a young lawyer I know who would do well for you. Of course under the circumstances I myself could do nothing."

"I understand; and, Mr. Oliver, I'll apologize again. I'll see that woman as to the springs I did half think you knowed where Minny was; the doctor's joking and your being a city bachelor; but you sat me up'ry good, but here's my hand in friendship, and I'll send you word if I find Minny."

"Thank you. I shall be glad to know she is safe, for sometimes I think I may have done wrong in helping her that night."

"You done right, Mr. Oliver; and if she should come to you again—as she might, having no sense of propriety—you telegraph me to Newcastle, Me., and send her straight home to me. I'm going to travel a bit afore I go home. On account of taking care of pa and ma in their old age, I ain't seen much of the world. I calc'late even to stop awhile in New York, for there was a Blinn there that married a Blake, and I'll board with her. Now remember, Mr. Oliver, she is a little young thing and you're old enough, I take it, to be her father, and the world is a ewsserious place. She shan't go back to him. I'm resolved on that; and being a divorced woman is bad enough in the world, without giving another reasons for it. So

"You can trust me," he said, soberly; and after she was gone he sat long in thought. He wanted the good opinion of that grim, honest old maid. She was as unbending as her own granite hills, as stern and black to a world of compromise. He imagined Minny and her always, a wicked thought crept in that—how pearly duty had rewarded her mentally and physically angular and hard, ruled with an iron rod of conscience. Yet the soft little creatures of curves and beauty like her was grateful nicce knew nothing of conscience or duty, and the world loved them and gave them its best.

Sam, after a discreet knock, put in his troubled head. "Perlice to see yer, sir," he said, breathlessly.

"What?"

"Perlice from city hall."

Oliver went hastily to the outer office. Could she be in their hands? What new horror was the Troublesome lady to endure? Or was this some freak of the Frenchman's? He was capable of any meanness. The two clerks were looking sideways at the brawny man in bliss, but Sam gazed in open-mouthed admiration. Going to fires, he felt some days he must be a fireman; the longing was intense as engines sped by at lightning speed; but in a row or a case of mystery how necessary the police, how high their positions, what chances for seeing things and driving the crowd, principally small boys, away!

"Perlice from you, sir," said the man, awkwardly, "but the old lady said you was to see her at once, as you could testify to the bad character of the man in charge."

"Bad old lady?" asked Oliver, sharply, much annoyed at the matter.

"Name Patten, I think—a big woman, considerable thin. She came from your office, she said, and had noticed for days a black looking man a-following her, and she seen him waiting for her in the street. So she strolls, careless like, towards the city hall, sir; right near she sees he's still after her, and she turns and grabs him and runs him in herself, as neat as any of the force could 'a' done."

"You don't know the man?"

"His face sin't in the gallery, sir," as if in apology; "but it's black and ugly enough to be, I'll say that for him. She tumbled the man down the steps right in the chief's room, and he sent me here. She wanted the man arrested for a suspicious character; so the chief said no to get your testimony."

"I'll go down at once," said Oliver, picking up his hat. "I fancy I know the man."

"I'll walk behind, sir," said the policeman, politely, "for seeing me walk lag with you in the direction of the station some of your friends might think you was being run in."

At the station, as he suspected, Oliver saw the man von Louis, in Bernard's sentiment, and black and ugly he was, swearing to himself in French, but refusing to answer any questions. Oliver had seen another man the past few days in Denver, and knew he himself was under their surveillance. He told the chief that Miss Patten was justified in her proceeding; the man had a bad reputation in the North Park, and had certainly been acting in a suspicious manner; the past week he had seen him watching about the streets. The chief let the man go, as he was not handsome, might have acted oddly, but there could be some charge brought against him. Was the lady willing to go into court and swear she had fears of her life from this man Louis Bandel?

"Me," said Miss Patten, majestically, "afeard of that rueskil? Not a mite. But I won't have him trailing at me around, and if the perlice can't stop it the umbrella will; so there! I won't go into no court-room for it."

"Suppose you search the man," said Oliver, smiling. "I will make a charge against him of carrying concealed weapons."

Louis resisted, with frightful profanity, but the search was made, and the result was a loaded revolver and a ugly knife.

"A greaser outfit," said a stalwart policeman.

"You can keep him in jail a day or two on this charge," continued Oliver, "to give Miss Patten chance to leave the city. I tell you on my own account, knowing the man up at my shooting-place, he is a dangerous character. I had an encounter with him once and found him an unpleasant person to deal with."

The exasperated Frenchman was led away breathing curses and defiance. In Oliver's gray eyes was a smile of malice that Louis well understood. He had paid up that rudeness and the accounts were squared. There would be a debt, still when Louis was free again; the man who laughs last laughs best. Just now Oliver was decidedly amused.

"I'm obliged to you, perlice," said Miss Patten, rising and pinning her shawl, "but I don't want you to think as I was in any mortal fear of the Frenchman's hired man. I wa'n't; for if I can't fight men with their own weapons of strength I can't count 'em Good-by, Mr. Oliver; I'm sorry my family has broughten you so much trouble. but I calc'late 'from now on you've learned the last of us."

As days lengthened into weeks, and weeks into months, without a word from Hannah Patten or her erratic niece, Oliver felt the force of her remark. He was hurt and angry. At least they might have sent him word. De Restaud found his missing servant on the chain gang after two days' incarceration in the city bastile. The master blustered a good deal, but finally yielded to reason; certainly there was a law against a man's being a walking arsenal. Oliver, conscious that threatened men live long, went calmly about his business, often meeting De Restaud, but neither spoke.

Dr. John frequently discussed the whereabouts of the "Troublesome lady," as he always called her, but Oliver seldom spoke of her. If, however, a fluffy Skye terrier ran up to him in the street, he would look around eagerly, and assume a look of color would flood his face, while his heart quickened. If something had happened to her on the long journey could he ever forgive himself? He owned, with a sense of anger, she was senselessly innocent and strangely familiar no doubt she had told her story to everybody on the train who would listen.

One June day the doctor came into his friend's office in a jaunty way and with immaculate dresses and a general air of fashion and newness quite dazzling.

"You must be going to be married," laughed Oliver. "Why this haste?"

"A trip east, my boy. I want to breathe the fogs of my native land. My lungs are shriveled up. You never suspected I was born in Stonehegan, Me.; I never told you. It would have been such a background for feeble jokes. Besides, what man would want to say he was born in a place called Stonehegan? I had to be born somewhere, though, and Colorado is too young for me. The Johnsons are an old family in Maine, and, though some of us call it Ann-son, I like the old way. Please, your joke now—great rains from little scorns grow."

"YOU MUST BE GOING TO BE MARRIED," LAUGHED OLIVER.

"I'm too thankful, too dazed by your decision. You haven't been sent in fifteen years to my lookings."

"Never too late to mend. Besides, I'm going to Newcastle. I would like to see how the Troublesome lady is, and her aunt. I like the aunt—good old New England kind, honest as the day, narrow, perhaps, but solid worth. In another generation those old maids will be as extinct as the dodo."

"It does not seem to me the proper thing to call on them when neither you nor Minny went."

"That's Aunt Hannah, bless her good heart," smiled the doctor. "She looks on you with suspicion, Craig, for Mrs. Minny is a married woman, and down in Maine a married woman goes into her tomb when the service is over. Young girls may go to dances and other illicit gaieties, but a once married woman's place is at home, doing the Napoleon act and raising citizens. I like that law, too; it lessens lots of trouble."

"Perhaps but, remember, Maine is prolific in divorce cases."

"Well, they live so shut in, folks do down there, and they are all opinionated and strong characters. I'll write you from Newcastle, at all events."

This Dr. John did after a month. The letter brought a sense of uneasiness to Oliver, and the conviction that, with the best intentions in the world, he had done a great wrong. Mrs. Minny had never been heard from. Mrs. Patten had been at home some weeks at a time during the winter and spring, but would go off again, "wanderlighten," Mr. Perkins said, and seemed not right in her mind. Mrs. Perkins took care of the cat and parrot, and she, too, affirmed that Miss Patten was queer and that she had remarked it was wrong for dumb beasts and birds to be housed when her own dear niece—her only connection—was a homeless wanderer on the face of the earth."

Mr. De Restaud had also visited Newcastle and interviewed the lawyer master, but he got no satisfaction, for Mr. Perkins told Dr. John "he'd known Minny Patten from the time she was a little girl, when she played with his little dead Janie Ann, and he wasn't going to tell a black-looking foreigner she was in Maine if he knowed," and he took much pleasure in mystifying the frustrated husband.

It Saved His Leg.

P. A. Danforth of LaGrange, Ga., suffered for six months with a frightful running sore on his leg; but writes that Bucklen's Arnica Salve wholly cured it in five days. For ulcers, wounds, piles, it's the best salve in the world. Cure guaranteed. Only 25c. Sold by E.W. A. Schierlitz, druggist.

Comfort Better Than Style.

A man went into a men's furnishing store in Grand Haven recently to buy a shirt, and the clerk inquired if he wanted one with or without a collar. "Give me the kind without a collar," the purchaser said. "The collar hurts my neck when I go to bed."—Grand Rapids Press.

What's in a Name?

Everything is in the name when it comes to Witt's Kidney and Bladder Pills. E. C. De Witt & Co., of Chicago, discovered, some years ago, how to make a salve from Witch Hazel that is a specific for Piles. For Blind, Bleeding, Itching and protruding piles, eczema, cuts, burns, bruises and all skin diseases, De Witt's Salve has no equal. This has given rise to numerous worthless counterfeits. Ask for De Witt's —the genuine. A. L. Reichert.

Adjusting Glass Globes.

In fitting on globes it is a common error to screw them on to the gas fixture as tightly as possible. This is a grave error, for if the globe has not room to expand it will surely break when the gas is lighted and the glass becomes heated. Consequent breakages are due to too tight screws.

A Remarkable Case.

One of the most remarkable cases of a cold, deep seated on the lungs, causing pneumonia, is that of Mrs. Gertrude E. Fenner, Ayden, Ind., who was entirely cured by the use of One Minute Cough Cure. She says: "The coughing and straining so weakened me that I run down in weight from 148 to 92 pounds. I tried a number of remedies to no avail until I used One Minute Cough Cure. Four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me entirely. All of the cough, strength, and my lungs and restored me to my normal weight, health and strength."

Wedding Gifts in Turkestan.

In Turkestan every wedding arrangement begins with the payment of a substantial consideration to the girl's parents. If the girl jilts her lover the engagement gift has to be returned unless the parents have another daughter to give as a substitute.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer one Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Augustus St. Gaudens has completed his equestrian statue of Gen. Phil Sheridan at West Lebanon, N. H. It is ready for shipment to New York, where it will be erected.

The Stomach is the Man.

A weak stomach weakens the man, because it cannot transform the food he eats into nourishment. Health and strength cannot be restored to any sick man or weak woman without first restoring health and strength to the stomach. A weak stomach cannot digest enough food to feed the tissues and revive the tired and run down limbs and organs of the body. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, purifies, sweetens and strengthens the glands and membranes of the stomach, and makes digestion complete and all stomach troubles. A. L. Reichert.

Japan Exporting Coal.

The export of coal is becoming very important in Japan, amounting in value as it did in 1900 to $10,344,715. Only a small proportion of that has been sent to China, British India, Hongkong and the remainder to other countries on the eastern seas.

More Riots.

Disturbances of workers are not nearly as grave as an individual's disturbed system. Overwork, loss of sleep, nervous tension will be followed by utter collapse unless a reliable remedy is immediately employed. There's nothing so efficient to cure disorders of the liver or kidneys as Electric Bitters. It's a wonderful tonic, and effective nerve and the best all around medicine for run down systems. It dispels nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia and expels malaria germs. Only 50c, and satisfaction guaranteed by W. A. Schreiter, druggist.

GOOD SEEDS.
Farmers Are Paying Particular Attention to What They Plant.
We are glad to learn that the farmers of this section are paying particular attention this year to the matter of planting only reliable and tested seeds. A great many of them are sending for the catalogue of Northrup, King & Co., the reliable Minneapolis seedsmen, which is sent free to all who send a postal card requesting it. These seeds are sold in the best stores nearly everywhere in the Northwest, but a catalogue is handy and will give much reliable information. The advertisement in this paper gives the address.

The Courier.

By JOHN E. RING.

Printed Every Thursday Morning at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

$1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

The "trust-busting" congress has gone out of business, and there seems to be no alarm from the camp of the money-changers.

SENATOR GORMAN may be all right as a Democratic leader, but the generous approval of the Republican press is sufficient to make the average Democrat a bit suspicious.

The senate has handed Cuba a gold brick. The manner in which the Republican leaders are standing by President Roosevelt suggests the possibility that Teddy may have to fight a large and vigorous element in his own party next year.

It ought not to be necessary to reiterate the oft-repeated statement that unsigned communications cannot be printed by a reputable newspaper. We do not want the name for publication, but simply for protection. Persons asking for space should not be afraid or ashamed to sign their names to their communication.

It is understood that Congressman Steenerson will be allowed to designate two naval cadets for Annapolis some time this year as each district is entitled to have two cadets in the school. The ninth district will also be entitled to have a cadet at West Point. It is not known whether Congressman Steenerson will open these appointments to competition or not but it is safe to predict thus he will.

CONGRESS AND THE TRUSTS.

It would seem as though the trusts, rather than the government of the U. S., were shaping our policy in the Philippine Islands. Despite all the appeals made by the president and Secretary Taft, congress did nothing toward relieving the economic distress prevailing in these islands. It passed neither currency nor tariff legislation of the kind ask for by the commercial classes of the islands. It has preferred to obey the wishes of the tobacco and sugar trusts rather than comply with those of the suffering millions of people. This Republican congress has been guilty of gross negligence of duty by not passing legislation in the interests of the people of those islands. They are compelled to rely on our good will and charity, and have the right to demand help of some kind from us. By thus refusing to do anything for the Filipinos this Republican congress has put a premium on disorder and insurrection, and it would not be at all surprising if the American army in the Philippines finds itself, before long, busier than it has been for some time. The policy of imperialism is bringing its own reward.

STUDENTS AND TOBACCO.

Down in St. Peter the board of education proposes to enforce the law relative to selling tobacco or cigarettes to school students. The results of cigarette smoking are so injurious that the law-makers have provided severe penalties against the selling or the smoking of the "coffin nails." The law may be of interest to some in Red Lake Falls. It is as follows:

"Any person within this state who sells, gives to, or in any way furnishes any cigarettes, cigars, or tobacco in any form to any person under eighteen years of age, or to any minor pupil in any school, college or university, shall be punished by a fine of not to exceed fifty dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed thirty days for each offense.

"Any person under eighteen years of age, or any minor pupil as described in section one of this act, who shall smoke or use cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form on any public highway, street, alley, park, or other lands used for public purposes, or in any public place of business, shall be arrested by any sheriff of the law, who may be cognizant of such offense; and further, it shall be the duty of all such officers, upon complaint of one citizen, to arrest such offenders and take them before the proper court. The court shall impose a punishment, at its discretion, in a sum not to exceed ten dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed five days for each offense; provided, if said minor person shall give information which may lead to the arrest of the person or persons, violating section one of this act in giving to, selling, or in any way furnishing said minor person tobacco, and shall give evidence as witness in such proceedings against said party or parties, the court shall have power to suspend sentence against such minor person.

"Any person who harbors or grants to persons under eighteen years of age, or to minor pupils as described in section one of this act, privilege of gathering upon or frequenting any property or lands held by him, for the purpose of indulging in the use of cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form, shall be held to the same penalty as provided for in section one of this act; provided, that no part of this act shall be so construed as to interfere with the rights of parents or lawful guardians in the rearing and management of their minor heirs or wards within the bounds of their own private premises."

THE RACE PROBLEM.

Hon. C. A. Lindberg, a prominent attorney of Little Falls, and an ardent republican, has been down south, and devoted some of his time to a study of the negro question. His views on the subject will be of interest to Northerners who are in the habit of expressing opinions at long range. Mr. Lindberg says:

"Our unfortunate colored citizens, born with all the legal rights, are nevertheless forever barred from hopes of being stamped with the glories accorded to complete American citizenship. Here and there some exceptional one may gain a little distinction, but it is the exception, and gives little hope to the colored mother that she may be rocking in the cradle one whose influence may reach national standing or even statesmanship. The hope of the mother is the greatest force in the world. This hope can hardly be said to exist in the colored mother. Every colored person feels the lack of a national force. He knows he is destined to be subordinate. We may criticise the South for their subordination of the negro, but we cannot condemn, for we in the North would, if we had an equal colored population, render the same treatment. We might let the negro vote till we feared he would outvote us, but as soon as we entertained any doubts we would see that we were not outvoted. Not one of us would want a negro for governor, however able he might be. There is no pose by any of the negro ever dominating over the white population. To start with he is inferior and he has not the opportunity. He will always be subordinate. It was a mistake to give him the right to franchise, for to no influential extent will he ever be allowed to exercise it. As it now stands his legal right compels; the white man to resort to fraudulent means to deprive him of the exercise. Were it possible to give the colored race a state of their own, where they could exercise national character, the hope could be reasonably entertained that the race would rapidly improve to a higher morality. What is the reward for high morals when no character is given to it? Morals count for naught with the colored race.

"What to do with the negro is a problem that is practically settled. There will be more or less trouble about him, but that is all. He will be kept down. There is no question about it. His future is simply to be merged into the white race. Slowly but surely that is his destiny. It may not be abstractly right, but worse things could happen to him. It may not elevate the white race, but it will eventually lift the black."

Carnegie's Wealth.

The daily press announces that Andrew Carnegie still has $280,000,000 to give away in building libraries, promoting peace, and building homes for the poor laboring men employed in the great iron mills.

The bulk of Mr. Carnegie's fortune is known to be invested at 6 per cent. If all of it returns the same rate his annual income must be $14,000,000. He has given away that much, therefore, to avoid getting richer. That is about all he has accomplished so far. Last year he gave away just about his annual income. The great burden of the principal still rests upon him as heavily as ever. Mr. Carnegie is a robust man but he is elderly. He can hardly hope to live more than twenty years longer. He may not live more than five. If he is to dispose of his fortune in twenty years he will have to get rid of $14,000,000 a year besides the interest. If he is to do the work in five years he will have to give away $56,000,000 of the principal annually. It is a dismal prospect for one who believes that to die rich is not exactly proper. But Mr. Carnegie may take comfort. A man who goes to his grave heavily as he has done to avoid that condition, will not be held to too strictan account if he happens to be unable to keep with a few millions still sticking in his pockets. All that is necessary is to do his best. He is doing his best and having a hard time in the process. In publicly speaking of Mr. Carnegie, Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, Ill., whose opinion on public matters is of the highest regard, stated that Mr. Carnegie was one of the richest men who endeavors to do actual good with his wealth. In most cases when almillionaire becomes generous to his fellow men it is because he sees, or thinks he sees, a direct or indirect personal gain for his expenditure. This is financiering, not philanthropy. Mr. Carnegie gives for the sake of giving; because he wishes to share his wenlth with mankind. May the people be properly grateful for his work.

WEEDS

Consumption is a human weed flourishing best in weak lungs. Like other weeds it's easily destroyed while young; when old, sometimes impossible.

Strengthen the lungs as you would weak land and the weeds will disappear.

The best lung fertilizer is Scott's Emulsion. Salt pork is good too, but it is very hard to digest.

The time to treat consumption is when you begin trying to hide it from yourself. Others see it, you won't.

Don't wait until you can't deceive yourself any longer. Begin with the first thought to take Scott's Emulsion. If it isn't really consumption so much the better; you will soon forget it and be better for the treatment. If it is consumption you can't expect to be cured at once, but if you will begin in time and will be rigidly regular in your treatment you will win.

Scott's Emulsion, fresh air, rest all you can, eat all you can, that's the treatment and that's the best treatment.

We will send you a little of the Emulsion free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

I Coughed

"I had a most stubborn cough for many years. It deprived me of sleep and I grew very thin. I then tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was quickly cured."

R. N. Hamb, Fall Mills, Tenn.

Sixty years of cures and testimonials as the above have taught us what Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will do.

We know it's the greatest cough remedy ever made. And you will say so, too, after you try it. There's cure in every drop.

Three sizes. 25c. 50c. $1.00.

Consumption is curable. Don't neglect a cough or cold. Don't think it will cure itself. If it feels you, let it take it. Don't wait. Don't hope. Leave it with a physician. Then, if he says take our medicine, do so implicitly. Follow his directions. Write us about everything. Address, J. C. AYER, Lowell, Mass.

RED LAKE FALLS, MINNESOTA

NOTS IN MINOR CHORD.

Go to the Merchants State Bank for farm loans.

Rooms for rent—I have two good-sized front rooms, suitable for offices, located over Bangs & Co.'s store, for rent. Call on W. A. Riechel for particulars.

We believe that we have the most complete stock of trunks, bags, telescopes and satchels in the city. A full assortment just received.—Bangs & Co.

George Morinville and wife, living south of town, mourn the death of their little boy, a year old, of pneumonia. The sad event occurred Monday.

The Red Lake Falls creamery will open next week for the spring season. M. T. Whitmore, of Montevideo, who has been engaged as manager, arrived yesterday.

At their last meeting the Knights of Pythias conferred the first and third ranks, and they have work enough on hand to keep them busy for several months.

The Rev. J. D. Morrison, L. L. D., of Duluth, will preach and hold an evening service in the Presbyterian church, on April 7. All are invited to attend.

The Redmen will meet next Wednesday evening, April 1, at the I. O. O. F. hall. As important business is to be transacted a full attendance is requested.

Miss Rose Cyr returned Tuesday from a month's visit with friends at Grand Forks. She was accompanied home by her cousin, Anna, who will visit friends here.way.

Billy Lachapelle and two of the Schink boys left Tuesday for Blackduck and from there they will go to Red Lake to come down with the big drive on the Red Lake river.

The following letters remain unclaimed in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls for the week ending March 21: Miss Lizzie Weder, Adolph H. Olson, R. Swan, J. M. Riendeau, and Oliver Patnode.

Dosithe Robillard, David Lawrence, Rudolph Dusharme and Ed. Levack, four Red Lake Falls young men, expect to leave the first of the week for Washington on a prospecting trip.

The famous Keystone farm of over 9,000 acres in Polk county has been sold to Kenneth Clark of St. Paul. The consideration is $300,000. This is certainly a record-breaking real estate deal.

E. J. Druecker received word Tuesday morning that his mother had died suddenly at her home in Milbank, S. D. He left on the afternoon train for that place to attend the funeral.

MARCH 26

SECURE SEATS EARLY

H. W. Lee, K. M. Hanson and Louis Hanson were a Thief River Falls contingent who spent several days of the week here, on business before the district court, commissioners, etc.

Town Clerk Olof Tande and Erick Iverson, two prominent Garnes township farmers, were before the county commissioners Tuesday on matters pertaining to the Lambert-Garnes ditch.

While waiting for the market gardener's wagon remember that we have the best of canned tomatoes, corn, peas, beans, asparagus, succotash and French mushrooms.—Bangs & Co.

New clothing, hats and furnishings are just now the strong demand, and the Surprise Store tells how you can get the best goods for the least money in a new advertisement on the first page.

W. R. Drew, of Minneapolis, has been in the city this week the guest of his old-time friend, Ed. L. Healy. Mr. Drew is greatly impressed with this part of the Valley and may invest before his return.

J. P. Gonigam was showing Fred Wheanon, of Ottawa, Ill., over this section of the Valley Friday. Mr. Wheanon was favorably impressed with the country and will undoubtedly invest in some land.

Tuesday, supposedly an infallible sign of spring, has made its appearance, and the optimistically inclined citizen is preparing to enjoy the pleasure of living that the advent of that joyous season brings.

The Surprise Store added another improvement to its already metropolitan store by the placing of three large arc lights in the interior of the room. It adds much to the beauty of this popular establishment.

Leo Erb returned last Saturday from Minneapolis where he has spent the last three weeks with relatives. It was his intention to enter the hospital and receive treatment for his hip trouble, but sickness prevented.

John Deutschman received word this week from Matt Skala, who is taking treatment for rheumatism at Hot Spring, stating that he is not improving very rapidly and that he is unable to state when he will return home.

The Big Store announces a spring opening of new dry goods, clothing, hats, shoes and furnishings. Mr. LaBissoniere is receiving a larger line of these goods than he has ever carried before and is prepared to quote low prices.

An operation for abscess of the hip was performed on Mrs. Robert Raney at the Crookston hospital last Saturday, and the latest news from the patient indicates that her condition is as favorable as could reasonably be expected.

The Red Lake Falls Milling company lost a load of piling and a pair of bobsleds in the Red Lake river Monday, and but for the presence of mind of the driver in cutting the tugs the team, too, would have gone under the water.

A. L. Poulliot has accepted a position in the store of Theo. LaBissonniere, and assumed his new duties Monday. Mr. Poulliot has had extensive experience in this line and will prove a valuable addition to to the force of the Big Store.

T. G. Brunelle has completed two elegant single harnesses this week for Crookston parties, and has orders for a number more. Mr. Brunelle is one of the finest harness-makers in this part of the state and merits the excellent patronage he is receiving.

Hereafter postmasters will not be permitted to rent boxes to minors without the consent of the parents in writing. This is a recent ruling of the postoffice department and is in the right direction. If everything is all right no family needs more than one box in a postoffice.

H. N. Hanson, of Barwick, Ontario, has spent the week in this city on business. Mr. Hanson was at one time a prominent farmer of Black River township, but is at present running a store at Barwick.

George Brunelle returned home Monday morning from a business and pleasure visit of several weeks at Blackduck and points on the Duluth line. Mr. Brunelle is interested in some eastern Minnesota mining property that gives promise of being a paying proposition.

H. C. Hanson, F. Ruscheand Emil Haase, all of Russell, this state, have been shown over Red Lake county this week by the Healy company. All of the gentlemen were greatly pleased with the country and each one made the necessary arrangements to secure a choice piece of land.

Architect Strassburger was over from Crookston Monday on a business mission. Mr. Strassburger says that the building improvements to be made in the several towns in this vicinity this season are very numerous, and it is a sure shot that Red Lake Falls will be second to none.

A. J. Ackerlund, an old resident and prominent farmer of Bray township, died very suddenly of heart disease at the home of J. C. Malmquist in St. Hilaire Tuesday evening. Mr. Ackerlund had gone to St. Hilaire to do some trading, and was taken suddenly ill while at one of the stores.

Ada Herald: Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Tenney are making arrangements to move to Red Lake Falls where they will make their future home. Mr. Tenney has accepted a position there and has already pone up. Mr. and Mrs. Tenney have numerous friends here who will regret to learn of their departure.

The Knights of Pythias are to have a series of district conventions during the summer. The sixth district, comprising the Crookston, Red Lake Falls, Halstead, Warren, Stephen and Argyle lodges, will hold its convention at Crookston on Thursday evening, June 25. Andrew D. Stephens is the special deputy in charge of this meeting.

Joseph Therrien returned from Washington this week, where he has been for some time on a prospecting trip. Mr. Therrien investigated the possibilities of that country very thoroughly and was not favorably impressed with it. He is still of the opinion that Minnesota is the best state in the Union and will stick to this opinion until convinced to the contrary.

The 1903 "Wonderland," issued by the Northern Pacific railway, is out this week and excels all previous attempts in that line. This book tells the story of Western progress entertainingly and convincingly, and is illustrated in the highest style of the engraver's art. If you want a copy send six cents for postage to Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent, St. Paul.

Crookston Times: F. B. Newton of Red Lake Falls came down last evening and spent the night here. He says the boom on at Red Lake Falls is no paper story, but an actual condition. The people of the city are confident that they are going to get all sorts of railroads and that the Lower Falls will be second only to Crookston as the railroad center of the northern part of the state.

The Knights of Pythias expect to entertain Supreme Chancellor Tracy R. Bangs, of Grand Forks, and Grand Chancellor James Robertson, of Minneapolis, at their meeting Monday evening. The visit of these officials is a mark of distinction to the lodge, and the meeting will no doubt be attended by every member. Luncheon will be served, and addresses made by the visiting officials.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church met with Mrs. B. Zaiser inst Wednesday and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Wm. Findeisen; vice-president, Mrs. B. Zaiser; secretary, Mrs. S. M. Sivertson; treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Boughton. The society is in excellent shape both numerically and financially and their work is doing good to the community.

P. S. Medehil was a caller from Emardville township Tuesday and informed THE COURIER that the Emardville creamery association has employed Wm. Lauritsen, of St. Hilaire, as manager of their creamery during the coming season. Mr. Lauritsen is a buttermaker of extensive experience, having worked in several of the largest creameries in Denmark and under his management the Emardville creamery will be in the front ranks.

C. F. Elvidge, who recently moved from the southern part of the state to his farm on section 34, Louisville, was a pleasant caller at THE COURIER office Tuesday. Mr. Elvidge is much pleased with this part of the country and thinks that the immigration of settlers will be very large the coming spring. F. C. Tubbs, of Marshall, a brother-in-law of Mr. Elvidge and an experienced carpenter, arrived last week and will work at his trade here during the summer.

Sleff & Green have been selling a lot of horses during the past week. O. J. Rollis was down from Thief River Falls last Friday and bought nineteen head, and the sales for the week aggregated ninety head. As seen by an advertisement elsewhere a carload of Illinois horses will be here on April 8, and anyone in need of good animals should wait until they arrive. Messrs. Sleff & Green are reliable dealers and their guarantee will be found as good as gold bond.

Remi Poirier, the well-known gentlily farmer and stock raiser, has bought a half-interest in his son's general store, and while he will not become actively identified with the business, the many friends of the gentleman will be pleased to learn that he is to be interested in our business circles. The firm will likely be J. R. & R. Poirier. They have purchased the Shagnon bankrupt stock, and are making heavy discounts in all lines, as will be seen by an advertisement elsewhere. A complete line of new dry goods, dress goods, notions and furnishings will be received for the spring season.

An Electric Tree.

There is a particular tree in the forests of Central India which has most curious characteristics. The leaves of the tree are of a highly sensitive nature and are so full of electricity that whoever touches one of them receives an electric shock. It will effect a magnetic needle at a distance of even 70 feet. Birds never approach the tree, nor are insects ever seen upon it. Its electrical strength varies according to the time of day, it being strongest at midday and weakest at midnight. With the strength of bread and meat in liquid form, and being pure and delicious, are the qualities that make golden grain belt beer the ideal beverage for table use. Diseases Caused by Measles.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Tonic and Nervine Cured After Thirty-one Years.

"I was a perfectly healthy young man up to February 1895. When my regiment was in Camp Randall I waitaken sick with the measles and I did not enjoy good health up to the time I used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Tonic in 1896. During that time I came from insanity, epilepsy, heart trouble and nervous prostration did treatment but have had all kinds. Dieting has never helped me. Biliousness, attacks of headache, rheumatism, nasal catarrh, hay fever, sickness, and chronic diarrhoea have all taken their turn with me. Thanks to the Nervine and Tonic I am completely restored to health. I have also used Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills with good results and I think that the Dr. Miles' Remedies are perfect."—Rev. Hiram Vogt, Seward, Neb.

I want to say a few good words for Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. I have been troubled very much with insomnia since I made the change in the new paper and on account of this have tried various remedies without relief. I was finally induced by a wholesale druggist, a personal friend of mine, to try Nervine. I can assure you it has done me a lot of good. I do not find it necessary to take it every night as I was formerly when I find that I am excessively nervous and restless I again take it up as I always keep a supply on hand. It has never failed to give me the desired relief."—A. Hergin, Publisher "Daily Free-Press" Mail, Nebraska.

"How far imagination will carry a man—almost to idiocy," murmured Oliver.

"The question," continued the doctor, plaintively, as if he had not heard us, "what are you going to do? You meant well; I should no doubt have assisted the Troublesome lady—got out driving so far or so fast, perhaps. But honest Mexican accomplice rode his 'gooda boasta' to Parkville last night, and he and the well-mannered Louis were suitably intoxicated together. Monsieur is probably well informed of all that took place."

"Which was little enough. I would have told him but I had no desire to quarrel with him, or perhaps fight a ridiculous French duel over a young woman I had only seen twice, and both of us duellists possibly landed in jail for breaking the peace by some outrageous sheriff."

"I would not go your hail, either, my friend," smiled Dr. John. "I would like to see you shut up awhile; you've sent enough to prison walls in your time. If I don't mistake—passers for few this lonely way, and his horse was a roan—here comes the Mexican and his 'gooda friend,' also a nondescript creature following, who I hope is not the Troublesome lady returning."

THE MEXICAN AND A NONDESCRIPT FOLLOWED.

"Your judgment in matters pertaining to female kind is not accurate," said Oliver, who had jumped up suddenly at the doctor's words. "This is an elderly, gaunt and tall female, and one six times male as gingerly as if he were liable to go out from under her any moment. Do you know, I half believe that is Aunt Hannah."

"Dad's know you hed relatives," said the doctor, following Oliver to the road.

"I haven't. Mrs. Minny has and if the old lady is seeking her, there is the young lady, and what kind of a difficulty have I got myself into? She looks warlike enough."

"I have brought no lady from no railroad," said the Mexican, obsequiously. "She coma M. de Restaud. He senta mea for medame."

"So you told him I had taken her to the train?" Oliver said, quickly, a dangerous light in his gray eyes. "You were a fool. I shall come here a grain and I can pay more than the Frenchman. I would even have bought that horse of yours at your most exorbitant price."

"You hat not enough man-nay for to buy my horse, senor. He is one race horse. He hat wing grand man-nay for me. I haul as lady with you; my mule he tire, she yell all ze way and bump nervous."

While he spoke, the old lady, with more haste than elegance, slid to the ground, unfastened a carpetbag tied to the saddle, straightened her black alpaca skirt, and delivered a five-dollar bill to her guide.

"All you'll git," she said, in a highpitched nasal voice, "if you talk lingo forever. I ain't to home in a country where my native tongue is butchered as you do it, and that's all I'll pay you. If you talk Indian'dash all night."

"Si, senora," gasped the Mexican.

"Yis, I do; and I've a mind to report your insolence to the authorities, for that 'see' is all I've got out of you the whole way. And if you ain't leagued over unprofitable menders and everlasting little bits day, and horrid wastes, to last me till I die. When I git back east I'll hate to look at that settin'-sun for getting reminded of this journey an' Minny's misfortunes here. Now, he being gone, misters," she said, abruptly, as Joan rode rapidly away, "that Warn, as he calls himself —which of you is the man that made the mischief in my nephew by marriage's family?"

It was rather an embarrassing question. The doctor politely requested that she sit down and rest, as she seemed much flurried, and they could talk more comfortably. After a sharp glance at him she consented, sitting carefully in a chair with a crean. She was a tall, raw-boned woman, flat as an ironing-board, tanned and wrinkled, with strong features, a mass of untidy gray hair and handsome blue eyes with a sly twinkle in them as if she could see a joke and make one, too. Somehow the heaven life of New England brings wit and pathos to the surface; of the first, the dryest, quaintest sort, as of the other the subtlest and most hopeless. Her ungloved hands were work-worn and large, knuckled, hands of that pride of the village, a good housekeeper and one who has Sowers in summer of her own tending. She pushed an unstable bonnet she wore back on her head and looked at Oliver severely.

As she seemed to know, he said, abjectly: "I helped Mrs. de Restand get to the railroad."

"I didn't need no telling," she answered, promptly. "I'm slow but sure, I never rode on an animal before of any sort or kind. I've got real rheumatic pains in my hack and shoulders. It is hard for a woman at my age to have to gallivant over an onsettled country hunting a connection."

"Here are some cushions," said Dr. John, coming out, his arms full. "Those chairs are uncomfortable. Now, isn't that better?"

"Yis. I suppose I'll eat my meals off the mantel piece for a week. Now, you being old and settled like, why couldn't you have helped Minny?"

"Because I was not here. Object to smoking?"

"No, land sakes, no; keep the skeeters off, if they be any that this git is living up here."

"Now, this is cozy," continued the doctor, lighting his pipe. Oliver sat down near them. "You see, I was called to a sick woman—passers by died—poor soul."

"Of what?" asked the newcomer, eagerly, all curiosity.

"I should say homesickness if I told the truth, but I called it mountain fever. Well, she was dying, you know, and here, as Cralg is sitting alone over the fire, comes a little lady in a yellow silk gown (Mike told me, Craig; you'll accdn't think you've been talking in your sleep). On her white neck are big ugly bruises, welts from a whip are on her arms, and the little dog she brings with her has been brutally kicked. She throws herself at Craig's feet, and begs him to save her—"

"You don't never tell me that evil little foreigner dared strike Minny Patten!" cried the old lady. "Oh, I'd like to git my hands on him! All her mother's fault—always taking up with strangers."

"Any man would have helped her," said Oliver; then he went on and told what he did, and how he left her safely at the train; he omitted her eccentric farewell—possibly because he had forgotten it.

"The poor little bird," sobbed the old woman, "my dead brother's child; and what a man he was!—master of a ship at nineteen; and here's his Minny be idolized living in nowheres-land with a crazy Frenchman. I put up with him for months when I visited here, for her sakes but one day—the Pattaus is all quick, on my mother's side I'm a Knox, and hist'ry tells what he was—and I slapped Henry right in the face like he'd been a young one. He set me out the door, and his man have my trunk after me. Such I had to ride in a springless wagon, and, gitting home, found things going to ruin and ruin with the shiftless folks I left taking care of my house. I did advise Minny to stay, though, Mr. Oliver,' she said, looking at him with her honest, kindly eyes. "It is an old-fashioned woman, so I 'lowed it was her duty; she'd made her bed and had to lie on it. You can't never tell me a girl is made to git married in this here city, whatever it may be in France, an Minny is a varlet Parisian. I hain't no liking for men that sympathizes with young wives when they air young an' pretty."

"I should have dragged her back, to be killed the next time," Craig said, coldly.

She rose and held out her wrinkled hand. "I think you done noble by her, Mr. Oliver; and 'thought by your looks you was to be one of them city bachelors that ain't no good round chances there, 'cause her own dead father couldn't have done better by her. Here you 'id them miles in that time I can't see, or that Warn an' me set-not afore sun-up' got to the Frenchman's and turned five o'clock. Now, how much money did you gave Minny to fried way?"

She took out an old leather wallet and began unwinding a strap that held it tight.

"I have no account. Wait until you hear from her."

"I am well-to-do, and Minny's all I've got to leave my property to so that needn't worry you and I won't like her being under obligations to strange men. How much did you loan her?"

Oliver looked confused. "I—I don't know; there might have been three hundred dollars in the roll—perhaps more."

"What!" almost screamed Aunt Hannah. "Heavens to Betsy! you and me won't never set eyes on Minny Patten till every cent of that money is gone. She don't know the value on't. She never had none of her own to spend afore."

"I think she will see it to good advantage," smiled Oliver. "Besides, it is better she has plenty, as she seems to have missed you. How did that happen?"

"I've been away six weeks, visiting connections by marriage in town, an' I was coming here to see how she was treated, for she ain't writ to me for 'most two months, an' she more enough to keep her from it. None of the neighbors knowed where I'd went, on account of their curiosity; I told 'em mebbe Floridy, an' boarded up the lower winders in my house."

"Well, the neighbors will take care of her," said the doctor, cheerily. "There is Miles; so. Miss—"

"Patten—Hannah Patten."

"There is nothing for you to do but to accept our hospitality—city beelors live well, you know—and to-morrow go down to Denver with us. Mr. Oliver probably has a letter from Mrs. Minny at his office waiting for him, as she promised to let him know if she got home safely."

"I believe I will, and thank you," said Miss Patten, beginning to smooth down her hair. "The smell of them fried onions struck me all in a heap, for I nin't eat since breakfast, my niece's husband not even offering me a chair to set on, let alone something to eat, and I've got a feeling of closeness that reminds me of one of Cap'n Sam's sea stories—Minny's father, you know—where a ship-wrecked crew ate their boots and chewed sticks to keep 'em alive."

"OH, I'D LIKE TO GET MY HANDS ON HIM!"

"You see," smiled Dr. John, "I was right about our humble vegetable. It saved your life, madam."

"And stomach," said Miss Patten, walking majestically to the house. "It mayn't be proper for me to stop here, but I guess our age protects me."

"Why, certainly," said Dr. John, mockingly. "It is in the very air out here to do erratic things, but the neighbors in your town shall never know, I swear it."

CHAPTER V.

A week later Oliver's office boy, a freckled and red-headed youngster by the name of Sam, changed to Sian by the much-tried clerks, knocked and announced hoarsely: "Lady to see yer." He threw such meaning in the words, his bearing and manner were so full of dark mystery, Oliver almost expected Mrs. de Restaud, instead of Aunt Hannah. No letter had come from the little lady of the Troublesome, and that discourtesy showed she might almost merit her connection's condemnation: it was certainly frivolous to neglect assuring her preserver of her safety. The doctor had been especially unpleasant about it. "You see," he would say, "I told you there were two sides to every story; and the Frenchman may have been a much-enduring man." The office boy dragged forward Oliver's desk, and with a significant look withdrew.

"He's either brought a promise or some feller wot's cheated her on a land deal," he said to the clerks as he shut the door carefully. "I guess there's mens in it, for the hoss grinned when he see her."

"I hope you have good news, Miss Patten," Oliver said, eagerly.

"If no news is good I have," she answered, with a sigh. "I've heard from Mr. Perkins that keeps the depot, and he says she ain't been there at all, nor no word come. There wa'n't no mail for me, neither. I seen that woman at Colorado Springs. She says Minny got there all right, and she bought her a plaid shiter, a hat and some other things, and Minny and she dog went in the sleeper, and that Minny promised to write to her, but hadn't. The only one that knowed anything down here was the ticket seller, who remembered her and said he sold her a ticket for Chicago. She must have been afraid her husband would see it. He said lots of the sick doctors were discharged about that time, and that was why, most like, at I interviewed Washington about her."

"Still, it is almost impossible for a girl to be lost traveling nowadays. She probably took elaborate precautions, for fear Dr. Restaud would feel low her; but if the dog went along she will be found easy enough."

"I am, as you folks say out here,' said Miss Patten, grimly, "going or the trail, and shall watch out most for the dog, which I know she'll drag around with her. I don't doubt but I shall find her when that money's gone, Mr. Oliver; as I said you, she would not appear until it was all spent. I think it's my place to pay you now."

"Don't you think it would be better to let her settle her own accounts? She must be aught the value of money some way; and when you find her if she is determined not to go back to her husband you should institute a suit to make him account for her property. They told me up in the mountains he was getting rid of it rapidly."

AS NEAT AN ANY OF THE FORCE COULD DO.

"I hain't in general," sighed Miss Patten, "much liking for lawing; folks gits in jest as eats in a trap, and there ain't much of a property left when they git out—asking your pardon for being plain spoken, for I always speak my mind."

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a mortgage dated the 26th day of August and addressed by Vaughn Bissell and T. M. Bissell, her husband, mortgagors, to E. E. Thomsen, mortgagee, which mortgage bears date the 26th day of December, 1902, was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 18th day of January, 1903, at 3:30 o'clock p. m., in Book "K" of mortgages on page 283, and is now recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, in Book "Q" of mortgages, on page 235, to-wit: East one-half (E½) of Northwest quarter (NW¼) and Lots one (1) and four (4), Section twenty-one (21), Township one hundred forty-seven (147), Range forty-two (42) West of the 5th P. M., containing 153.76 acres, and was given to secure the payment of the sum of Five hundred dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, and the annuity on the 26th day of December in each year, and which mortgage is conditioned on one principal note and interest coupon notes thereto attached, by failure to pay the interest accruing thereon on the 26th day of December, 1902, and by reason of which mortgage is provided an one of its conditions that in case of failure to pay any part of said interest when the same becomes due, the whole sum of money or principal thereby secured shall thereupon become due and payable.

And whereas, there is claimed to be due and to be due at the date of this notice on said principal indebtedness and interest thereon to the date of sale, the sum of Five hundred and seventy-six dollars.

And whereas, because of said default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative, and no action at law or in equity has been taken to recover any part of the moneys now in default.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises above described, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said County of Red Lake, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls, in said County, on Saturday, the 25th day of April, 1903, at 10 o'clock a. m., to make payment of the said sum of Five hundred dollars, and interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, and the annuity on the 26th day of December in each year, and the taxes if any, conditioned on one principal note and interest coupon notes thereto attached, by failure to pay the interest accruing thereon on the 26th day of December, 1902, and by reason of which mortgage is provided an one of its conditions that in case of failure to pay any part of said interest when the same becomes due, the whole sum of money or principal thereby secured shall thereupon become due and payable.

And whereas, there is claimed to be due and to be due at the date of this notice on said principal indebtedness and interest thereon to the date of sale, the sum of Five hundred and seventy-six dollars.

And whereas, because of said default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative, and no action at law or in equity has been taken to recover any part of the moneys now in default.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises above described, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said County of Red Lake, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls, in said County, on Saturday, the 25th day of April, 1903, at 10 o'clock a. m., to make payment of the said sum of Five hundred and seventy-six dollars, and interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, and the taxes if any, with costs and disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from said sale as provided by law.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARM LANDS.

Are now more sought by the Investor and Homeseeker than ever before.....

BECAUSE IT IS GETTING TO BE UNIVERSALLY KNOWN:

That the RED RIVER VALLEY is one of the GREATEST WHEAT-PRODUCING SECTIONS of the earth, and has NEVER KNOWN A CROP FAILURE, but always produces LARGE CROPS of the NO. 1 HARD, thus justly entitling it to be called "THE BREAD BASKET OF THE WORLD."

That CORN AND CLOVER as well as nearly all other kinds of GRAINS AND GRASSES raised in the southern part of the state can be SUCCESSFULLY RAISED HERE, making it not only suitable to WHEAT RAISING but well adapted to STOCK AND HOG RAISING also.

And lastly because they know that taking into consideration all the ADVANTAGES THE RED RIVER VALLEY POSSESSES over other parts of the United States—having HEALTHFUL CLIMATE, GOOD CLEAR WATER, PLENTY OF FUEL, EXCELLENT SOIL and SPLENDID RAILROAD AND MARKET FACILITIES—Red River Valley farm lands are a cheaper and more profitable investment than land anywhere else on the face of the globe. Red River Valley farm lands at present prices will more than double in value within the next few years.

We have thousands of acres for sale in Red Lake and Polk Counties, two of the best Counties in the Valley, and justly named the Garden Spot of the Valley, which we are offering low prices and on terms to suit each buyer.

Most of our lands were bought years ago when lands were cheap and we are offering to sell them again at only a small margin of profit. We handle our own lands and will make terms to suit the buyer. CROP PAYMENT, INSTALLMENT PLAN or other terms. By dealing with us you save agent's commission. Why not just as well have that in your own pocket?

We have also land for sale in other counties in the Valley. Have at all times some great snaps to offer and will at this time call your attention to the following:

2000 acres in quarter and half section tracts, all more or less improved with buildings, fences and other improvements, and located in a thrifty, well settled community, where churches and schools are built and roads graded. These will be sold in "bunch" at a price that will surprise you. Only $3,000 cash will handle this bunch. Balance can be paid out time to suit at 6 per cent. A live investor can make a few thousand on this bunch in a short time. If interested, write for descriptions and full particulars.

We furnish abstracts showing good title to every piece of land we sell.

We furnish railroad fare at landseekers' rates, and fare refunded to buyers.

RUX ACQUITTED OF MANSLAUGHTER CHARGE

Jury Out But a Few Minutes—Found Unanimous Verdict for the Defendant.

The jury in the case of Frederick C. Rux brought in a verdict of acquittal yesterday afternoon, after being out only twenty minutes.

Rux is a prominent Sanders farmer, and was indicted last week for manslaughter in the second degree by the grand jury. It was alleged that in April, 1902, his wife died in confinement as a result of criminal carelessness on the part of her husband in refusing to call assistance.

The testimony of a number of physicians was introduced, and the stories told by the neighbors on the witness stand were greatly at variance. Chas. E. Boughton appeared for the defense, and the state was represented by County Attorney Grady and W. A. McIntyre.

As this was the first case of so serious a nature ever tried in Red Lake county, considerable interest was manifested and the court room was crowded during the progress of the trial.

Sitting Bull's Son.

A son of the famous Indian warrior Sitting Bull, is standing today shovel in hand on a railroad embankment helping to build up the country that his father once terrorized. There's less glory in it, but the shovel is mightier than the tomahawk. The man who builds up, not the man who tears down, wins in the long run. Speaking of building up, reminds one of golden grain belt beer, the health builder and tonic. Every glass contains the strength of bread and meat in liquid form. It will build you up if you use it regularly. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

DEATH OF AN OLD SETTLER.

August Riechel Sr. Called by Grim Reaper's Summons.

August Riechel senior, one of the oldest residents of Red Lake county, died Monday night at the residence of his son, August junior, with whom he has made his home for a long time. Mr. Riechel had been a constant sufferer for many years, and death came as a welcome relief from bodily torture.

The deceased was born at Hanover, Germany, in 1819. In 1855 he was married to Miss Christina Lockert, the couple emigrating to New York two years later. The family came to Rice county, Minnesota, in 1861, and in 1882 joined the colony of early settlers at Red Lake Falls. Ten children blessed the union, four of them dying in infancy. The oldest son, Adolph, died in Lake Pleasant township in 1899. The wife and mother and five children survive, viz: Mrs. Anna Kohler, Minneapolis; August jr., Red Lake Falls; Henry, West Superior; William A., Red Lake Falls, and Mrs. Martha Lowe, Waterville, Minn.

The funeral was held this morning at 9:30 from the residence, and was conducted by Rev. Andrew Walker of the Presbyterian church. The remains were interred in Oak Grove cemetery.

The Shortest Line

Between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago is the Famous Northwestern Line. It has 245 miles of double track between these three cities, and the entire distance is protected by the block signal system, furnishing the best form of protection against accidents. Eight fine trains run between these three great cities daily via this popular line.

A SCRAP OF PAPER.

Play to be Presented by Senior Class of High School.

It's funny.
It's clean.
The dialogue is bright, crisp and entertaining.
The situations are ludicrous in the extreme.
The scrap of paper is there.
It is continually bobbing up in unexpected places
Yet it eludes capture in a surprisingly clever way.
The play is given by the Senior class of the Red Lake Falls high school.
They are not great actors, but they're nice boys and girls.
Moreover, they're working hard.
They will use the proceeds to pay commencement expenses and to buy a memorial for the school.
All this helps the town.
They are entitled to your support.
But you can't afford to miss it.
They will surprise you with their good work.
You will laugh 'till your sides ache at the fun in it.
It's at the opera house.
The date is MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 13.
Tickets, 50c, 35c and 25c.
Reserved seats on sale at Anderson & Healy's next Monday.
Everybody's going.
That means you.

DEATH LOVES A SHINING MARK.

Oliver Edmund Gonigam Called in the Morning of Life.

Oliver Edmund Gonigam, who had been so seriously ill with typhoid-pneumonia for more than a week past, died Monday evening at 9:20. He made an heroic struggle for life, but the insidious disease baffled the skill of the physician and the willpower of the patient. For several days he lingered in the shadow, and the relatives and friends hoped against hope that he might be given strength to pass the crisis of the disease. But it was not to be. Monday afternoon symptoms of dissolution were so apparent that there was no longer a straw for hope to clutch upon, and in the early vigils of the evening his physical agonies were soothed, and the soul passed peacefully away to the God who gave it.

Death is sad under almostany circumstance, but when the aged and infirm are called to go there is compensation in the thought that they have lived their allotted measure of years, and that they have been given time to make the final entries in the balance sheet of life's activities. When the infant's eyes have closed in the sleep that knows no waking, the home naturally is filled with grief; the patter of the little feet, the happy smile, the clasp of the ruddy arms, and the haudred childish endearments are treasured in the memories of those near and dear, but, after all, there is the satisfaction of knowing that the young life had not yet learned to grasp the responsibilities and enjoyments of real life.

When Death comes to claim as his own a choice flower of young manhood or womanhood, it is hard to fathom the Divine purpose. The opening years of the twenties are filled with hope and promise. Life is just becoming serious, and the triumphs and tribulations are a stimulus to renewed efforts and final victory in the battles that come to all. There is so much to live for. The is so little apparent reason for death.

Oliver Edmund Gonigam was born in Illinois a little more than 21 years ago. In July last he came to Red Lake Falls as manager of the Gonigam Real Estate agency and in his brief business experience had demonstrated talent and capacity in his chosen line of work. He was taken ill with pluerisy nearly a month ago, but did not take to his bed until about two weeks later. Typhoid and pneumonia complications ensued, and though he made a brave struggle the progress of the disease could not be checked. Oliver was the eldest child and only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Gonigam, who came to this place from Walnut, Ill., about three weeks ago. The deceased leaves, besides the parents, three sisters to mourn his untimely end.

The funeral was held this afternoon from the family residence, Rev. Andrew Walker officiating, and the remains interred in Oak Grove cemetery.

The relatives and friends of the young man will receive universal sympathy from the people of Red Lake Falls and vicinity, and we will hope and believe that the Father who "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" will give comfort and aid to those called upon to bear this overwhelming sorrow.

"There is a Reaper whose name is Death,
And with his sickle keen,
He reaps the hoarded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between."

Another Successful Band Concert.

The band concert last Thursday evening came up to the expectations of the large crowd that gathered to enjoy the entertainment. The band again demonstrated its excellence as a musical organization and their part of the program was smoothly rendered and given liberal applause. The vocal selections by Miss Alice Newton and Prof. F. A. Whiteley were delightfully received and each of the singers responded to an enthusiastic encore. The April concert will conclude the series of indoor concerts and it is the intention of the management to make this surpass all former attempts.

MANY ARE SEEKING LAND.

Proposed Red Lake Reservation Opening Attracts Newcomers.

Red Lake county is getting a lot of good advertising in the dailies nowadays. A recent dispatch says that many land seekers contemplating filing on the Red Lake reservation are already arriving to look over lands with a view of making selections. Red Lake county will receive a great impetus on account of the opening.

A great deal of outside capital is finding its way there since the homeseekers' movement began. Many new comers will settle there as a result of a visit to that garden spot of the Red river valley, regardless of whether claims are secured or not.

The opening of eleven townships of fine agricultural lands in a county like Red Lake, already recognized as one of the banner counties of the state, will inaugurate an era of great prosperity.

Good farming land in such a country, within easy reach of markets, next door to old established rural communities enjoying good roads, good church and school facilities, with cheese factories and creameries dotting the borders, will bring an immense immigration.

Many will be disappointed in not being able to secure homesteads at the opening sale, and naturally enough they will look around them for investments in farm lands outside the reservation.

At 160 acres per man, eleven town ships to be opened will afford room for 1,551 homesteads, and figuring half as many more who will be attracted by the resources of the country to settle there, whether they can secure reservation lands or not, this means a great thing for Red Lake country, an increase in population of 7,000 to 10,000 and a proportionate increase in wealth and the factors of wealth production.

The New Store.

Delorme & St. Murie wish to announce that their new stock of staple and fancy groceries, dry goods, notions and fancy goods is now open for inspection in the building on the city hall corner formerly occupied by M. Shagnon. Their goods are all fresh and new, and the people of Red Lake Falls and vicinity are invited to give them a trial order.

DISTRICT COURT MILL IS THROUGH GRINDING

Fred C. Johnson Fined $100, and Robert Manly Assessed $50 for Grand Larceny.

The March term of the district court reached the end of the calendar this afternoon and adjourned in time for the Judge to catch the train.

In the condemnation proceedings by Adam Zeh vs. M. O. Sortedahl, Eyvind Sekjeldrup and Mary Morissette, damages were awarded as follows: Sortedahl, $95; Schjeldrup, $150; Morrissette, $150.

The case of Albert Gray vs. Theo. Garceau et al., involving the validity of a $2,000 bond, was set for trial in chambers.

Fred C. Johnson, formerly manager of the Red Lake Falls creamery, plead guilty to the embezzlement of about $200 from the association, and was fined $100, in default of which he must serve sixty days in the county jail.

Robert Manly plead guilty to the theft of $70 from his father and was fined $50. The amount was paid at once.

The case of M. O. Sortedahl vs. Coleman Keeley et. al. was dismissed, as was also the case of J. R. MacKusick vs. the town of Poplar River.

The action brought by John Meier vs. Louisa Douglass for a church hill was dismissed for insufficient evidence on the part of the plaintiff.

The case of Stacy vs. Evenson was dismissed for want of prosecution.

The actions brought by the Scandia Mutual Hail Insurance company to enforce the collection of notes given by George Marchildon, Chas. Berry, Edward A. Aubol, J. Hendrickson, P. O. Haggland and H. O. Koldal have been set for trial in chambers.

O'Brien Bros. were allowed judgment in their action against Kutio and Mike Wilmes.

Hitchcock & Keating were awarded judgment on a piano note against C. M. Evenson.

CASUAL OBSERVATIONS.

Easter bonnet bills and spring housecleaning threaten to strike the head of the family all in a bunch this year.

The Kasson Republican observes that "kissing may be dangerous, but there are a lot of brave people in the world."

Having so often proven its ability at building paper railroads, why shouldn't the steamed imitator devote its attention to the construction of a paper mill?

Editor Bagley of the Thief River Press can't resist the temptation to take a swipe at the county-seat:

"An employee in the Great Northern offices at Seattle choked to death last week. He must have been trying to swallow the story that Red Lake Falls is to be a railroad center."

Fred Millard, of the Lake Shetek Courier, is getting to be a misanthropist on the woman question. Here is "the unkindest cut of all:"

"Faldo advertises a 'mum' social. The gentlemen shouldn't leave the ladies out of their parties. It would be much more pleasant to allow them admission."

If President Roosevelt gets through St. Paul and Minneapolis safely he is well prepared for the contingency mentioned by Ralph Wheelock:

"Really the only danger which threatens President Roosevelt on his Western trip is that of being torn limb from limb when Seattle and Tacoma are reached."

An exchange is responsible for this bit of philosophy:

"Be not hasty to judge a brother. It may be that before he fell he withstood enough temptation to have ruined a dozen like you. God alone is able to judge of all the circumstances. If it happens to be a sister, be as hasty as you please, of course. Just condemn her and let it go at that; at least that seems to be the universal rule."

William H. Crane, the actor, gives to the public a revised version of the doxology:

Praise John from whom oil blessings flow,
Praise him oil creatures here below;
Praise him above ye heavenly host,
Praise William, too, but John the most!

A Mahoning county (O.) farmer is reported in the newspapers to have lost a valuable cow in a peculiar way. While rummaging in the kitchen she found and swallowed an old umbrella and a cake of yeast. The yeast fermented and raised the umbrella, and the poor beast died in great agony.

Former Senator John A. Johnson evidently doesn't hold a warm place in his heart for the present legislature. He thinks it will be remembered for its sins of omission rather than for its acts of commission, and adds:

"The closer you watch the reports the more you become convinced that Sam Lord was right in wanting the legislative shutters put up a month ago."

According to the Adrian Democrat, a Missouri teacher is said to have experienced the following:

After explaining the meaning of the word "dogma" to her pupils, she wrote it on the blackboard, and asked the pupils to compose sentences containing the word. One little girl came in too late for the definition, but concluded to take part in the exercises, nevertheless. Her sentence was as follows: "Our dogma has three puppies."

The interstate commerce law seems to be a convenience for the railroad. When the people's rights are affected the law is contemptuously ignored, but when the railroads need the protection of the government it suddenly blossoms into full force and effect. Along this line the Commoner says:

"The railroads that have found that the Elkins law compels them to cut off all concessions to the public also have discovered that they can increase their rates."

Under the caption of "Wise, Likewise and Otherwise," the Albert Lea Standard prints these springtime observations:

Robins in pairs making love.
Busy days for the land agents.
Ah, sunshine, worth all the waiting.
Speaking of cleaning up—it's mostly talk.
Another woman's club—but who's afraid?
Free concerts every morning by the joyful birds.
Splendid world? Sure, didn't we told you so?
You're a warm one, old Sol. Welcome and hurrah.

New York dispatches of recent date say:

"If the Wabash company can sustain its position the death knell of strikes on interstate railroads has been sounded."

Louis F. Post, editor of The Public, makes a striking comment on this statement when he says:

"But those who congratulate themselves upon this method of ending railroad strikes are curiously oblivious to the fact that great bodies of workingmen who strike don't do so for the fun of the thing. They do it because they have grievances. Even a child in intellect and experience ought to know what happens when opportunities for redress are arbitrarily denied to large numbers of people. A very serious question occurs, therefore. When the death knell of railroad strikes is sounded by arbitrary suppression under government by injunction, then what?"

Down at Fairmont the young ladies appear to be absent-minded, judging from a recent occurrence related by the Sentinel:

"A ridiculous story is being told and retold about one of our best-natured young men, who works in a general store. It is claimed that last week one of the most attractive girls in town, who assists with the work in a respectable family, snatched up a clean pillow slip and hurried to the store for some oatmeal, fearing a paper sack would get wet in the rain and break open.

"She skipped up to this favorite clerk among young ladies and with a winning smile handed him the supposed clean pillow slip and told him of her errand and to be quick. The first scoop full went plump through the thing to the floor. When the clerk raised it up in astonishment to see what was the matter, he discovered two outlets—sort of neatly notched about the bottom like paper on the pantry shelves, and the girl lit out like a startled fawn, without saying a word. The clerk laid away the pillow slip of mistaken identity, but the young woman has not called for it or even been in the store since."

The woman in this story evidently had her husband well trained in the seriousness of married life:

The other day a man and woman called on a house agent about taking a house. The woman did all the talking and turned to the man for confirmation or corroboration. He always agreed with her and did it very meekly.

"Well," said the woman, "we're willing to take the house at £30 a year. Ain't we, John?"

John replied, "Yes."

"And we'll pay the rent promptly, too. Won't we, John?"

"Yes."

"And we'll take good care of the house. Won't we, John?"

"Yes."

"And we don't mind taking it for three years. Do we, John?"

"No."

"By the bye," the agent inquired, "of course you are man and wife?"

"Man and wife!" exclaimed the woman sharply. "Indeed we are not! Are we, John?"

"... my dear."

"...nal?" said the agent. "Not man and wife?"

"Not exactly," she retorted. "I'd have you know in this instance we are wife and man. That's so, isn't it, John?"

And John meekly agreed.
